Mr. McLEAN (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]. I therefore withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SWANSON (when Mr. MARTIN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. MARTIN], as previously stated, is detained from the Senate on account of illness. He is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay" and the two Senators with whom he is paired would vote "yea."

Mr. KNOX (when Mr. PENROSE's name was called). As already announced by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], my colleague [Mr. PENROSE] is paired with the junior Senator from New York and also with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND]. My colleague has requested me to state that if he were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. McKELLAR (when Mr. SHIELDS's name was called). The senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] is unavoidably detained on business and is paired with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL].

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Georgia was called). The senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] wired me and asked that a pair be arranged for him on this question, which has been done. He also asked me to announce that if he were present he would vote against the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. HARRIS. My colleague [Mr. SMITH of Georgia] is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. My colleague is detained by illness.

Mr. NEWBERRY (when Mr. TOWNSEND's name was called). My colleague [Mr. TOWNSEND] is detained at home by illness in his family. He is paired as previously announced. He desired me to state that if present he would vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. Understanding, however, that if he were present he would vote just as I am about to do, I am at liberty to disregard the pair for the nonce. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KIRBY. I announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], who would have voted for the joint resolution if present. He is paired and his pair has been announced.

Mr. McLEAN. I find that I can transfer the pair which I heretofore announced to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], which I do and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], for whom a pair has been arranged, is unavoidably detained outside the Capitol and unable to be here. I wish to announce that if present he would vote against the passage of the joint resolution.

The roll call resulted—yeas 56, nays 25, as follows:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas are 56 and the nays are 25. A quorum being present and the joint resolution having received the affirmative vote of more than two-thirds of the Senators present and voting is declared to have passed the Senate in accordance with the Constitution of the United States. [Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

TREATY OF PEACE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being Senate resolution 12, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution No. 12, submitted by Mr. JOHNSON of California May 20, as follows:

Whereas the peace treaty has been completed and has been delivered to the representatives of Germany; and

Whereas a synopsis only of the treaty has been given publicity in the United States, and our people are entitled to know its full contents, and to what, if any, engagements they may have been committed; and

Whereas it is reported in the press that the entire treaty has been cabled to the State Department and is now in the possession of the State Department: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, requested forthwith to transmit to the Senate the full text of the treaty of peace completed at the Paris conference and delivered to the representatives of Germany.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from California whether he will be willing to have his resolution temporarily laid aside in order that a little routine business may be transacted?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. My intention was not to press the resolution this evening, but to ask to have it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I thought that was the Senator's intention.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Yes; it was.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the resolution can temporarily be laid aside we can transact some minor business.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, the suggestion is made by the Senator from Nebraska that the resolution be temporarily laid aside in order that some business which he has in hand may be transacted. As I understand the rule, in order that the resolution shall not be displaced it is necessary to secure unanimous consent to have that done. I am very agreeable to the request. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be laid aside temporarily to be taken up to-morrow as the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside to be taken up to-morrow at 2 o'clock. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I would not want to exclude taking it up before 2 o'clock if other business before then is disposed of.

Mr. SWANSON. That would have to be done by motion. It comes up as the unfinished business at 2 o'clock. If it is taken up before 2 o'clock, it must be taken up on motion.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; but if we agree to the unanimous consent that it can not come up until 2 o'clock, it could not be taken up prior to that time, even by motion.

Mr. SWANSON. It would come up at 2 o'clock at any rate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair suggests that anything in the nature of morning business can be done by unanimous consent without laying aside the unfinished business.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Then it is not necessary to ask unanimous consent.

Mr. LODGE. I suggest that the Senator ask unanimous consent.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think if the Senator simply makes the request to lay the unfinished business aside temporarily, to hold its place, it will retain its place and then come up automatically.

Mr. LODGE. Then it can be taken up at any time.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Then it may be taken up after the conclusion of morning business to-morrow or at 2 o'clock, if the morning business continues that long. Then it comes up automatically. Is that understood?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Undoubtedly.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask the Senator to withhold that motion for a moment.

Mr. LODGE. Very well; I withhold the motion.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask to have read the resolution which I send to the desk, and that it lie over under the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the resolution submitted by the Senator from Nebraska.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 64), as follows:

Whereas the Senator from Idaho, Mr. BORAH, has stated in the Senate that certain interests in the city of New York have secured copies of the peace treaty with Germany, while the American people have been unable to secure one; and

Whereas the Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. LODGE, has stated in the Senate that he knows of four such copies of said treaty of peace with Germany now in New York, and that the only place where it is not allowed to come is the United States Senate; and

Whereas the Senator from Idaho, Mr. BORAH, has stated that the interests now having possession of said copies of said treaty are peculiarly interested in the treaty: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be, and it hereby is, authorized and directed to investigate the matter with the view to ascertaining the facts, and particularly to ascertain and report to the Senate the names of the persons, corporations, or interests which have secured copies of said treaty, and from whom they were secured, and by what methods; and also to ascertain and report to the Senate in what manner and to what extent said interests are "particularly" interested in said treaty. For these purposes the Committee on Foreign Relations, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and it is, authorized to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with the same, the expenses thereof, including the cost of travel, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to remind the Senator that the request of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] has not been disposed of.

Mr. KING. I understood that it had been disposed of.

Mr. LODGE. I thought the request of the Senator from California had been agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not so understand.

Mr. LODGE. I understood there was no objection.

SEVERAL SENATORS. There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I ask that my request may be disposed of, that the resolution which is the unfinished business, may be temporarily laid aside, to be taken up to-morrow at the conclusion of the morning business, or automatically, at any rate, at 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate hears the request of the Senator from California. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, what disposition was made of the resolution offered by the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LODGE. As I understand, the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska goes, under the rule, to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate under the rule.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does the Senator from Massachusetts think it should first go to the Committee on Foreign Relations or to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate?

Mr. LODGE. I presume it goes to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. We have discussed that many times.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask that the resolution lie over until to-morrow, if that is agreeable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over under the rule and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts presented petitions of sundry citizens of Worcester, Mass., praying for the ratification of the proposed league of nations treaty, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. McLEAN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Branford, Conn., praying for the ratification of the proposed league of nations treaty, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of Local Branch Connecticut State Grange Patrons of Husbandry, of Suffield, Conn., and a petition of sundry citizens of Guilford, Conn., praying for the repeal of the so-called daylight-saving law, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of sundry employees of the Oakville Co., of Waterbury, Conn., remonstrating against the repeal of the so-called daylight-saving law, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented memorials of the congregations of the Congregational Church of Wauregan, the Baptist Church of Plantsville, the Methodist Episcopal Church of South Manchester, the Methodist Episcopal Church of Stratford, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South Farms, Middletown, and the Mary Taylor Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church of Milford; of the North Methodist Episcopal Church Society of Manchester, of the Christian Endeavor Society of the First Congregational Church of Norwich, and of sundry citizens of Ridgefield, all in the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against the repeal of war-time prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HARDING presented petitions of Local Lodge No. 158, S. N. P. J., of Nottingham; of Local Lodge No. 153, S. N. P. J., of Youngstown; of Local Lodge No. 5, S. N. P. J., of Cleveland; of Local Lodge No. 20, S. S. P. Z., of Cleveland; of Local Lodge No. 79, H. Z. J., of Cleveland; of the Jugo-Slav Republican Alliance, No. 8, of Cleveland; of the Jugo-Slav Republican Alliance, No. 9, of Cleveland; of the Jugo-Slav Republican Alliance, No. 21, of Cleveland; of the St. Nikola Society, No. 22, N. C. S., of Cleveland; of Local Lodge No. 275, S. N. P. J., of Maynard; of Local Lodge No. 358, S. N. P. J., of Power Point; of the Slovenian Benefit Society, of Barberton; of Local Lodge No. 279, S. N. P. J., of Ramsey; of Local Lodge No. 17, S. N. P. J., of Lorain; of Local Lodge No. 62, S. S. P. Z., of Lorain; of Local Lodge No. 104, S. N. P. J., of Lorain; of the South Slavic Catholic Union of East Palestine; of the St. Barbara Society of East Palestine; of the Slovenian Progressive Benefit Society of East Palestine; of the Slovenian National Benefit Society, No. 55, of East Palestine; of Local Lodge No. 355, S. N. P. J., of Fairport Harbor; and of sundry citizens of Bridgeport, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the independence of the Jugo-Slavs and for justice and fair dealing in connection with peace deliberations, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. KELLOGG, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 120) to repeal chapter 154 of the act of the second session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, being the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to authorize the President in time of war to supervise or take possession and assume control of any telegraph, telephone, marine cable, or radio system or systems, or any part thereof, and to operate the same in such manner as may be needful or desirable for the duration of the war, and to provide just compensation therefor," approved July 16, 1918, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 4) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 641) to amend section 10 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes," approved March 21, 1918, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 5) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A bill (S. 1373) to amend the Articles of War; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HALE:

A bill (S. 1374) for the relief of Stephen A. Winchell; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SHERMAN:

A bill (S. 1375) for the relief of Catherine Grace; to the Committee on Claims.

REGISTERS AND RECEIVERS OF LAND OFFICES.

Mr. HENDERSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1339) to amend sections 2237 and 2240 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS.

Mr. WILLIAMS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 63), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate the cost of reporting hearings held on Costa Rican matters by the Committee on Foreign Relations at the last session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, upon voucher to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, said payment to be at the rate of $1 per printed page, and not to exceed the sum of $33.

COMMITTEE ON MANUFACTURES.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 65), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Manufactures, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-sixth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. KELLOGG submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 66), which was read and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to order and have printed 5,000 copies of the revised covenant for a league of nations, as it is now embodied, together with the original draft, in Senate Document No. 7, presented by Mr. PITTMAN under date of May 20, 1919.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

DEVELOPMENT OF COMMERCE WITH PANAMA.

The following treaty was ratified by the Senate and the injunction of secrecy was removed therefrom June 4, 1919:

CONVENTION BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND PANAMA, SIGNED FEBRUARY 8, 1919, FOR THE DEVELOPMENT OF COMMERCE BETWEEN THE TWO COUNTRIES AND TO INCREASE THE EXCHANGE OF COMMODITIES BY FACILITATING THE WORK OF TRAVELING SALESMEN.

The Senate:

I transmit herewith, to receive the advice and consent of the Senate to its ratification, a convention between the United States and Panama, signed February 8, 1919, for the development of commerce between them and to increase the exchange of commodities by facilitating the work of traveling salesmen.

Respectfully submitted.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, March 1, 1919.

The PRESIDENT:

The undersigned, the Acting Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President, with a view to its transmission to the Senate, if his judgment approve thereof, to receive the advice and consent of the Senate to its ratification, a convention signed February 8, 1919, between the United States and Panama, for the development of commerce between them and to increase the exchange of commodities by facilitating the work of traveling salesmen.

Respectfully submitted.

FRANK L. POLK.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 27, 1919.

The United States of America and the Republic of Panama being desirous to foster the development of commerce between them and to increase the exchange of commodities by facilitating the work of traveling salesmen have agreed to conclude a convention for that purpose and have to that end appointed as their plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America, Frank L. Polk, Acting Secretary of State of the United States of America, and

The President of the Republic of Panama, Señor José Edgardo Lefèvre, chargé d'affaires of the Republic of Panama near the Government of the United States of America,

Who, having communicated to each other their full powers, which were found to be in due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I.

Manufacturers, merchants, and traders domiciled within the jurisdiction of one of the high contracting parties may operate as commercial travelers either personally or by means of agents or employees within the jurisdiction of the other high contracting party on obtaining from the latter, upon payment of a single fee, a license which shall be valid throughout its entire territorial jurisdiction.

In case either of the high contracting parties shall be engaged in war, it reserves to itself the right to prevent from operating within its jurisdiction under the provisions of this treaty, or otherwise, enemy nationals or other aliens whose presence it may consider prejudicial to public order and national safety.

ARTICLE II.

In order to secure the license above mentioned the applicant must obtain from the country of domicile of the manufacturers, merchants, and traders represented a certificate attesting his character as a commercial traveler. This certificate, which shall be issued by the authority to be designated in each country for the purpose, shall be viséed by the consul of the country in which the applicant proposes to operate, and the authorities of the latter shall, upon the presentation of such certificate, issue to the applicant the national license as provided in Article I.

ARTICLE III.

A commercial traveler may sell his samples without obtaining a special license as an importer.

ARTICLE IV.

Samples without commercial value shall be admitted to entry free of duty.

Samples marked, stamped, or defaced in such manner that they can not be put to other uses shall be considered as objects without commercial value.

ARTICLE V.

Samples having commercial value shall be provisionally admitted upon giving bond for the payment of lawful duties if they shall not have been withdrawn from the country within a period of six months.

Duties shall be paid on such portion of the samples as shall not have been so withdrawn.

ARTICLE VI.

All customs formalities shall be simplified as much as possible with a view to avoid delay in the dispatch of samples.

ARTICLE VII.

Peddlers and other salesmen who vend directly to the consumer, even though they have not an established place of business in the country in which they operate, shall not be considered as commercial travelers, but shall be subject to the license fees levied on business of the kind which they carry on.

ARTICLE VIII.

No license shall be required of:

(a) Persons traveling only to study trade and its needs, even though they initiate commercial relations, provided they do not make sales of merchandise.

(b) Persons operating through local agents which pay the license fee or other imposts to which their business is subject.

(c) Travelers who are exclusively buyers.

ARTICLE IX.

Any concessions affecting any of the provisions of the present treaty that may hereafter be granted by either high contracting party, either by law or by treaty or convention, shall immediately be extended to the other party.

ARTICLE X.

This convention shall be ratified; and the ratifications shall be exchanged at Washington or Panama within two years, or sooner if possible.

The present convention shall remain in force until the end of six months after either of the high contracting parties shall have given notice to the other of its intention to terminate the same, each of them reserving to itself the right of giving such notice to the other at any time. And it is hereby agreed between the parties that, on the expiration of six months after such notice shall have been received by either of them from the other party as above mentioned, this convention shall altogether cease and terminate.

In testimony whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed these articles and have thereunder affixed their seals.

Done in duplicate, at Washington, this 8th day of February, 1919.

[SEAL.] FRANK L. POLK.
[SEAL.] J. E. LEFÈVRE.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, June 5, 1919, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate June 4 (legislative day of June 3), 1919.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

D. E. Simmons to be United States attorney, southern district of Texas.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 4, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite Spirit, never far from any of us, we call upon Thee out of the deeps of the soul for courage, strength, faith, and grace to sustain us through the obligations of this day, that we may be the better prepared for whatever Thou dost lay upon us to-morrow.

Now is the day of salvation. If we live up to the high-water mark of Christian manhood to-day, now, in this world, we need have no fears for the morrow nor for the world that is to come.

To live, to act, to progress is the psalm of life in this world and the world to come.

Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof. Protect, guide, and strengthen us for the present moment, and all praise and gratitude shall be Thine. In the Great Exemplar's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. SEARS rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Florida rise?

Mr. SEARS. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will wait a moment. Any Members who desire to take the oath of office will present themselves.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS.

Mr. GLYNN, Mr. HUDDLESTON, and Mr. LEE of Georgia appeared before the Speaker's desk and took the oath of office.

PROPOSED SOLDIERS' HOME AT ST. CLOUD, FLA.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I introduced a bill (H. R. 3468) to establish an old soldiers' home at St. Cloud, Fla. I am going to send to the Speaker's desk some petitions that I received in support of that bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not yet obtained consent.

Mr. SEARS. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, what is the subject?

Mr. SEARS. An old soldiers' home.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, we expect to take up appropriation bills in a very short time, and the gentleman will have an opportunity to address the House, I am sure, in connection with the consideration of one of those bills.

Mr. SEARS. I simply want to ask the Speaker to refer these petitions to the Committee on Appropriations. It will not take over a minute. I can not do that in the other time.

Mr. MONDELL. The rule in regard to matters of that kind is that they shall be placed in the basket.

Mr. SEARS. If the gentleman objects, of course I can not help it; I do not care to take up the time of the House. These petitions are signed by old soldiers. I have presented them as the son of a Confederate soldier. Does the gentleman object?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming objects.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman can take it up on one of the appropriation bills.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 79. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to loan to the city of Dawson, Ga., tents and cots for use of Confederate veterans in their State convention, June 17 and 18, 1919.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House dispense with business in order under paragraph 4, Rule XXIV, as to Calendar Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the House dispense with the business of Calendar Wednesday. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Reserving the right to object—which I do not intend to do, but probably shall hereafter, unless it is a matter of great importance—I hate to see Calendar Wednesday dispensed with at the beginning of a Congress for fear of the precedent. I would like the gentleman from Wyoming to tell us the situation as to these appropriation bills which it is necessary to have enacted and passed before July 1. What appropriation bills are there that went over from the last session that must be considered and passed before July 1?

Mr. MONDELL. There are four of the larger supply bills—the District of Columbia bill, the sundry civil bill, and the Army and Navy bills—and in addition to those is the railroad appropriation bill. It is highly important, in my opinion, that this program of legislation or appropriation which came to us as a heritage from the last Congress be disposed of in the House, if possible, by the 15th or, at the furthest, the 16th of this month.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman realizes that that can not be done unless the Members of the House, and particularly those upon our side of the Chamber, refrain from a great deal of what, in my judgment, I consider unnecessary debate. If we are to pass these bills by that time, I hope the gentleman, the leader of the majority, will try to use his influence upon the Members upon this side of the House not to engage in unnecessary delay by debate and motions and things of that kind.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman will do that.

Mr. GARRETT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I think it is important that we should have a ruling. I submit a parliamentary inquiry or I will make the point of order that the unfinished business should be disposed of, and that the unfinished business is a vote upon the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. That has been decided. It was decided last by the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. Speaker CLARK, holding that that should go over until Thursday instead of Wednesday. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the gentleman from Wyoming that the business in order on Calendar Wednesday be dispensed with?

There was no objection.

INVESTIGATION OF THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kansas rise?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I want to make an announcement to the membership of the House.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman is recognized for one minute.

There was no objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Immediately following the action of the House on the Agricultural appropriation bill I shall call up or submit a resolution from the Committee on Rules, House resolution 78, introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM], providing for a general investigation of the War Department.

The SPEAKER. The business before the House is the Agricultural appropriation bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the Agricultural appropriation bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Agricultural appropriation bill is before the House, and the previous question has been ordered. The question arises as to the amendments on that bill. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment to that bill? If not, the Chair will put the amendments en gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question being taken, the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I have a motion to recommit the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. BLACK. I am not.

The SPEAKER. Is there any gentleman who is opposed to the bill who desires to offer a motion to recommit?

Mr. ANDERSON. I desire to offer a motion to recommit, and am a member of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. BLACK. I am not a member of the Committee on Agriculture, and, of course, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota, who is a member of that committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will first recognize a member of the committee on the minority side. If no such gentleman desires to offer a motion, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON], who offers the following motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ANDERSON moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Agriculture with instructions to report the same back forthwith with an amendment striking out, on page 71, line 4, the figures "$1,500,000," and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "$2,500,000."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. WINGO. I ask unanimous consent that the paragraph of the bill to which this motion applies be reported, so that we may know what it is about.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the paragraph referred to be reported. If there be no objection, it will be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

For cooperative agricultural extension work, to be allotted, paid, and expended in the same manner, upon the same terms and conditions, and under the same supervision as the additional appropriations made by the act of May 8, 1914 (38 Stat. L., 372), entitled "An act to provide for cooperative agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and of acts supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture," $1,500,000; and all sums appropriated by this act for use for demonstration or extension work within any State shall be used and expended in accordance with plans mutually agreed upon by the Secretary of Agriculture and the proper officials of the college in such State which receives the benefits of said act of May 8, 1914.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; on a division (demanded by Mr. WINGO) there were—ayes 33, noes 100.

Accordingly the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. LEVER. Upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 346, nays 1, answered "present" 2, not voting 80, as follows:

Mr. TEMPLE with Mr. SHERWOOD.

Mr. THOMPSON of Ohio with Mr. SULLIVAN.

Mr. TILSON with Mr. SUMNERS of Texas.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to vote "aye."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name should have been called?

Mr. LUCE. I was not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not be recorded.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I vote "aye."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall and listening when his name should have been called?

Mr. HAMILTON. I was just at the door of the cloakroom and had a man stationed to notify me when my name was reached, but the Clerk got by.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not qualify.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Speaker, did the bells ring twice?

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not inform the gentleman.

Mr. BAER. I was called from the room by a constituent, but if I had been present I would have voted "aye."

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I vote "aye."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall and listening when his name should have been called?

Mr. KEARNS. I was in the Hall, but I did not hear my name called.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to say that the rule does not contemplate that a Member can vote simply because he did not hear his name called. It is on the theory that the gentleman's name was not called at all, and therefore the only way that a Member can properly qualify is that he was present and listening, did not hear his name called, and therefore is allowed to vote on the theory that his name was not called. Unless gentlemen can state that they were present and listening when their names should have been called, they do not qualify.

Mr. KEARNS. I could not have heard my name if it had been called, there was so much confusion in the room. I was present.

The SPEAKER. Unless the gentleman will state that he was present and listening to hear his name called, the gentleman can not qualify.

Mr. KEARNS. I think I was; I was doing nothing but watching the roll call, and did not hear my name called. There was much confusion in the Hall.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think the gentleman has qualified.

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. MANN, and I desire to be recorded "present."

The name of Mr. BLACKMON was called, and he answered "Present," as above recorded.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I just came in; I was at the far end of the Hall, but before I got down here I heard other names called right after mine.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name should have been called?

Mr. SABATH. Yes; but I did not hear it.

The Clerk called Mr. SABATH's name, and he answered "Aye," as above recorded.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I understood the Chair to state that I could only vote "present." I wish to vote "present."

The SPEAKER. The rule does not allow the gentleman to vote "present."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. HAUGEN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON WAR EXPENDITURES.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

House resolution 78.

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, directed to appoint from the membership of this House a select committee of 15 members, for the Sixty-sixth Congress, and which said committee is hereby authorized to fully investigate all contracts and expenditudes made by the War Department, or under its directions, during the present war; and, in addition to the powers herein conferred, shall have the same powers and authority as are now conferred by the rules of this House upon the standing Committee on Expenditures in the War Department; said committee is hereby authorized to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths and affirmations, to take testimony, to sit during the sessions of the House and during any recess which may occur during its sessions, and may meet at such places as said committee deems advisable. Said committee is also hereby authorized and empowered to appoint such subcommittees as it may deem advisable, and such subcommittees, when so appointed, are hereby authorized to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths and take testimony, and to meet at such times and places as said committee shall from time to time direct.

Resolved further, That said select committee shall report to the House, in one or more reports, as it may deem advisable, the result of its investigations, with such recommendations as it may care to make.

Resolved further, That the Speaker of the House is hereby authorized to issue subpœnas to witnesses, upon the request of said committee or any subcommittee thereof, during any recess of Congress during the sessions.

Resolved further, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be directed to serve all subpœnas and other process put into his hands by said committee or any subcommittee thereof.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to correct the spelling of the word "expenditures," in line 6.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time for debate on the resolution be limited to 40 minutes on a side; that 40 minutes be controlled by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] and 40 minutes by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the time for debate on the resolution be limited to 40 minutes on a side; that the gentleman from Kansas control 40 minutes and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] 40 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the resolution as to its purpose and scope speaks for itself. The Committee on Expenditures in the War Department found itself confronted with a very great work, and believing the work should be thoroughly done did not feel like undertaking it with the standing Committee on Expenditures in the War Department. So it is proposed that a special committee of 15 members provided for in this resolution shall undertake this great work.

During the period that the United States has been engaged in war the War Department has expended to May 1, 1919, $16,300,000,000.

Expenditures for aircraft, $948,000,000.

Expenditures for ordnance, $4,323,000,000.

Expenditures for camps, cantonments, and manufacturing establishment, $974,000,000.

Res., $105,000,000.

Average expenditures of the War Department for three years prior to the beginning of the war:

Fiscal year 1914	$123,500,000

The people of the United States are entitled to know just how that money was expended, and in order to advise the country as to the manner in which it was expended it will be necessary for a committee of this House to make such an investigation as is contemplated in this resolution.

The Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, through their chairman [Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois], stated to the Committee on Rules this morning that in making a preliminary survey of the work to be done it was discovered that it would probably be necessary to appoint a number of subcommittees, probably five in all, one to undertake the investigation of the aircraft production, another of ordnance, another of the camps and cantonments, another of the Quartermaster Department, and so forth. The resolution provides that these subcommittees may report at any time any conclusion that they have reached.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield for a question.

Mr. CALDWELL. Does not the gentleman feel that the investigation of aircraft expenditures by Mr. Justice Hughes has been taken by the American people as having been very thorough and a complete vindication?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. There has been a thorough investigation made of that, but it comes to the knowledge of Members of the House and to the country that since that investigation was made there have been activities by the Aircraft Division and large sums of money spent.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And, as a matter of fact, has not more been expended since that investigation than was expended up to that time?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I was about to follow what I had already said with that statement. It is also true, I will say in further answer to the gentleman from New York, that the Aircraft Division of the War Department is probably now expending large sums of money for aviation fields. The country would like to know the necessity for that expenditure of money, in view of the fact that we are raising money from the people in every way that we can devise.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. For a question.

Mr. CALDWELL. Does not the gentleman know that before any expenditure was made for aviation fields the Secretary of War came before the Committee on Military Affairs and laid all the cards on the table and explained what he was going to do and the prices he was going to pay for them, and did he not get an authorization of this Congress to do it?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The question as to whether or not the money is being wisely expended for aviation fields at this time is a matter that may well be inquired into by a committee of this House.

Mr. MCARTHUR rose.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further, and I shall not bother him any more?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MCARTHUR. Is it not true that in the report of Mr. Justice Hughes he specifically stated that he made no investigation of the spruce production of the Northwest and admitted that it ought to be investigated?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. His report indicated it was a somewhat limited investigation. Indeed the appointment of Mr. Justice Hughes carried a limitation upon his activities.

Mr. LITTLE. And I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if there is any objection from the Committee on Military Affairs to an examination of these expenditures?

Mr. CALDWELL. Oh, no; and I do not want the gentleman to misunderstand my question. I propose to vote for this resolution, not because I believe they are going to find anything but because I am sure they will not.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I have not yielded for this colloquy. The country expects a thorough investigation of all the expenditures. It expects the committee making this investigation to be thorough and impartial. It is not intended, it could not be the intention of this House, that any innocent person shall be punished. It is not intended that anybody should be embarrassed who has not placed himself in a position to be embarrassed, but it should not be the intention of anyone that a guilty person should go unpunished or unexposed. If anyone has misspent or unwisely expended public money through the activities of the War Department, the country should know who that person is and the extent of the expenditures.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, there is certainly no objection to the purpose of this resolution on the part of the minority of this House. If there has been extravagance, the minority party wishes that extravagance exposed. If there has been rascality, no one is more earnestly in favor of exposing the rascal than the Democratic minority on this floor. So far as the purpose of the resolution is concerned there is no controversy, but there is a division of opinion upon this point. The introducer of this resolution stated before the Committee on Rules this morning that the desire was to have a nonpartisan investigation, and in the next breath we were informed that the purpose of the majority is to put 10 Republican Members on this investigating committee and 5 Democratic Members. In all fairness I submit that the preponderance is too great. The committee should be divided at least in the proportion of 9 and 6. Think what sort of an arrangement you will have. This committee will be divided into subcommittees of three, of course, made up of two Democrats and one Republican—no; of two Republicans and one Democrat. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is hard to get over the habit, is it not?

Mr. POU. I wish it were as I first stated [laughter], and if the people of this country had not been deceived it would have been that way. Now, this subcommittee goes to Europe. You have two Republicans and one Democrat. As man to man, is that fair? Is that a nonpartisan committee? Men who have served on these investigating committees have some idea of how arduous their duties are. It is impossible for one man to properly represent the side of the minority, if there is such a side. For my part, I can not understand why you gentlemen want to divide this committee in the proportion of 10 to 5 if you really intend to have a nonpartisan investigation. If you intend to have a partisan investigation, if you intend to put things over as you want to put them over, with no proper regard for the rights of the minority, then take your 10 and give us 5; but if you mean what you say, that this investigation is to be fair, is to be judicial, is to be nonpartisan, in the language of the gentleman who introduced the resolution, you will be willing to divide in the proportion of 9 and 6.

I do not know, but I venture the assertion that never in the history of Congress will you find one single great investigating committee where the preponderance was 2 to 1 in favor of the majority. You have got your majority; you can do whatever you wish. In the name of fair play, why is it you are not willing to give the minority one more vote on this great committee, which is to do this great work and which is to conduct, according to you, a nonpartisan investigation? Now, Mr. Speaker, that is about all I have to say. I have an amendment which I would like to introduce and have pending, and which I send to the Clerk's desk to have read. I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered as pending, to be voted on at the proper time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object to that request for unanimous consent. I do not object that it shall be read for information and be pending, but I object to unanimous consent that it be voted upon.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment——

The SPEAKER. The time has not come for the offering of an amendment.

Mr. POU. Then I ask to have it read for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be read for the information of the House.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. POU: In line 4, after the word "Congress," insert the words "of whom not less than six shall be taken from the minority party."

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used six minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to note that there will be no opposition to the creation of this committee as expressed by the speaker who has just left the floor and has been expressed by different persons unofficially when the matter was talked about. The country not only expects but demands the facts concerning the expenditures of the War Department. It is not a new thing. It follows the procedure after at least two great wars in which our country was engaged.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FESS. Not now. The country demands it and for that reason no one ought to resist it. If in this riot of expenditure induced by the war there has been extravagance and if the extravagance was such that could not be avoided, the country will properly excuse it. If it could have been avoided, there is no reason why the country should not know it. Men have said, "What do you expect to do with these facts; we all expected mistakes to to be made, and to get this information after the war is over would be conceding that the water is over the wheel and nothing to be gained by it." I have heard that from some quarters. But there is something to be gained by it in the suggestion that mistakes made unnecessarily should be avoided if under the exigencies of the future we shall be called upon to do anything like what we have done. But that is not the great thing in my mind. It is not simply to show the facts of the great war in expenditures and to give the information to the public which it has the right to possess, but it is to look into present expenditures because, unless the facts are brought to the public, there will continue future expenses that the public ought not to suffer. That is the main reason for this investigation, and I think that the people in responsible positions would be glad to have the facts brought out with a view of immediate relief.

The Federal Reserve Board in the May report makes the astonishing statement that the monthly expenditure of the Government is $1,400,000,000. This is seven months after the war is over, and if that rate continues to the end of the year it will use up all the available funds either from the borrowing or the taxing source and leave the Nation by the 1st of January with a deficit of over $2,000,000,000 and a half of a year yet to be accounted for. The people have the right to know what these expenditures are, and where there is unnecessary continuance it should be pried away from the Government if we have got to use, figuratively speaking, a 40-foot pole to do it. Everyone knows——

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. FESS (continuing). That there is now existing a determination and elaborate effort to maintain agencies that were purely war agencies on the basis that those war agencies have become peace agencies and the country will suffer if we do not continue them. What we want—I can not yield to the gentleman now—are the facts, not only to show what was done unnecessarily—and if nothing unnecessarily was done nobody is harmed—but the facts as a groundwork for needed relief legislation in the immediate future.

Now, as to the make-up of the committee, I can see how my friend POU, the gentleman from North Carolina, might say he would prefer 9 to 6 instead of 10 to 5. The reason it was put at 10 to 5 is that this committee will almost certainly divide itself into five subcommittees, and the five subcommittees could not be represented on a basis of 9 to 6 without putting some one on two subcommittees, and the easy way to effect it would be to make your five subcommittees, 3 for each subcommittee. It would be unwise to make it unduly large, say 25 instead of 15, for the reason that this committee must sit constantly. The work is simply tremendous; you can not now see the limit of the range, and to call 25 men out of this body to sit permanently, to be almost permanently absent from the session while the investigations are going on, would take more of the membership from the House than it is wise to do. It seems to me that if 9 to 6 would be satisfactory to friend POU, the gentleman from North Carolina, that 10 to 5 would not be unsatisfactory to him. What he said about the ability of one person to sit as a permanent representative, that it would physically fatigue him, probably is true, but 9 to 6 will not remedy that. You will increase the fatigue. I believe that the majority party, which is responsible for the investigation, should be given the power to make it effective.

My friend who just left the floor conceded that and expressed the wish that it were two Democrats to one Republican instead of two Republicans to one Democrat. If that was an honest expression, as it was, then his objection can not be serious, I am sure.

Mr. POU. If my friend will permit, I merely meant that if it had to be two to one, that it should be two Democrats and one Republican.

Mr. FESS. And I will be just as frank with my friend and say that since it can not be Democratic it must be Republican.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. REAVIS. I recall the gentleman from North Carolina saying that if the people had not been deceived in the late election it would have been two Democrats.

Mr. FESS. I do not want to comment on that statement. It was an amusing one to me at the time, especially when viewed in the light of the campaign slogan, "He kept us out of war." But, in spite of what some Members may insist, this investigation is designed to get the facts and to get them primarily for the benefit of the public rather than the benefit of any political party. If it were true that it was for the benefit of some political party, then I would confess my doubts of the wisdom of the proposed legislation. But it is for the benefit of future legislation to get at the unnecessary expenditures that will continue unless we expose the extravagance as it has existed. And I am sure the resolution will pass.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield nine minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL].

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the country is to be congratulated that upon this proposition there is absolutely no division of sentiment in the Rules Committee or upon the floor of this House. I am sure that the membership of this House, at least, understands thoroughly the purpose of this resolution and of this investigation. Now, of course, our Republican friends will not publicly make the admission that they are going into this investigation for the purpose of digging up campaign material for the presidential election next year. Of course, confidentially, we here all know that that is their purpose. Now, so far as the Democratic members of this Rules Committee are concerned, and so far as the Democratic side of the House in this Congress is concerned, so far as the War Department is concerned, we welcome this investigation. [Applause on the Democratic side.] My hope and my prayer is that this great Republic of ours will never be drawn into another war. But, gentlemen on that side of the House, if we are, when you have completed this investigation and it becomes a part of the files and of the records of this Government, and if you happen to be in power when the next war comes, you can go back to this record and see how a real and the greatest war in all history was successfully conducted by a Democratic administration. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, gentlemen, the Democratic Party on the floor of this House and the War Department welcome this investigation, and we believe that when you have finished it you will find yourselves exactly in the same attitude as you did when you spent three or four months investigating other members of the administration in the so-called leak investigation, when every Republican member of that investigating committee had to sign a report exonerating in full every branch of the Democratic administration. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Ah, this is a wonderful procedure, but we welcome you to go to it. Investigate what? Investigate the proceedings of an administration that has turned the tide of battle, that has crushed Prussianism, that has brought the greatest victory to American arms in all the history of the Nation? [Applause on the Democratic side.] Investigate what? Why, you tried it in the last Congress. You had military officers who had been discharged from the service coming before the Rules Committee to investigate the Argonne Forest Battle, the greatest battle in all history, and yet if you had heard these gentlemen talk before that committee you would have believed that the American arms had suffered disgrace and defeat in that battle, when, upon the other hand, they had stamped themselves the greatest soldiers in the history of the world. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Ah, gentlemen, we have no objection to this. The sensible people of this country understand the purpose of it. Why do you not come in here—the people have put you in control—why do you not come in here and bring in legislation to meet the problems of the day and not look into the water that has already gone over the wheel? [Applause on the Democratic side.] There are great problems here for this Congress to solve, and you admit it. You talk about efficiency in running the Government! The American people have not forgotten that the Democratic Party ran the Government successfully in all of its phases during the greatest war in history. And now you say that the Democratic Party is not efficient, and you are so inefficient that you would not be here on this floor to-day with this resolution if the Democratic members had not given you a quorum in your committee this morning. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I am not criticizing the chairman of the committee. He is entitled to the high position which he holds in his party's service. No member of this committee is criticizing the chairman of the committee for any unfair treatment of the Democratic members of that committee, but the point to which I call the attention of the country here to-day is that you are wasting and frittering away time in investigation of things that are passed, when there are great problems to be solved. And the business of this House, and especially the business of the majority side, since you are charged with power, should be not put to the investigations of the past, but in solving the problems of the present and of the future.

I commend to my Republican friends on that side of the House the action of the Republican Party recently taken in Kentucky. The Republican Party in Kentucny recently had a platform convention; but, gentlemen, not one word in that platform, from start to finish, though it was a long platform, dared to criticize the national administration. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] use some of his time?

Mr. POU. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WELTY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, a year ago to-day the First and Second Divisions were engaged at the front south of Soissons, with a hope that they would stop the retreat of the French. The marines were a part of this organization, and they were sent near Bois de Belleau, a short distance northwest of Chateau-Thierry. They arrived there about June 1, 8,000 strong, and it was estimated that these lads did not only hold back but repulsed, time and again, four times their weight. On June 6 an advance was made, and this part of the battle ended June 18, at which time it was learned that these two divisions did not only check but defeated the Germans by driving them out of the woods and for a number of miles beyond; but when the roll was called some of the companies had no commissioned or noncommissioned officers left, and out of the 8,000 marines who went in 6,200 were either killed or wounded. Col. Catlin, who was in command of one of these regiments, told me that 60 per cent of the rank and file of these boys were college men, and that in one regiment 93 per cent of its men were either marksmen, sharpshooters, or expert riflemen.

A year ago to-day the Germans knew for the first time how Americans can fight. Our soldiers had looked forward to this day for months, and now they were permitted to demonstrate the difference in a man when he fights for an ideal and one who fights for property and because he is told to fight. They were not only ready but willing to hold up the traditions of American soldiers. Heretofore he fought on his own soil and near his front door, that others might enjoy freedom and equality of rights, but it was the first time that he crossed the seas and planted the American banner on foreign soil, demonstrating that the spirit of freedom was a growing and continuing spirit. It was a new spirit planted, and when Europe saw how gallantly they fought they concluded that American soldiers had not only caught but possessed the spirit of the Crusaders. With them it was ever onward and no retreat.

I have just returned from the Walter Reed Hospital, where one of these brave lads submitted to a fifth major operation, due to a piece of bursting shell entering his left lung during this battle. His comrades tell me that he refused to be borne off of the field, and when told at the hospital that he could not resume the fight he wept because he could no longer continue with his comrades in this great fight for freedom.

Mr. Speaker, he is not the only one at Walter Reed possessing this spirit; there are hundreds of others, maimed for life, happy in the thought that they had a part in this great world struggle, even though their bodies are physically disfigured for life.

I am sorry to say that there are those with us to-day who have not caught this spirit of sacrifice; but their one and only thought was how much they could get out of this war for themselves. And when the draft act was passed they were busy getting soft places for their sons within the draft age, and I am sorry that in the selection of hundreds of thousands of officers they, too, were commissioned and became nothing more nor less than rubber stamps for these profiteers.

Business had to be mobilized in order to support these lads, and thousands of business men, laborers, too old to shoulder the gun, were willing to make every sacrifice in order that we might win; and these men have contributed just as much toward the success of our cause as the boys on the field of battle, but these spirits possessed by the soldier, business man, and laborer demand now that the light of publicity be thrown on every man, woman, and child who had a part in the prosecution of the war, so that the profiteer and vampire may be known by their cowardly slinking way, and withdrawal from this light because of a sense of guilt; and, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, let us help in throwing on this light in order to point out their illegal acts, so that full justice might be administered.

During the prosecution of this war I received numerous complaints, and I have contented myself by calling them to the attention of the President, officers of the War Department, and the Department of Justice, because I believed that the enemy should not know that we had these with us who would steal from the Government while others were giving their lives to maintain the same. But now that the war is over I think it high time that a searching inquiry should be made with a view of prosecuting everyone who may be found guilty of profiteering or of presenting a false and fraudulent claim to the Government. I know that there are those who believe that an inquiry will not result in any good, because of our experiences during the Civil and Spanish-American Wars, and they point with justification to the fruitless inquiry of the Beef Trust scandal, when 21 years ago they had thousands of pounds of embalmed beef on hand which they could not sell to the public, but found ready market after the declaration of war with Spain. But, Mr. Speaker, are we not suffering to this day because those in authority at that time failed to do their duty? I well remember when the first cans of beef came to Chickamauga Park, some of the cans were bulged out, and when opened the meat had a green, slimy appearance, and for some reason our pet dogs in camp and the razor-back hogs of Georgia refused to touch it when thrown to them for food; yet the officers passed it for food to the soldiers, and for want of anything better they ate it after being cooked. And what was the result? Two-thirds of the soldiers became sick. I have seen hundreds of soldiers drop during a drill or parade, as though they were hit by a bullet. I ask again, can a Government long live when it permits acts of this sort to go unpunished? Mr. Speaker, I may not know the signs of the times, but I doubt if another beef scandal can be put over on the American public.

I know there are some who want to make politics out of this. In my resolution of inquiry, which was referred to the Rules Committee May 20, I asked for a nonpartisan committee, but I understand that the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department and others on the majority side ask for a committee of 15, with only a third of them Democrats.

The President and Secretary Baker did not ask a soldier or business man offering his services for his politics. It so happened in my State that a large majority of the judge advocates and other officers selected were Republicans. I do not know what has been the practice in other States, but I have come to the conclusion that Secretary Baker in his attempt to avoid the politics of the Civil and Spanish-American Wars was leaning backward. However, it seems that there were those under his authority who did not share his views when it came to the selection of these officers. I was informed by Gen. Crowder that when it came to the selection of judge advocates from Ohio that the matter was left exclusively with Secretary Baker, and yet I found upon inquiry from the Secretary of War that he did not know a single judge advocate selected from Ohio. But somehow from the hundreds of able lawyers in Ohio it so happened that only three were of the Democratic faith, and a majority came from Cincinnati, because the examining committee thought Cincinnati was the largest city in Ohio, and every good lawyer must come from the larger cities.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am not asking for a nonpartisan committee because of a desire that Democrats should be protected. Far from it. I believe that a man who defrauded a Government during the war is a traitor and should be dealt with accordingly; and I do hope that when you come to a traitor who professes to be a Democrat that no blank cartridge be used.

But I am asking for a nonpartisan committee, because these men who profiteered during the war possess neither politics nor religion. They assume their cloak only to appear in respectable company. I am not saying that my good friend, the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, does not intend to go to the bottom in this investigation, but he will probably find that he may be embarrassed, because some of these have powerful friends among those who organized not only the Senate but the House as well. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HULINGS].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Speaker, when this country entered into the Great War people generally believed that in the high civilization of the twentieth century war was impossible. We were entirely unprepared. We were told to be neutral. There were some men here and there over the country, red-blooded men, who urged preparation. But we were told at that time that they were "nervous and hysterical," and that there was no danger of war. The people did not recognize the fact that a ravening tiger was loose in the world. They did not recognize at that time that it was the duty of humanity and of this great Republic to go in and destroy that tiger.

And so the dictates of humanity forced us into this war. We were unprepared. Our regular officers had had no experience—not one of them—in the handling and equipping and supplying of great masses of men. They knew nothing about gas and grenades and trench warfare. They had not small arms munitions, artillery, airplanes, motor trucks, food, clothing, or even an army, and it was a stupendous task, and, of course, mistakes were made. Of course, in the hurry and confusion cost was not considered, and of course there was great extravagance. But to the everlasting credit of the American people all loyal men of all parties joined hands in common front against the common foe [applause], and for the first time in the history of the country the minority party supported the majority administration in time of war.

Now, I believe, with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], that this investigation should go on, not so much to determine who has been making mistakes or even to expose grafters and profiteers, desirable as that may be, but for the purpose of informing Congress how it may put an end to the enormous outlays and the expenses that are still going on without diminution six months after the war is over. The people are entitled to know what the facts are, but I also believe that investigation will show that the men who were at the head of the war operations were honestly doing the best they knew how. Honest mistakes that have been made we can overlook. Honest extravagance we can forget. The point of this investigation should be to inform this Congress as to the measures to be taken to cut off unnnecessary expense and to better equip Congress to handle the far more important matters that are pressing for solution. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from North Carolina use some of his time?

Mr. POU. How many more speeches, I would like to ask, will there be on that side?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Probably two; and then I shall reserve a little time in which to move the previous question.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] says the country demands this investigation. I do not know whether there is much demand for it in the country or not, but I know that the Democratic administration welcomes it. The Democratic membership of this House will vote for it. I shall vote for it, because it provides for a better committee, with broader powers than any existing committee, for the purpose of investigating the expenditures in the War Department and the general conduct of the war.

I should have preferred, Mr. Speaker, to see a joint committee of the Senate and House appointed. Such a committee, I believe, would have attracted the attention of the country and held it, whereas a committee here, making an investigation, and a committee over there on the other side of the Capitol making an investigation, will not do that. It would have been less expensive for the Government and less trouble to the officials of the War Department to appear before one committee than before two committees. It would have resulted in a more thorough investigation. I should have preferred such a committee on the conduct of the war and the expenditures for the war, such a committee as we had after the war between the States. But as we are not in control of things and can not dictate what kind of a committee we shall have we will support the committee provided for in this resolution. I for one believe I speak the unanimous voice of the Democratic side when I say we shall vote for this as the very best proposition to make this investigation that the Republicans will present to the House. We hope to improve it by amendment, but we are so willing for this investigation that we will vote for it whether it is amended or not.

The Democrats of the House and the Democrats of the country are proud of the splendid record which the able and efficient Secretary of War has made, and proud of his honest and splendid management of the multiplied duties of his great office. [Applause.]

We are proud of the glorious record made by American armies across the water [applause], and we want to see every man who has failed in his duty to his country in this great hour, who has taken advantage of the exigencies of war and the hurried manner in which great things had to be done, to improperly enrich himself, whether he be a Democrat or a Republican, exposed and brought to justice. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, it would have been better if there had been a larger representation given to the Democrats upon the proposed committee. I think the suggestion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU], that the Democrats have six and the Republicans nine, is certainly fair and certainly reasonable. I can see no answer to his position. I see no reason why there should be more than three subcommittees of this proposed committee. Two of those subcommittees could have two of the subjects of investigation assigned to each of them. This would meet the argument for five subcommittees. If that were done there could be three committees of five members each, three Democrats and two Republicans——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. You are wrong again. [Laughter.]

Mr. FLOOD. I mean three Republicans and two Democrats. I wish it were the other way. [Laughter.] Three Republicans and two Democrats. Such a division would appeal more to the sense of justice and right of the country than a division of two to one, as we are to have it in the proposed committee. It would be nearer nonpartisan and would appeal more strongly to the sense of justice and right of the Members of this House. But whether this committee be partisan or nonpartisan, I want to see it created. I want to see a thorough investigation made. I want to see a speedy investigation made, and I know that the War Department and the Democratic administration and the Democratic membership of this House and the Democratic Party in the country have nothing to fear from this investigation. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, this being admittedly a nonpartisan investigation, I have been highly edified in listening to the absolutely "nonpartisan" speeches that have been made upon that side of the House. I can not avoid the conclusion, however, that beneath the braggadocio of some of these gentleman there lurks a little timidity about what may happen as a result of this investigation. While undoubtedly there has been a great waste of public money, for which the people of this country will have to pay, I sincerely trust it will not develop that any money has beeen misused for the benefit of any person or corporation. That is one of the things we are going to try to find out.

In my district there has been a Government activity—if that is the word to use. There was activity there for four or five months, during which some six or seven million dollars was spent in the erection of an alleged nitrate plant. One of the most beautiful spots in my county is now a devastated ruin and all work has been finally abandoned, but before it is finally paid for it will have cost the American people something over $12,000,000. I heard many rumors—not very pretty ones—I do not vouch for them—connected with the construction of this plant, rumors in the first place as to the qualifications necessary in order to obtain employment. I shall not elaborate upon these. But I heard of one instance, pretty well vouched for, of a man who obtained employment there as a carpenter, a man who had been well satisfied with wages amounting to in the neighborhood of $15 a week, who, through some influence or other, obtained employment there at a salary of $75 a week. He discovered that his job apparently consisted of every now and then approaching a wall and hammering in a nail which another gentleman kindly held for that purpose. He was conscientious enough to have some doubt whether the wages he was being paid, considering the amount of work he did, were not a trifle excessive, and he was somewhat concerned to observe after a few days that another gentleman was almost continuously in attendance upon him. When he walked up to hammer in a nail this other gentleman would observe him apparently with intense interest. When he sat upon a bench to rest and to ruminate, possibly upon the noble deeds of our great Secretary of War, he observed that this man was watching him intently. Finally he became disturbed and he accosted the man and said, "Sir, what does this mean? Are you shadowing me? Are you a detective?" The man replied, "No, sir; I am your helper." [Laughter.] Those are some of the things that we propose to investigate under this resolution.

Let us join together, Republicans and Democrats, in this House to see to it that the American people are fully advised as to where these vast expenditures have gone. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, how much time is there remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] has 10 minutes and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] has 12 minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman from North Carolina use some time?

Mr. POU. There will be only one more speech on this side.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, very early in the history of our Government the House provided for certain committees whose duty it was to examine into the expenditures of Government departments. Those committees have not always functioned as they should. I believe it to be the duty of those committees to hold sessions in every Congress and to examine into the expenditures and all of the expenditures of the departments. They have not always done so; but in almost every session of Congress, and invariably so at the close of periods of great expenditures, these committees have made examinations, and special committees have been appointed for that purpose.

In ordinary times the War Department spends about $125,000,000 to $130,000,000 a year. Since the war began it has expended $16,000,000,000. One division of the War Department has expended more than $4,000,000,000. Manifestly these enormous expenditures should be audited and examined and inquired into. I assume they would be, without regard to whether Republicans or Democrats controlled the House. I believe we are proposing nothing more than the gentlemen on the other side would have proposed if they had had control of the House. I feel confident that the gentlemen on the other side expect, and are perfectly honest in their statement that they desire to have these investigations made, though I am frank to say that I never before heard a man express so much regret with regard to something that he wanted to have done as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL], who just spoke, expressed. While he was exceedingly anxious, so he said, to have these investigations made, he spoke with great regret with regard to them.

Mr. Speaker, the important work of this Congress will be constructive; but, as we proceed first with our program of appropriations and then with our program of constructive legislation, it becomes our duty—the American people expect it of us—to have a fair and thorough investigation, and we expect a fair investigation, of the activities and expenditures of the departments of the Government.

Something has been said about the representation on this committee, and gentlemen have insisted that the minority should have a larger representation than is suggested. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], I think, explained that matter fully and clearly. The minority could not be given a larger representation than is proposed on this committee if it is to be divided into subcommittees, as it seems necessary that it should be, without increasing the committee to a size that would call from other active work a larger number, both of the minority and the majority, than can be well spared. All of the legislative committees of the House will be very busy, and the active, forceful men on both sides will be needed in that work in as large number as are available, and it would not be wise, either from the standpoint of the majority or the minority, to have these investigating committees too large in number. In view of the situation, I think the arrangement made is eminently fair and just, and I want to say for the majority that we are taking up these investigations not in any spirit of endeavor to make political capital, whatever gentlemen may say, but because it is our duty to do so. It would be their duty if they were in control of the House to make such an audit and examination as would inform the American people of the manner and character of the very great expenditures during the period of the war.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I have noticed that since the beginning of this session of the Congress several of the older Members of the House have taken occasion to address themselves particularly to the new Members of the body. For just a moment I venture to do that thing.

You gentlemen who come here as new Members have heard for a good many years of the gag rule and the steam roller. Now, I want to say to you that in just a few moments you are going to see these modern instrumentalities of politics in very full and active operation.

The issue will be put to the test here when the gentleman from Kansas moves the previous question. If the previous question be carried, then all possibility of amending this resolution will fail. If it be not carried, then the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] will have the opportunity of offering the amendment which he has had read for the information of the House, and that is to provide that the minority representation on the committee shall be not less than six in number.

Of course, the resolution which is before you does not change the majority and minority representation; that is left to the honored Speaker of this House. But I assume that the Speaker of this House will carry out the plan that was officially announced to the Committee on Rules to be "the plan" and name 10 majority members and 5 minority members. Against that injustice I protest.

A friend of mine on that side, and I am very fond of him, spoke to me a few moments ago of the similarity of debate in this Congress and eight years ago, when the Democrats first came into power. On this question of investigations I agreed with him as to some of the debate, but let me point out this difference in the investigations which the Democrats ordered and the investigation which the Republicans now propose to order.

The steel investigating committee consisted of nine members—five majority and four minority. The sugar investigating committee consisted of nine members—five majority and four minority. The so-called Mulhall investigating committee consisted of seven members—four of the majority and three of the minority. The Pujo investigation was conducted by one of the standing committees of the House, the Committee on Banking and Currency. My friend from North Carolina said that in the history of the Government there had been no investigating committee in which there were 2 to 1. My friend is mistaken. I venture to call your attention to a committee, and I hesitate somewhat to do it, because when brought to recollection I fear it will be pregnant with sad memories to those on the Republican side. In the last Republican Congress you created what was commonly known as the Ballinger-Pinchot investigating committee. It was a joint committee, as this committee ought to be, of the House and the Senate, and you had eight of the majority party and four of the minority. That is the only precedent you have. You remember what happened to you after the Ballinger-Pinchot investigation. Gentlemen, why not play the game fair? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The membership of this House, the relative proportion of party representation, entitles the minority under all the rules of the game to the representation suggested by the amendment that will be proposed, if opportunity be given, by the gentleman from North Carolina. We gave it to you while we were in power. Aye, more. Why not at least begin this matter with some semblance of fairness?

Of course, we do not oppose the investigation. It is to be an investigation of what in many respects is the most glorious chapter in the history of this United States. The job was done with thoroughness and completeness. We do not object, and we welcome the opportunity to show the efficiency with which those charged with the responsibility dealt in this great crisis of the world. But I do insist, Mr. Speaker, that in common decency, measured by all the decent precedents of the past; in common fairness, measured by the standard which we ourselves have set, we are entitled to this proportionate representation upon this very important committee. I appeal to the sense of fairness of this House to vote down the previous question and give us an opportunity to have a vote on the amendment that will then be offered by the gentleman from North Carolina. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, before taking any more time, I want to call attention of the gentleman from North Carolina to some rather formal amendments to the resolution that I shall ask unanimous consent to make.

Mr. POU. I have no objection if they are the corrections the gentleman showed me.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Line 6, page 2, I ask unanimous consent that the word "further" be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to strike out, on page 2, line 6, the word "further."

Mr. IGOE. Reserving the right to object, why not vote down the previous question and then we can take up this amendment and others at the same time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is another matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I ask unanimous consent that in line 10, page 2, the word "further" be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. On page 2, line 12, I ask unanimous consent that the word "select" be added after the word "said."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. In line 14, page 2, I ask unanimous consent that the word "further" be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the discussion on this resolution. Gentlemen on the Democratic side say they court the investigation that it proposes—in fact, they are anxious for such an investigation—but the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] is not satisfied with the way the committee is made up. He has called the attention of the House to the fact that in other investigations authorized by the House the political proportions of the committees differed from the proportions proposed here. He cited, I think, four precedents—the steel investigation, the sugar investigations, and the so-called Money Trust or Pujo investigation. I call the gentleman's attention and the attention of the House to the fact that each of these investigations was to inquire into industrial and financial institutions of the country rather than a political [laughter on the Democratic side] or governmental activity.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Ah, the gentleman has let the cat out of the bag.

Mr. LONGWORTH. May I suggest to the gentleman from Kansas that the gentleman is perfectly right when he speaks of a political or governmental activity—they are synonymous under this administration.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Have been. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] Oh, gentlemen seem pleased. In all probability the investigation will disclose that there has been a mingling of political and governmental activities. I have not the slightest doubt of that. The other precedent referred to by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] called for an investigation of a governmental activity, but the membership of that committee was composed exactly as it is proposed to compose this committee, in the same proportion of the majority and the minority members.

Mr. GARRETT. Does the gentleman refer to the Pujo committee?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; the Ballinger committee. However, it was a committee to investigate a governmental activity, and that is what this committee is. There is nothing unfair about these proportions.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. That was a Republican committee, and that is what this committee is to be.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; that is true. I congratulate the Republican side of the House and the country upon the fact that the Republicans have an opportunity to make a delayed investigation of the activities of the War Department. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The Democratic majority that went out in the last Congress had many opportunities to inquire into the activities of the War Department. Many failures have been called to the attention of the country that did not seem to get a response from the committees of this House, and the matters were not investigated.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. For a question.

Mr. PELL. In what way does the proportion of this proposed victory investigating committee compare with the proportions of the committee which investigated the Spanish War?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am really not able to answer the gentleman. I think, however, that that was a joint committee, although I am not sure. Mr. Speaker, this resolution calls for an investigation that is so collosal in its nature that there will have to be at least five subcommittees. The sensible thing to do will be to have two Republicans and one Democrat upon each one of these subcommittees, rather than to have two Republicans and one Democrat on a portion of the subcommittees, and three Republicans and two Democrats on other subcommittees.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, before that is done, I would like to ask if the gentleman objects to a vote upon my proposed amendment?

Mr CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do. I move the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. POU. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 197, nays 154, answered "present" 2, not voting 76, as follows:

YEAS—197.

So the resolution was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. ANTHONY with Mr. FISHER.

Mr. BRITTEN with Mr. CLARK of Florida.

Mr. HAUGEN with Mr. DAVEY.

Mr. LEHLBACH with Mr. MCCLINTIC.

Mr. MCKINLEY with Mr. PELL.

Mr. WALTERS with Mr. WOODS of Virginia.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to vote "yea."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name was called?

Mr. MILLER. I was present.

The SPEAKER. That is not sufficient.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4226), being the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H. R. 4226, the District appropriation bill.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. And pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] if we can not agree upon time for general debate?

Mr. BUCHANAN. What suggestion has the gentleman to make? How much time will your side require?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. So far as I am concerned, I do not care to use more than 30 minutes. I would suggest that we limit the debate to 40 minutes on a side, unless the gentleman has a lot of requests for time.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Let us say 45 minutes on a side, with this understanding, that if no contest is made upon the half-and-half plan it will be limited to 45 minutes on a side, but if there is a contest I think we can agree to time on that subject alone.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Make it 40 minutes on a side, and I will agree to the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. BUCHANAN. All right. Let it go.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. And the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] to control half the time and I the other half.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the debate be limited to 80 minutes, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Texas. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, is it proposed at the conclusion of that time to begin the reading of the bill to-day?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is my desire.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 4226, the District appropriation bill, with Mr. TOWNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4226) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill may be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN].

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, in response to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], concerning the present status of the Federal road act, I desire to submit a communication from the department, which gives the information, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, while the subject is still fresh in our minds, I desire to advert to the resolution just passed by the House, and particularly to the speech made by my distinguished friend from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. Gentlemen will recall that that side of the House voted unanimously against ordering the previous question, on the ground that they had not received fair treatment in that they were allowed only 5 out of 15 members on this committee; in other words, they contend that with committees, particularly investigating committees, the proportion for the majority should be less than 2 to 1.

Since listening, profoundly moved as I was, by the affecting character of that speech, I have procured a copy of the Congressional Directory of the Sixty-third Congress, that being the first time that the Democratic Party had had for many years an opportunity to impress their policies upon the country and who were then in complete control of this House. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] said that there was no precedent in the history of this House for giving the minority on any committee which had investigating powers as low as one out of two. I will proceed to read certain committee lists to test his statement.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And he was addressing himself particularly to the new Members.

Mr. LONGWORTH. He was appearing in the character of a good old uncle.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman evidently has my statement confused with the statement made by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU].

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, no. The gentleman from Tennessee made this positive statement. He said: "Treat us at least fairly; let there be some semblance of decency; give us more than one out of every two, because there is no precedent in history for less."

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will allow me, I will read the list of one of these committees.

I read at random from one of the various investigating committees as formed by the Sixty-third Congress, when the Democratic side was in power:

The Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department: James M. Graham, of Illinois; Oscar Callaway, of Texas; Joseph A. Goulden, of New York; Dudley M. Hughes, of Georgia; Tom Stout, of Montana.

Count them; five Democrats. I now read the names of the other members:

Frank W. Mondell, of Wyoming; Charles H. Burke, of South Dakota.

Count them, my friends; two Republicans. In other words, when the Democratic Party had assumed control of the affairs of this House, instead of giving the Republicans a better deal than we are giving the Democrats now, they gave us only two out of seven. The proportion was two and one-half to one, instead of two to one.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will in a moment. Let me read another:

The Committee on Expenditures in the War Department—

That is the kind of committee we have just formed—a Committee on Expenditures in the War Department. I read:

John A. M. Adair, of Indiana; Hannibal L. Godwin, of North Carolina; John J. Eagan, of New Jersey; Peter J. Dooling, of New York; Frank L. Dershem, of Pennsylvania.

Five. On the Republican side of the committee:

Ernest W. Roberts, of Massachusetts.

One. They were kind enough to give us one out of six on that committee. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Now, gentlemen, I am not going to debate the question whether it would have been better or not to have given the minority a larger proportion, though it seems to me very patent that in a committee of 15, where there are to be five separate subcommittees, it is the only proportion which would be fair to both sides of the House. But the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] says that we have been unfair; that we have been indecent. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman from Minnesota give me two minutes more?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I yield the gentleman two minutes more. That is all I can give.

Mr. LONGWORTH. He accuses us of indecency in this matter. I am sure my friend from Tennessee did not have in mind, when he made that attack on this side of the House, the treatment that we received—without complaint, I assume, because I did not happen to be a Member of that Congress myself—without complaint, the proportion of only one out of two and one-half. As a matter of fact, if we had followed the precedent set by the party that is now in the minority, which was then in a majority for the first time in many years, the proportion of this committee would have been as 11 to 4.

In other words, gentlemen, we have not only treated you fairly, but we have treated you much more fairly than you treated us. My friend from Tennessee may shed tears, if he likes, in addressing this House, but I beg of him not to shed "crocodile tears." [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] for 40 minutes.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, it came as a very great surprise to me that any gentleman on that side should care to reopen an issue which has just been so shamefully settled. [Applause on the Democratic side.] In the remarks which I made, referring to investigating committees, I referred to special investigating committees. I did not refer to the standing committees of the House. We have made no complaint as to the assignments given us upon the standing committees of the House. Those were accepted without protest. I think myself that the arrangement was as fair as it could have been made. What I complained of was the assignment upon this special committee. The able gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], however, has seen fit to call attention to the five-and-two proposition in the Sixty-third Congress. In that Congress the Democratic Party had a majority of about 143. In this Congress the Republicans have a majority of about 41. And yet we gave you upon the standing Committee on Expenditures at that time the same proportion, notwithstanding our majority of 143, that you have given us at this time with your majority of only 41. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. In just a moment I will try to. Now, in view of the fact that this matter has been reopened, and as I see the honored Speaker of the House leaving the Chamber, I desire to make an appeal to him. I stated in the course of my remarks that I supposed the Speaker would carry out the plans that had been formulated by his party's steering committee, but upon reflection I think I was mistaken and that I did the Speaker a grave injustice in that respect. Notwithstanding this resolution which has been forced upon the Speaker of this House, notwithstanding the program which has been laid down by the steering committee of the majority side, that there shall be 10 to 5, I yet have—and that is my only remaining hope—an abiding faith that the Speaker of this House will, fair as he is, disregard the recommendation of his party's steering committee and do us the decent justice that ought to be done when it comes to appointing this committee. [Applause on the Democratic side.] With that expression, Mr. Chairman, of the confidence I have in the fairness and the justice of the Speaker of this House, who now remains our only hope for justice, the episode, so far as I am concerned, is closed. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee yields back the remainder of his time, two minutes. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I consumed?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 33 minutes left.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I wish the Chair would call my attention to the fact when I have spoken 20 minutes, if I succeed in speaking that long.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will try to do so.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I feel as though an armistice relative to the recent heated discussion at least has been signed; not that the war is over, but that an armistice has been signed.

Now, I want to call attention to something that you are all interested in, because you represent all parts of this country. The bill that I am going to present to you pertains particularly to the Capital of the Nation—your Capital—and if you discover any politics in it, any partisanship on the part of any member of the committee presenting it—and I am a part of that—I wish you would point it out. We have endeavored here to proceed in an economical way, not because of past extravagance, but because we want to do justice to the people of this District, the city of Washington, and the people of the United States. I want to make an illustration, a comparison. Your subcommittee is composed of five members.

Having been connected with municipalities before I came to Congress, I can not help thinking that your subcommittee really are aldermen of the city of Washington. Now, if this were Cleveland, Detroit, Minneapolis, St. Louis, or some other city of that size, perhaps your five aldermen here could get along pretty well, provided we had six months or a year's time in which to investigate all these matters; but we have not that time, and this is not Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit, or any other city of similar size. This is Washington, the Capital of the Nation. And I want to tell you the more you study it the more you will be surprised to find the complexity of the conditions which confront your little board of aldermen.

In the ordinary city the taxgatherer collects the money, the board of aldermen distribute it, and it is all audited by one office. Not so in Washington. I am not condemning the system, I am merely stating to you a fact. I will give you a few illustrations to show you the complexity and the trouble that your subcommittee have to contend with. Appropriations for the District of Columbia are carried in the District bill proper, which I now present to you. Large sums are carried in the sundry civil bill. Large sums are carried in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, and the deficiency bills always carry appropriations for the District of Columbia. The funds for park maintenance are carried in the sundry civil bill and are expended by the Chief of Engineers of the Army. That is only one instance. To keep track of all these different things, first, where do we get the money for a particular purpose; next, how is it disposed of and under whose guidance—these are some of the complications.

The funds for the water department are carried in the District bill, but are expended partly by the District Commissioners and partly by the Chief of Engineers of the Army. Those things all have to be watched, audited, and looked after, and your little board of aldermen of five men have got to straighten out all those things and explain to 435 Members why it is so, and all about it.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not want to bother the gentleman.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I shall not consider it any bother. I shall be glad to answer any question, if I can.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if all the park police force under the direction of the Army are not paid out of the Army appropriation bill?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. No; they are not. We pay a part of them and the Federal Government pays another part.

Mr. MADDEN. I did not think we paid any part.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I am informed by the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations that we do.

Mr. SISSON. If the gentleman will yield——

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. SISSON. At the beginning of the war the police force was very greatly reduced, and a certain number of men were detailed from the Army on police duty, and they were paid out of the police fund. Of course, this committee had nothing to do with that, because they were regularly appointed as policemen for the District of Columbia. They were detailed as policemen, and they were in their uniforms. How many there were I do not know.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think that is correct. I will just give you briefly a few other illustrations. Mind you, I am not criticizing this thing. I am simply showing the obstacles and confusion that your committee have to contend with, both in the appropriations and the settlement.

The Zoological Park, with an annual appropriation of $115,000, is under the Smithsonian Institution. There is a small appropriation for the burial of indigent soldiers, which is under the War Department.

The public buildings and grounds, care and maintenance of parks, and so forth, are under the War Department. Rock Creek Park and Potomac Parkway are under a commission. The Aqueduct Bridge is under the War Department. Columbia Hospital is under a board of trustees. The salaries and expenses of the office of public buildings and grounds are under the War Department. The $240 bonus to employees is carried in the District bill, but we did not inaugurate it. The refunding of taxes, an indefinite sum, is in the District bill.

I simply cite these things to you to show you that this is different from any other city in the country, and that in order to comprehend it fully much time should be consumed in investigating it.

Now, as to the present bill. The last appropriation bill, for 1919, including deficiencies, amounted to $15,451,318.66. The bill under consideration carries $14,782,981. The bill which failed of passage carried $14,093,701. You must bear in mind that we spent a good deal of time here in the last session in the consideration of a District of Columbia appropriation bill, which passed the House but failed to become a law, owing to the fact that the Sixty-fifth Congress expired on the 4th of March. That bill carried $689,280 less than the present bill. In this bill we have not come up to the estimates of the commissioners, and we have not come up to the estimates of the War Department. We have not given them all that they asked for, but we have done pretty well, I think. We have given them within about $800,000 of what they requested.

Gentlemen, owing to the failure of the passage of the last bill I really think the District of Columbia suffered more inconvenience, considering the amount involved, than almost any other branch of our Government. The bill failed of passage, and it left things in a very disordered state in the District of Columbia. So, in order to expedite the passage of this bill, your committee virtually took the old bill, which failed of passage the last time, and called it the foundation of this bill. It is true we raised some salaries. We raised the salaries of teachers. We put on some new employment; but the bill passed the scrutiny of this House, and it carried $14,782,981. Now, we have taken that as the foundation, so to speak, or the nucleus, of the present bill, and we have added a little over $600,000 to it. We were then in war. At least, hostilities had only been partially suspended. We felt a little cramped for funds. We did not go on with many improvements. In other words, I choose to style the old bill which failed of passage simply a maintenance bill. Consider that remark, gentlemen. In other words, instead of being a bill to add new improvements or to go ahead with new and needed construction, it was simply to maintain the things that we had.

Therefore, I call the old bill which failed of passage the maintenance bill. We have taken that bill and added $600,000 or $800,000 to it in the matter of new construction that the District of Columbia very much needs.

Take the item of streets, which I think is the largest. The old bill carried no appropriation whatever, not a single dollar, for the improvement or opening of new streets in the entire District of Columbia. We simply tried to maintain those we already had as best we could, and provided for no new construction whatever. The present bill, owing to a change in conditions, for new work on streets has added to it $282,300. We have added a partial and moderate amount to what the District Commissioners have asked for in the estimate. I am frank to say that in the last old bill while the commissioners made an estimate of improvements desired, still they said that "we think it would not be advisable to go into new projects if you will properly maintain the old ones." So we did so, but now we have added a reasonable and moderate sum of $282,300 for the advancement of new work on about 20 different highways in the District of Columbia.

We have also put into the bill what is called a consolidation of the improvement of new streets. Heretofore in District improvements in the old city of Washington the appropriations have been made in a lump sum, and by reference simply to certain streets on the back of the estimates. While the improvement of suburban roads have been made by appropriations carried in detail on the face of each bill, in this bill the committee recommends carrying one item for street improvement, and it will have the effect of presenting to Congress on the face of the appropriation bill every street that is to be paved or repaved during the ensuing year. So that the entire Congress can pick up the bill and pick out streets we are going to improve and the amount we are going to pay therefor in each case. Whether that is an improvement it is for the Congress to determine. I think it is.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. Does this committee give any serious attention to the matter of street cleaning and the removal of garbage?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will come to that in a few minutes. I will say that we do, and for street cleaning we appropriate a large sum of money in this bill.

Mr. MADDEN. I was going to call the gentleman's attention, and through him the committee's attention, to the fact that it frequently happens that those charged with the responsibility of removing the garbage pay no attention to it, and that the property owners are required to go without having the garbage removed, and are subjected to the stench that ensues from a failure to carry it away. It happen, in many instances, that the men who are employed to take the garbage away refuse to do it unless somebody pays them extra for doing it. It seems to me that there ought to be some method devised by which regularity of action would follow the appropriation in the matter of removal of garbage, and that the people who pay the taxes would not be imposed upon by the contractor or employees and be required to pay additional money for the work that ought to be done and paid for out of the appropriation.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. We have had a little difficulty on the garbage question. The contractors were not able to comply with the contract. We have taken over the garbage plant at Cherry Hill, bought it, and paid $85,000 for it, improved it to the amount of $35,000, and we are virtually running our own garbage proposition. We have been obliged to do so, but I think we are doing it cheaper than we did under the old system.

Mr. MADDEN. That is supposed to be a garbage-reduction plant. Of course, the garbage must be gotten to the plant before it can be reduced. The thing I am complaining of is that the garbage is not moved from the premises, and that the people have to pay these men for doing the work that Congress appropriates the money to pay for.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I hope that the gentleman is not censuring the Commissioners of the District.

Mr. MADDEN. No; I am calling attention of the committee to the matter so that the committee may make inquiry into it and remedy it.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. I will state to my friend that some time back there was a good deal of complaint about the garbage. That came to our attention and we called the attention of the District Commissioners to it, and they stated that they had had a great deal of complaint. Legislation went into the bill year before last and the money was appropriated, and we find that there has been very much less complaint since. The difficulty has been to get labor to do this work. I do not think the gentleman will find that the complaints will continue now that we are getting labor enough.

Mr. MADDEN. If I may be permitted to say, my next complaint is that after having called up those who are supposed to be in supreme authority at the District Building you get a man on the telephone who states that you want to communicate with some one else, and tries to switch you off onto somebody else. You can not find the somebody else, and finally, when you have tried five or six, they switch you back to the first man and he tells you that he has not the time to talk to you about it. It seems to me that there is something radically wrong at headquarters where they do the executive work. It makes no difference how many men you employ to do a thing if the man at the head pays no attention to complaints and fails to see that you get it done.

Mr. SISSON. How recent has this complaint been?

Mr. MADDEN. Every day.

Mr. SISSON. I am inclined to believe the gentleman has just been troubled a little and it worries him to the extent that he makes it every day.

Mr. MADDEN. It does not worry me at all. I was simply telling the facts as I found them. Of course, I believe that if we call the matter to the attention of this committee, they will be able to call it to the attention of the people who were complained about.

Mr. SISSON. I was just thinking perhaps the gentleman had heard some of the old complaints that came to us in large numbers some time ago. We have not heard complaints lately.

Mr. MADDEN. I am only complaining about things that I know myself.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I think I can settle this difficulty. You have a subcommittee now, a little board of aldermen, that is going to investigate the garbage question thoroughly, and I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] will be satisfied with the next bill that is reported and with all that comes in between that time and now, because we are going to watch that.

I am going to make my remarks a little shorter than I intended. Let us take the question of repairs on streets. As I say, this is a constructive bill. Under the previous bill repairs on streets contained an item for only $375,000. The commissioners, however, this time recommend $675,000. We went as far as we thought we could under all the conditions, and we have allowed them $500,000 for repairs to streets, because I believe the streets of Washington ought to be kept in good repair.

Sewers—there is but one item, and it is new—$40,000. There has been a great deal of talk about what is called the upper Potomac interceptor. It is a proposition that will cost about $40,000. When that is completed the function of that interceptor will be to collect the Georgetown sewage, now discharged into the Potomac River, and carry it into the regular sewerage system of the city. Hence there will be no further complaint about the water in the Potomac being impure and unhealthy. That little $40,000 item, I think, is going to be pretty well expended.

In the last bill we could not give a single dollar—we did not feel as though we could—with which to build any permanent school buildings. We therefore gave you 60 little portable schools, emergency propositions; but we determined then that when the war was over and peace was declared we would attempt to rebuild or add some permanent additions to our school buildings, so we have taken up four school buildings that we think are most essential at this time. There is the Petworth School, where the limit of cost is $130,000. There has already been appropriated on that school $87,000, and we have added in this bill $20,000 additional. Unless that is done, virtually we will have to stop doing things at the Petworth School.

At the Burrville School the limit of cost is $60,000. Forty thousand dollars has already been appropriated, and they must have $10,000 more right now in order to continue the building at all.

At the Monroe School the limit of cost is $130,000. Ninety thousand dollars has been appropriated, and we give them $20,000 more. Perhaps we were a little bit niggardly——

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the committee know anything about what percentage of children of school age are required to attend school only for half a day?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I could not tell the gentleman. We did not have any hearings on that.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, it seems that we are not giving the District school facilities enough, and that instead of giving the amount required for the completion of the schools, to a partial amount of the limit of cost, you ought to allow the full cost and have the schools completed.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. We have given exactly what the commissioners said they wanted for those four school buildings.

Mr. MADDEN. Very well; then you ought to build some more schools.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. We are going to. There are 16 or 17 in contemplation, but we can not build them just now, at least the commissioners do not think it advisable, and we have taken these four buildings at their own figures.

Mr. MADDEN. There is money in the Treasury to the amount of $5,000,000. Why not take that and build some school buildings and give the children a chance to go to school?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I am afraid that the gentleman is now talking about the financial system of the District.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. Can the gentleman tell us how much has been appropriated to build different schools with a limit of cost so low that it is impossible under present conditions to complete them?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think there are 16 or 17.

Mr. MAPES. Does not the gentleman think that the committee in making these appropriations originally and fixing the limit of cost below what is advisable under present conditions either was in error or else the committee now ought to increase the limit of cost so that the buildings can be constructed?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. They ought to and they will, but when the limit of cost was fixed material was not as high as it is now.

Mr. MAPES. But if the buildings were needed at that time, they are much more needed now, with the greatly increased population in the District, and ought not the committee to change the limit of cost so that they can construct these buildings?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. We have 80 portable school buildings to take care of that situation.

Mr. MAPES. But they are not used. Answering the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], I can say that in some of the schools, to my personal knowledge, all of the pupils up to and including the fourth grade are prevented from going to school more than one-half day because of the lack of school facilities.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman realize that under the provisions of this bill the men who take up the ashes and the garbage and the trash of the District draw a great deal more money than do the several hundred school-teachers who are teaching the school children of this District?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I realize that to a certain extent, but I realize some of the men who have been taking up ashes have lost about $60,000 this year.

Mr. BLANTON. I am talking about the laborers who actually take them up, who are receiving more money than good school-teachers who are teaching the children in this District.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I agree with the gentleman in this, and I am glad to say we raised the school-teachers——

Mr. BLANTON. I want to raise them as high as I can.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The blue sky is a little too much for me. I want to raise the school-teachers, and we have raised them a little bit in here, and if the gentleman does not make the point of order it will go through.

Mr. BLANTON. It is so little.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Well, I do not know. The poorest paid school-teacher under this bill, if it becomes a law, will be $1,040 per school year.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will.

Mr. PLATT. Has it not been the settled policy of the Washington schools for quite a number of years not to require the little children of the first and second grades to go to school more than half a day? I know it was five or six years ago, and I think it is good policy.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I can not tell; we have had no hearings upon that at all. I think the old bill and this bill together contain between 40 and 50 new employments, and we have raised the salary of a few people in the old and new bill, but very little in this particular bill. I speak of the old bill as the one that my colleague [Mr. SISSON] and myself worked to get through the House last year, but which failed in the Senate. Now, we come to the question of salaries that my friend speaks of. This bill contains the following: Four hundred and ninety-eight school-teachers in class 4. The basic salary, according to this bill, is $850 each, which added to the $240 bonus makes $1,090. Five hundred and forty-three in class 3. The basic salary under this bill is $800. Add the $240 to that and you have $1,040. Three hundred and sixty-four in class 2. The basic salary under this bill is $800, nothing below that, all $800, and adding the $240 to it makes $1,040. Ninety in class 1. Eight hundred dollars basic salary; in other words, this bill raises the small-grade teachers—1,495 of them—that is, the kindergarten and low grades, those who were a few years ago getting $540. If this bill passes, the lowest one will get $1,040. In other words, we add $78,750 to the salaries of these low-grade teachers.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman will allow me, of course it does not add this $240.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is true, but they get the $240 bonus.

Mr. MADDEN. To the low-grade teachers. The act gives the $240 bonus to everybody in Government service receiving less than a certain salary.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I understand that very well. I am simply saying, in reference to the low-grade teachers not being paid very much, what they actually got out of the Treasury, and $1,040 is the lowest.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman know every clerk almost who has entered the Government service during the recent war has entered on a salary of at least $1,000 plus this bonus?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I know that very well, indeed, and the matter has been discussed and considered, and I will tell the gentleman this: They say—and it is not my argument—that they work six days in the week, and the little school-teacher, they say, works only five days——

Mr. BLANTON. Works seven.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. They say that; I do not say that.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes, sir.

Mr. FESS. I would like to know what is to become of the schools if we can not find a reconciliation between the salaries of men and women who do not need to prepare to do the work and get higher salaries than the teachers who spend much time to prepare after this expenditure?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will tell the gentleman what I think will be the result: Many, many, many of them will retire from teaching and go off to do other work.

Mr. FESS. What will become of the schools? [Applause.]

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Does not the gentleman know, without asking me—he is one of the best educators in the country—does not the gentleman know what the result will be?

Mr. FESS. I will say to my friend I feel——

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I agree before the gentleman answers.

Mr. FESS. I feel sure the gentleman is struck with the proposition I have in mind, and I ask this question seriously: With the scale of prices now ranging, what is to become of the class of men or women who want to go into school work and must spend a lot of time to get ready when other people who do not need to spend any time to get ready for the work get much higher rates than they do?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Of course, that is true, especially this new class of clerks that come under the war-work system. The teacher is partly cared for under the longevity system. Under the longevity system the school-teacher's salary keeps increasing every year, and therefore it is an inducement to hold him or her to the job. It is a good deal like the young man graduating from Annapolis. Every year he gets a fogy increase of salary, and by the time he is about 62 years old he is retired at $4,000 or $5,000 a year for the remainder of his life. The longevity system has a tendency to induce the teachers to remain. The prospect which longevity pay holds out to them in my humble belief will keep many, many of them on the job.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will yield.

Mr. MAPES. Under this longevity system what is the minimum the primary teacher will receive?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. For the primary teacher it is about $1,040, with the bonus.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Minnesota desires additional time——

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I would like to have three or four minutes.

Mr. SISSON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given five minutes additional, with five minutes additional on this side. I want to say this in justice——

Mr. WALSH. You can not do that in committee after the time has been agreed upon.

Mr. SISSON. That is true, but if nobody raises objection right now we can.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. If my friend from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] will give me, say, about two minutes, that will be all I want.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield two minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Ordinarily, my friends, I am against riders on appropriation bills; in fact, almost universally against them. Now, there are one or two little riders on this bill. We have in here a provision that the Commissioners of the District when they purchase automobiles or office furniture and supplies shall be authorized to purchase them from the general supply committee of the Army, and so forth. You have heard of that. In all the other branches of the Government there is a law which authorizes that to be done. The District of Columbia is the exception. Now, that is new legislation. Any man here can make a point of order on it. But we trust that you will not leave the District of Columbia out in the cold and simply say, technically speaking, that a point of order lies and that you will knock it out. We have added this in order to make it absolutely safe:

Provided, That this section shall not be construed to amend, alter, or repeal the Executive order of December 3, 1918, concerning the transfer of office material, supplies, and equipment in the District of Columbia falling into disuse because of the cessation of war activities.

In other words, we do not want to conflict with the Executive order of the administration in passing this legislation. We thought we would like to be very safe on the proposition. I do not believe any man here, when there are some automobiles and desks to be supplied, would object to them buying them from that supply bureau when they can buy them cheaper there than at any other place. But it is new legislation. If you want to knock it out on a point of order, all right.

And there are one or two other pieces of legislation like that. Now, the committee is in a hurry, because the officials of the District of Columbia, the departments here, need to have this bill passed.

And there is a great big question called the "half and half." I am not going to discuss it at this time. A portion of the House think one way and many others disagree with them. If anybody is going to raise that question now and spend half a day or a day on it, you are at liberty to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 1. Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution extending the right of suffrage to women.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON].

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to go into the details of this bill, but in explanation of the money appropriated in the bill which failed, for street improvement, it is fair to state that we did reappropriate all the money which had been carried in the previous bill, not a dollar of which had been expended in new streets, not because, in many instances, the new streets and the new pavements were not needed but because by order of the War Material Board of the Army the District of Columbia, like all other cities situated like the District of Columbia is situated, was not permitted to get any material of any kind, and, in addition to that, they were not permitted to get labor. So while the money was available for that use the District Commissioners could not use it. The war conditions at that time were such that when this bill was made up the subcommittee agreed unanimously with the commissioners in their recommendations simply to reappropriate all the money that had heretofore been appropriated for those purposes, and that was done.

Now, they have either used, or have contracted to be used, practically all of the reappropriated money; that is to say, the current law carries the money, and they are authorized to spend and contract up to the 1st day of July. That has been done.

Now, your committee gave to the District Commissioners some $350,000 for new work, which means that within 12 months there will be infinitely more money expended on the streets and more streets improved within the same length of time than in any other period in the history of the District of Columbia, so far as my knowledge goes. But that was due to the fact that in these days now, the closing days of this year, they are letting the contracts for the streets under the current law. So, as a matter of fact, while on its face the bill does not carry quite as much for streets annually as is usually carried, it is carrying at least 33⅓ per cent more for streets actually in one year than has ever been carried heretofore.

I want to say also just a word about the school-teachers' salaries. The current law for the first time increased the base pay of school-teachers. The lowest-paid school-teacher was $500. That is what is known as the longevity law, and before any Member of Congress will be able to understand anything about the longevity law he will have to go back to the act which was passed many years ago to ascertain just exactly its provisions and as to the classification of teachers. Last year we raised the base pay of teachers from $500, which was the lowest, to $750. We eliminated the three lower grades and put all four grades on the $750 basis. Now, this does not mean that $750 is the salary of the school-teachers, because every year that they teach a certain sum is added to that amount. But, gentlemen of the committee, under the current law the lowest pay that a teacher gets on entering any department of the school work is $870. That, plus the $120 now carried and the $120 bonus, makes $240, and the lowest-paid teacher will now enter school at this next session getting $1,140 on entrance.

Mr. SHREVE. Will the gentleman yield just at that point?

Mr. SISSON. I will yield only for a question, as I have but 10 minutes.

Mr. SHREVE. What is the pay of the teachers of the high schools?

Mr. SISSON. The salaries of the teachers of the high schools are also graded, and they also have longevity.

Mr. SHREVE. What amount will they draw this year?

Mr. SISSON. Class 6–B, I think, is that of the high-school teachers. They get $2,020, and then the extra $120 bonus, which makes $2,140.

Mr. SHREVE. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. SISSON. Now, I had heard so much complaint about the salaries of the school-teachers in the District of Columbia that I wrote to the schools of all of the cities of over 100,000 inhabitants in the United States, and I got from them reports as to the salaries which they paid, and with the longevity pay carried under the longevity law, together with the $250 raise which we gave last year, plus the $240 bonus this year, the base pay of the teachers of the District of Columbia is higher than that of nearly all of the cities of the United States, and there is only one city which for several years has paid as much, and that is the city of Boston. The city of Philadelphia last year, beginning this session, raised their base pay to about the Boston standard.

Now, those are the cities whose salaries are comparable with those of the District of Columbia. Therefore I am not willing that the statement shall go unchallenged here that the school-teachers of the District of Columbia have not been treated fairly by your present subcommittee, because if you will compare the salaries paid the District of Columbia teachers with those paid in the cities where the inhabitants themselves voluntarily vote the tax, you will find that the District of Columbia is in advance of nearly all the cities, and, with the exception of the city of Boston and the city of Philadelphia, is slightly above those of Cleveland and Detroit, which also pay good salaries.

Now, your subcommittee did not feel warranted in increasing the salaries, because a teacher goes in in many cities with what they call a probation period. Here they go on at $1,040; the next year they get $1,090, and so on for 10 years, gradually increasing each year that they remain in the service, and then when they go from the lower grades to the higher class—we call them "grades"—they do not lose that longevity, but the longevity which they have earned is added to the base pay of the next higher grade which they enter. It is, therefore, a most difficult problem for your subcommittee to tell how much money is needed to take care of what is called longevity pay. The school authorities and the Board of Education make the best estimates they can. But if a school-teacher dies or leaves the service and a new teacher comes in, that makes the longevity pay a little bit less than it would be otherwise, because the first school-teachers do not get longevity pay. It amounts, in round numbers, to something like $575,000, so that you can take a $500,000 fund and divide it up among the school-teachers in accordance with their longevity. Therefore this complaint on the part of the school-teachers in regard to being underpaid heretofore may be a just one; but if it is a just one, it is a criticism of the entire school system of America and is not local here in Washington, because we are along with Boston and Philadelphia, and in Philadelphia they did not pay the increased rate until last year, when they had a reorganization and a reclassification.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. VARE. Is it not a fact that a beginner at $1,040 in the District of Columbia receives a salary larger than any beginner elsewhere?

Mr. SISSON. That is true. Counting the bonus of $240 this year, they get even a higher salary than in Boston or Philadelphia. But I am speaking of what was carried in the current law by the committee. We put it right up to the top notch. For that reason I felt that school-teachers' salaries were reasonable, and I shall not raise any complaint. But I do not believe that the raise which the subcommittee and the full committee put into this bill, as compared with the current law, was justified as compared with other similar salaries paid elsewhere throughout the United States.

Now, I want to say one word with reference to school buildings.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. SISSON. I wanted just two minutes to explain the school-building items, but I can do that under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 25 minutes to my colleague from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, at the outset I ask leave to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have impatiently waited up to this time, after nearly 30 hours have elapsed, for some older and abler Member of this House to properly denounce one of the most atrocious and dastardly crimes that has ever been attempted in this Republic. I have waited for weeks, hoping that some older Member of this Congress would take the floor and properly denounce the dastardly attack that several weeks ago was made upon that former little giant of this House, our lamented Hon. John L. Burnett, of Alabama, who probably would be among us now, giving us his good advice and counsel, had it not been for the probable shock caused by the deadly, dastardly, cowardly anarchist bomb that was sent into his household at the time so many others were sent through the United States mail from one side of the United States to the other.

Time and again on the floor of this House recently I have warned this Congress of the fact that there were harbored under this Government, by groups of men in organizations, these vicious anarchistic tendencies. I noticed in the papers a denial immediately on behalf of the organizations to which I referred, denying that they had any connection with deadly bombs placed on the front doorstep of a Cabinet officer of the United States in the dead hour of night. Would you expect a murderer to admit his crime?

I realize, when I call attention to the fact that these organizations harbor such things, there are thousands of good men, loyal and patriotic citizens of this country—even Members of Congress, loyal and big men they are—who are members of organized labor unions of this land, and who do not approve of such actions. But I have warned this Congress heretofore that, no matter how many good men there are in unions, the fact remains to-day that it is in the unions of this country, it is among organized labor in this country, that anarchists find harbor and succor and protection.

I call attention to the warning I gave this Congress May 23, 1919, published in the Appendix to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, wherein I recited the partial war record of labor unions, and facts clearly demonstrating that they were dominated by the radical and vicious element, and wherein I challenged Mr. Samuel Gompers and the American Federation of Labor to disprove any of such statements, to wit:

"Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, when my good friend from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] stated that thousands of our soldiers have been held idle in the camps of this country solely because officers afraid of losing their jobs refused to discharge many worthy cases I agreed with him as far as he went, but suggested another reason why they have been held, to wit, that in Texas and elsewhere Mr. Samuel Gompers, the president and master of the American Federation of Labor, stated that he and organized labor would never stand for war-time wage schedules to be reduced one cent, and that Mr. Gompers's opposition to speedy demobilization had greatly influenced the holding of the boys in the camps of this country.

"In the closing hours of the Sixty-fifth Congress I called attention to the fact that our labor unions had permitted Socialism and Bolshevism to dominate and use them as cat's paws, and, regardless of how much and often he preached to the contrary, Mr. Gompers allowed such domination to prevail, and has not purged such organizations of such viciousness. I further called attention to the fact of organized labor's partial war record, and stated that the time had come when Congress must decide whether this Government is to be run in the interests equally of the 110,000,000 people of this Republic or whether it is to be selfishly run by Mr. Gompers in the class interest of the 3,000,000 members of labor unions.

"In a speech in Texas I repeated such statements, following which, in a published interview, Mr. Gompers, without a single denial, stated: 'That I confessed an utter incapacity of understanding the plainest proposition of right, justice, freedom, and democracy.'

"Comparing Mr. Gompers's democracy with my own, he represents only 3,000,000 people, whose union slogan is 'For ourselves only,' while I have deeply at heart the welfare and interests equally not only of Mr. Gompers's men but also of the other 107,000,000 people of the United States of America.

"The Dallas Central Labor Council, the crafts at Cleburne, Tex., and others have tried to excuse this war record by partial denials, and by calling attention to the fact that some members of unions loyally served in France, and wanting to know where I was, and then asserting that I was busy attending banquets and theater parties.

"Union members who during the war profited by raids on the Public Treasury can not hide now behind the patriotism of member-soldiers or excuse themselves by beclouding the record. The issue is too vital. The record must be kept straight.

"I represent no interests other than the welfare of my constituents generally, and have never received one penny contribution, campaign or otherwise, from any source. I have many unions in my district, in the cities of Abilene, Baird, Sweetwater, Ballinger, Coleman, Cisco, Ranger, Eastland, Strawn, Mineral Wells, Comanche, Brownwood Lampasas, Llano, San Saba, Brady, and other places. Nevertheless I have lately paid out of my own pocket nearly a thousand dollars for printing, addressing, and mailing to them these criticisms.

"Raised on a farm, having delivered groceries in the back door of practically every home in Austin, and by keeping books at night earning every dollar expended for five years' training at my State university, I could not be unfriendly to laborers. I heartily favor lawful unions. I heartily favor the labor principles in the peace treaty, namely: 'Labor is no commodity; association for lawful purposes; adequate wage; 8-hour day and 48-hour week; 1 rest day; abolition of child labor; equal pay for men and women doing work of equal value; equitable economic treatment; and female inspectors.' No fair-minded person would demand less or would demand more.

"Any system is vicious that destroys individual competitive efficiency and incites lazy, inefficient, indifferent service upheld by force. Every doctor, lawyer, preacher, teacher, farmer, Congressman, officer, banker, merchant, and unorganized laborer succeeds only when in honest competition he renders the most efficient service of greatest value to the public. To hold their positions and advance their incomes members of unions have ceased to rely upon individual skill and efficient service, but now collectively depend almost entirely upon Mr. Gompers, force, and anarchy. If unions will abolish strikes, picketing, boycotts, force, disregard of law, and anarchy, I will be their strongest friend, but without such reform I am against them forever and eternally. Now, to correct the record. Unions may boast they have done this or that for the war, but I challenge Mr. Gompers to disprove any of the following well-known facts:

"The Railroad Administration certifies that the raises demanded by the four great brotherhoods and granted to the railroad employees by Director McAdoo approximated $754,811,000; that the additional raises later demanded of and granted by Director Hines approximated $67,500,000, aggregating $822,311,000 raises in salaries (during war) to 400,000 employees (far from trenches); that in 1917 passenger conductors received $135 to $165 per month, plus overtime, but with the raises they now receive an average of $180 per month plus time and a half for all time they put in over eight hours a day and are granted one day off each week.

"Duties of a passenger conductor are not very laborious, unpleasant, or hazardous. Did not the Government require more sacrifice of the soldier to fight on foreign soil, sometimes 24 hours per day in cootie-infested trenches, knee deep in mud, for $33 per month and keep, than it required of the passenger conductor to continue working 8 hours per day 6 days a week during the war for $135 to $165, plus overtime, per month? We can not forget the brotherhoods' threat to tie up every railroad in the United States while in a death struggle we were rescuing the world. No highwayman ever drew a deadlier weapon or made a deadlier threat. No wonder after throwing up his hands and delivering over the $754,811,000 the honest statesman McAdoo resigned. We can not forget the later threat or revolution. No wonder Director Hines handed over the additional $67,500,000. But, alas, this $822,311,000 is paid by the unorganized bleeding public. Has our service improved over 1917? The service is good, bad, or indifferent, just as the employees will it. Employees make the service. Unions furnish the employees. If the service is good, credit unions; if bad, hold unions responsible.

"The department certifies that the raises granted to telegraph employees aggregate $3,300,867. Telephone raises are now being determined, yet in Indiana union strikers attempted to chase poor helpless work girls off the roofs of buildings. And telegraphers are now threatening a nation-wide strike.

"While every raise granted to postal employees was justly merited, still could not the demand have waited for peace? Upon criticism being made that it takes an extra day or two longer than necessary for New York mail to reach Washington, Mr. Gompers condemned the whole Postal Service. Who performs the Postal Service? From the time such letters are posted until they are delivered they are handled by members of unions. They are collected, stamped, distributed, bagged, transported, handled, and delivered by unions. If the service is good, the unions deserve the credit. If the service is bad, the unions should be held responsible for it.

"During the war unions have forced wage schedules to a maximum of $1.25 per hour plus time and a half for over eight hours—more than the governor of Texas receives, more than circuit judges in Texas receive. Unions accomplished this by striking 6,000 times during the war, each averaging 18 days. The armistice was signed November 11. This is May. Yet several hundred thousand soldiers have been held idle in camps without excuse. Why? Simply because Mr. Gompers threatened in Texas and elsewhere he would not permit any reduction in war-time wage schedules. With Mr. Gompers against speedy demobilization, it is easy to understand why thousands of our soldiers have been held absolutely idle in the camps of this country. He said that he and unions would not stand for any reduction. Speedy demobilization would tend to reduce. Therefore there could be no speedy demobilization without disaster to the Republic, if Mr. Gompers's threat meant anything. Yet one county in my district, Runnels, with many of its boys yet in camps, is begging for 1,000 laborers to harvest the wheat. I introduced on the day this Congress met a bill to promptly discharge from the service upon application every man physically fit whose purpose when enlisting was to serve only for the duration of the war. I hope that it will be promptly passed.

"Exclusive of all postal and railroad employees elsewhere provided for, unions demanded a blanket bonus of $120 for each of the 240,000 Government clerks. Congress obeyed and granted the $120 bonus, but required such clerks to work eight instead of only seven hours per day. Mr. Gompers said it was 'damnable,' although the eight-hour day was still a plank in the union platform. He demanded its veto. Unions published threats to march on the Capitol and to cripple the Government by walking out. President Wilson sized up the situation and realized that the peril menaced the whole world, hence vetoed the eight hours. These 240,000 clerks, many occupying positions vacated by soldiers and many industrially exempt, took their $120 bonus and continued to work only seven hours. Without such bonus these clerks drew salaries up to $2,500 per year, paid twice a month. Were unions satisfied? They later demanded a blanket $240 bonus for the next year. Congress promptly granted it, giving to each of these 240,000 clerks a $240 bonus, and they still work seven hours. Many receive large salaries from private concerns for work after 5 p. m. They enjoy all the pleasures of Washington, work in comfortable buildings, with ice water and electric fans, are allowed 30 days' vacation on full pay, 30 days additional on doctor's certificate with full pay, all 52 Sundays, all legal holidays, half Saturdays in summer, and all special occasions; some drive their own automobiles, wear the finest tailored clothes, and own their own homes. And they are now arranging to demand a still larger bonus when Congress meets.

"Yet on April 25, 1919, when Maj. Gerow requested some of the clerks in the Zone Finance Division of the War Department to work a little overtime in order to more promptly mail out the little $60 bonus checks granted to soldiers, some of these clerks struck against their Government and walked out and ceased to function when their Government most needed their services.

"Last July Gen. Crowder said it would be unnecessary to draft boys, as he was going to make every man either work or fight. Mr. Gompers defied him, threatening that if the 'work-or-fight' order was applied to them, unions would not stand it. Gen. Crowder then requested and Congress drafted 670,000 18-year-old boys, costing millions in educational expenses alone.

"The Bolshevik Lenin threatens death to captive Americans unless we release Mooney. Unions threaten disastrous strikes if we do not comply.

"With other death threats, Lenin from Russia demands Debs's release. Our unions threaten ruinous strikes unless we comply.

"Forty-five States have ratified national prohibition. It is a part of the fundamental law of the land; yet our unions threaten a nation-wide strike against our Constitution. A majority of union members are nonusers, yet unions threaten 'no liquor no work.' Chicago's 175 unions demand that Congress repeal prohibition.

"And to avert direful calamity during his enforced absence in Europe, the President has been influenced to ask that of Congress which Congress will never do—repeal any portion of the prohibition laws, which are the result of 40 years' tireless effort.

"The Washington school board lately suspended a teacher for teaching Bolshevism in the public schools. Unions are now demanding her reinstatement. The penalty was light, for the board merely suspended such teacher for a week only. If she was teaching Bolshevism to the children of this Nation's Capital, instead of being suspended she should have been discharged.

"Since March 11, 1919, unions have paid a horde of barkers $25 per week to picket the Raleigh Hotel, and they stand at each entrance to this hotel and defiantly insult every man, woman, and child who enters by telling them that they are 'not decent' as they are patronizing a 'scab' hotel.

"[News item, Evening Star, Washington, D. C., Apr. 10, 1919.]

"PICKET IS FINED $25 ON WOMAN'S CHARGE—MRS. ROUSE RESENTED REMARKS AS SHE WAS LEAVING HOTEL RALEIGH.

"Hugh R. Truelove, a newcomer to Washington, making his home at 920 E Street and employed, he says, by the striking waiters as one of the pickets of that organization fighting the Hotel Raleigh, arrested April 7 and charged with making indecent and threatening remarks to patrons of the hotel, was tried and convicted in the District of Columbia branch of the police court to-day and sentenced by Judge John P. McMahon to pay a fine of $25.

"The complainant in the case was Mrs. Ethel Rouse, a member of the College Woman's Community at Lutherville, Md., who testified that she, in company with her husband and two girls associated with her in the community work, went to the Hotel Raleigh for lunch, and when leaving the hotel Truelove insulted her and her party by remarking, 'Decent people no longer patronize the Hotel Raleigh. If you were decent you would not patronize the hotel.'

"Truelove in his defense said that he was employed by the striking waiters at $25 a week to stand at the main entrance of the hotel and make certain stereotyped remarks to all patrons of the hotel entering or leaving the building, among those set remarks being the one he was charged with applying to Mrs. Rouse and her friends.

"I am informed that these striking waiters, besides their wages paid and wholesome food furnished them by the hotel, received tips from patrons as high as $6 to $8 per day, and that some of them would hardly notice you if you offered them a tip of less than 50 cents. The following is one of the 16 demands made of the hotel by the union:

"Steady and extra waiters shall have at each meal the choice of at least one roast, one entree, with an additional fish entree on fast days, also soup, potatoes, one vegetable, coffee, tea, or milk, bread and butter, and one dessert. A wholesome breakfast shall also be served. No one kind of roast or entree may be served more than once in any four consecutive days.

"Every good woman who enters this hotel is subjected to insult by having forced in her hand a vicious cartoon card and told she is entering a scab hotel. Unions here have lately so picketed 23 merchants in Washington. Why? Because Americans in the Capital of the American Republic refused to bow to unreasonable autocratic union demands.

"The American Federation of Labor has publicly threatened to put out of Congress every Member who has dared to disobey Mr. Gompers. Because duty impelled, I have taken my life, political and otherwise, in my hands by warning my people of existing facts; the Carmen's District Council of Kansas City notified me April 26 that it was urging the brotherhood for the State of Texas to replace me with a friend to unions.

"From the four corners of the United States I have filled my wastebasket with anonymous threats apprising me of the innumerable kinds of deaths that will befall me and my family if I ever again open my mouth against unions. One from Altoona, Pa., advised me that the brotherhood would never let me escape, as I had been marked for special suffering. Another from Altoona, in the name of the 10,000 members of the railroad brotherhood there, calls me 'a dirty, low-lived, copperheaded, Confederate dog surviving 61–65.' Another from Altoona assures me that next year unions will pick a soldier in my district to use in ridding Congress of me. The Fort Worth Record belittles me with irony and ridicule. In defense of unions the Comanche Enterprise threatens me with political destruction and questions my prohibition record, notwithstanding during 20 years I have made several hundred prohibition speeches, have helped to dry numerous Texas counties, and of the Texas delegation in the Sixty-fifth Congress I was the only Congressman who spoke for national prohibition, and numerous prohibition bills were introduced by me.

"I have before me a printed application for membership in the International Typographical Union from an unorganized town. It requires the obligation to be sworn to by the applicant before an officer qualified to administer oaths. I copy from said obligation the following:

"That my fidelity to the union and my duty to the members thereof shall in no sense be interfered with by any allegiance that I may now or hereafter owe to any other organization, social, political, or religious, secret or otherwise.

"Thus union is placed before God and country.

"Lately in New York Dr. Scott Nearing publicly urged a bloody revolution against the United States; 3,000 members of various unions, of the most radical type it is true, applauded.

"In the Pythian Temple here in Washington on May-day eve, under the auspices of the Fur Workers Union et al., and with Government officers present, bloody revolution against the United States Government was publicly preached and applauded, the red flag anthem was sung, and the following was embraced in resolutions adopted:

"Labor now knows its strength. Labor now makes demands. And these demands are heard; they must be heard, for labor, in its might, has learned to achieve for labor, and labor's word is fast becoming law.

"And concerning this meeting on May-day eve the Washington Star said:

"The spirit of anarchy, nihilism, Bolshevism, sabotage, and defiance of vested power and authority in Government dominated the assembly.

"I realize that many, many honest, upright, loyal, patriotic, deserving citizens in unions do not approve. Yet the vicious element controls unions. Socialism and Bolshevism are making catspaws of unions. The revolutionists of Seattle were members of unions. I. W. W.'s are unbridled unionists, even if they are disowned by Mr. Gompers. Several hundred thousand union men are foreigners and can not speak English. Yet, when that little, fearless giant, Congressman Burnett, proposed a proper immigration measure to keep anarchists in Europe and Asia he was sent a deadly bomb through the United States mails.

"Does the public longer wonder why we Congressmen hesitate to disobey Mr. Gompers? Has the public ever received a death bomb specially prepared and sent to kill a family? Verily, the tail is wagging the dog. Verily, Mr. Gompers has us all buffaloed. Three million union men organized have under duress and are slave driving the other 107,000,000 unorganized peoples of the United States.

"Newspapers are hog tied. Not a merchant, banker, lawyer, doctor, preacher, or legislator can open his mouth without an attempt to ruin him. What is the remedy? There is only one. The other 107,000,000 people must organize to properly control unions.

"The Dallas Council properly asks where I was during the crisis, but unjustly accuses me of being inattentive to duty and 'gloriously entertained with banquets and theater parties.' Since war began I have devoted to the cause every moment of my time, every dollar of my salary above a meager living, and every dollar I possessed. I have even sacrificed my home. Since the adjournment of Congress, working both a day shift and a night shift, I have put in from 12 to 16 hours per day trying to alleviate the sufferings of the people of my country. Yet, when compared with the sacrifice made by our brave soldiers both in France and in the camps of this country, I have done nothing."

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I refuse to yield, Mr. Chairman. I have only 25 minutes in which to discuss a big subject.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman refuses to yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Right now I do. If I had more time I would gladly yield to the distinguished and able gentleman from Ohio.

Neither Mr. Gompers nor the American Federation of Labor, nor anyone for them, has denied or disapproved any of my assertions.

Has anyone denied that when Dr. Scott Nearing preached revolution against the Government of the United States there were 3,000 members of unions applauding him? When he preached revolution against our Government he was applauded by 3,000 men, every one of whom was a member of some union. Has anyone denied that Lenin, from Russia, the admitted

Bolshevik leader of anarchy, sent a notice to this Government that if the United States does not release Debs he will shoot captive Americans, and that we find unions of the United States saying, "Comply with Lenin's request or we will call a strike that will shatter the United States from San Francisco to Florida"? Has anyone denied that Lenin, from Russia, sent us a notice, "Unless you release Mooney," the convicted bomb thrower of San Francisco, who murderously caused a score of innocent people to lose their lives, "we will shoot captive Americans that we hold at this time," and that we find some of the unions of this country saying, "Comply with Lenin's request or we will turn this Government upside down with a nation-wide strike"? Has anyone denied that here in the Nation's Capital, here in Washington on May-day eve, a meeting was held in the Pythian Temple, if you please, under the auspices of the Fur Workers' Union and others, in the presence of secret-service men of this Government, dominated by a bunch of anarchists, nearly every one of whom were members of unions, and that they sang the red-flag anthem, and they preached bloody revolution openly against this Government and against the flag? And we men in Congress have never opened our mouths about it. Why? Echo answers, "Why?"

On the front page of the Washington Post yesterday morning, on the front page of the Washington Times that came to us at noon yesterday, and on the front page of the Washington Star that came to us yesterday was a story telling us that a deadly bomb at the dark hour of midnight had been placed upon the front doorstep of your Attorney General. Those papers carried at the same time and on the same front page the intelligence that on that very night there had met in Washington representatives from all the unions in this city, many of them Government employees, who were addressed by the wife of this convicted bomb thrower of California. Not a man in this Congress opened his mouth. Why, may I ask? Have you been getting the same anonymous letters that I have been getting? The following appeared in the Washington Post:

GREAT "WET" PROTEST—CENTRAL LABOR UNION TO MASS 50,000 AT CAPITOL JUNE 14.

Plans for a monster demonstration by organized labor of Washington in front of the Capitol on Flag Day to protest against "war-time" prohibition and legislation preventing the manufacture of 2¾ per cent beer are nearing completion, it was announced at the meeting last night of the Central Labor Union at Musicians' Hall, 1006 E Street NW. Pledges to participate in the mass protest have been received by the central body from every labor union in the District. Some organizations have adopted resolutions imposing fines upon members who fail to take part.

MRS. MOONEY SPEAKS.

Mrs. Rena Mooney, who is touring the country and speaking before all central labor bodies in behalf of her husband, Thomas Mooney, and others convicted in connection with the bomb-plot explosion during the preparedness parade in San Francisco in 1916, addressed the meeting.

The following is the item appearing in the Washington Times:

LABOR TO HOLD WET RALLY HERE JUNE 14.

Organized labor will stage a monster demonstration against prohibition and legislation affecting the manufacture of 2¾ per cent beer in front of the Capitol on Flag Day—June 14. Plans toward this end were furthered last night at a meeting of the Central Labor Union in Musicians' Hall, 1006 E Street NW. Mrs. Rena Mooney, wife of Thomas Mooney, who was convicted of bomb throwing in the San Francisco preparedness parade in 1916, addressed the meeting.

Pledges to participate in the demonstration are being received by the central body from every labor union of the District. Some local labor organizations will impose fines on members who fail to take part, it was announced.

Hence it can not be denied that on the very night a murderous assassin wrecked many buildings in Washington by exploding a deadly bomb at the residence of the Attorney General of the United States the labor unions of Washington, embracing employees of the United States Government, entertained Mrs. Mooney, the wife of a convicted bomb thrower now serving his just sentence. What was her mission? For what purpose was she granted an audience? Is it not well known that she is now appealing to unions to go behind the law, behind the judgments of courts, behind the mandates of society and force the release of her felon husband? Yet some Government employees give a ready ear. While our newspapers announce to us that our Government is turning heaven and earth upside down to hunt out and arrest these late murderous conspirators against Government, such newspapers in the same issue advise us that the federated unions of Washington, embracing Government employees, have entertained the wife of a convicted bomb thrower, who by such audience and hearing is at least influenced to believe that such unions will help her to evade the law and free the murderer. Why the necessity of going to the trouble and expense of ferreting out the crime and arresting and convicting such criminals if unions are to undo justice and help criminals to escape?

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I will not yield now.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman says no Member of Congress opened his mouth. I am a new Member, but I should like to open my mouth to resent the statement of the gentleman that the men he names are all union men.

Mr. BLANTON. I hope when you open your mouth again you will tell these anarchists—I do not care whether they are labor unionists or not—that if they do not stop their practices we will hang them as high as Haman, and I hope you tell Mr. Gompers that if he does not purge his labor unions of anarchy and disregard of law that Congress, representing the people, will do it for him. They have been sending me anonymous letters from all over the United States, telling me that if I ever opened my mouth against the unions again what would happen to me and my family. Do you think they believe they can scare a man who comes from west Texas? [Laughter.] I have lived in west Texas too long to be scared by a murderous anarchist.

What did the Washington Star say about this Pythian Temple meeting in Washington which occurred on May-day eve? After they met, they passed the following resolution:

Labor now knows its strength. Labor now makes demands. And those demands are heard—they must be heard—for labor in its might has learned to achieve for labor, and labor's word is fast becoming law.

Concerning this meeting the Washington Star said:

The spirit of anarchy, nihilism, Bolshevism, sabotage, and defiance of vested law and authority in government dominated the whole assemblage.

Not a man in this Congress has raised his voice against it. Why? I will tell you. Mr. Gompers has got us all buffaloed. Why, when the Keating banquet was held here, shortly after the adjournment of Congress, there appeared in the Washington Star the next day the following threat to Congressmen from the American Federation of Labor, if you please, the following threat from its secretary, Mr. Morrison, who says that the American Federation of Labor is going to put out of Congress every man who refuses to obey the mandate of Samuel Gompers. Is that what has kept our tongues tied, or is it the threat of bombs like those that came into the home of our Hon. John L. Burnett, the little giant from Alabama?

I wish my friend, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] was here. I want him to go back to the good people of Fayette County, Franklin County, Lamar County, Marion County, Pickens County, Winston County, and Walker County, in his district, and apologize to his splendid constituency for jumping on me the other day because I attempted to tell the people the facts connected with organized labor. My good Alabama friend is too good a man and too able a Representative to indorse the evils I am condemning. Let me repeat again Secretary Morrison's threat, as it appeared in the Washington Star, to wit:

An active campaign is to be conducted by organized labor throughout the Nation to defeat Members of Congress who have shown themselves to be the foes of labor and who are responsible for the failure to deal with unemployment problems during the last session. Strong and determined efforts will be made to elect men carrying union cards or otherwise known to be friends of labor.

This was divulged last night by Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor, who was one of the principal speakers at the testimonial banquet given to Edward Keating, retiring Member of Congress from Colorado, by the joint conference retirement committee representing various organizations of Government employees.

In a highly spirited speech Secretary Morrison declared organized labor knows its friends and enemies, and that persistent warfare is to be waged against the latter. Already plans for a general campaign have been discussed by officers of the federation. He said that organizations want to see more trade-unionists in both branches of Congress. He severely scored those legislators who have failed to support legislation beneficial to the working classes of America.

Go down here to the Raleigh Hotel in Washington, take your wife into the main entrance of that hotel, and you will find down there right now paid barkers—paid $25 a week by unions here in Washington—to stand there at the main entrances and tell your wife, and every other good woman who enters there, that she is not decent, that she is going into a scab hotel, that she is not decent if she goes there. If one of them were to attempt to tell a man or woman in my district a thing of that kind, do you know what would happen to him? Let me again call your attention to the report of such matter in our daily press, to wit:

PICKET IS FINED $25 ON WOMAN'S CHARGE—MRS. ROUSE RESENTED REMARKS AS SHE WAS LEAVING HOTEL RALEIGH.

Hugh R. Truelove, a newcomer to Washington, making his home at 929 E Street, and employed, he says, by the striking waiters as one of the pickets of that organization fighting the Hotel Raleigh, arrested April 7 and charged with making indecent and threatening remarks to patrons of the hotel, was tried and convicted in the District of Columbia branch of the police court to-day and sentenced by Judge John P. McMahon to pay a fine of $25.

The complainant in the case was Mrs. Ethel Rouse, a member of the College Woman's Community at Lutherville, Md., who testified that she, in company with her husband and two girls associated with her in the community work, went to the Hotel Raleigh for lunch, and when leaving the hotel Truelove insulted her and her party by remarking, "Decent people no longer patronize the Hotel Raleigh. If you were decent you would not patronize the hotel."

Truelove, in his defense, said that he was employed by the striking waiters at $25 a week to stand at the main entrance of the hotel and make certain stereotyped remarks to all patrons of the hotel entering or leaving the building, among those set remarks being the one he was charged with applying to Mrs. Rouse and her friends.

And also let me again call your attention to the statement made by Manager Weston that besides the wages and good and wholesome food furnished these striking waiters they had been making in tips from six to eight dollars per day, and would hardly give you any service for a tip under 50 cents; and also that, among their many demands, they demanded the following:

Steady and extra waiters shall have at each meal the choice of at least one roast, one entrée, with an additional fish entrée on fast days; also soup, potatoes, one vegetable, coffee, tea, or milk, bread and butter, and one dessert. A wholesome breakfast shall also be served. No one kind of roast or entrée may be served more than once in any four consecutive days.

This is an everlasting disgrace to Washington, and to the United States, and to America, and to civilization, and you know it as well as I do. Why do not we Members of Congress wake up and stop it? The reason that it is permitted by the police of Washington is because you Republicans in power and we Democrats, who ought to be, do not take the proper action to put it out of business. Why, it would destroy the business enterprise of almost any person or aggregation of persons. I am glad that the Raleigh is so well established that they can not ruin it. They can not hurt the Raleigh. We fellows have been coming here to the Raleigh for 20 years before we came to Congress. They could not hurt it, but they can keep some of the Congressmen away from there. You remember before this Congress met the unions sent to every Member of Congress a letter saying, "Don't you go to the Raleigh Hotel." How many of you obeyed the mandate in that letter? Here is one who has not obeyed it. Here is one that can look them square in the eye and say, "When you tell me to do this or that, I will tell you to go to hell." I shall do my duty. That is the kind of a man I am. That is what my people sent me here to tell them.

Disregard of law? These paid barkers are paid to disregard the law. What regard for law have they when they tell a good woman she is not decent simply because she prefers to patronize the Raleigh Hotel? The unions have gotten beyond the control of Mr. Gompers and of the good men in unions, even if he and they would control them. The vicious are in the saddle.

Why, read the following notice in this afternoon's paper:

ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND WETS TO BE IN PARADE HERE.

More than 100,000 men and women workers, representing all parts of the country, are to participate in the huge antiprohibition demonstration before Congress on Flag Day, June 14. Those in the parade will not be marching as individuals, according to the officials of the American Federation of Labor, who are completing plans for the demonstration, but will march as representatives of millions of workers all through the United States who are solidly opposed to the enforcement of the war-time prohibition bill in as far as it applies to light wines and beer.

Labor Congressmen will address the workers from the steps of the Capitol. The demonstration will be under the auspices of the Central Labor Union.

What is a labor Congressman? What do they mean by labor Congressmen? Why, we are all for labor and for lawful labor unions. Have we any Congressmen here who belong to unions? I say, no; there are no such men here. The membership of this body are honorable men, are for labor and lawful unions, but belong to no class or organization. Why should the good men who belong to the unions here in Washington, and who may favor prohibition and not want its repeal, be fined for not parading on the 14th against prohibition? The papers said yesterday that such members would be fined. On page 30 of the McClure Magazine for June Mr. Gompers says that—

To stop them, deliberately and by force, from the use of their beer and wine is as unjust as it would be for a crowd of vegetarians to get together and pass a law to stop you and me from eating meat.

That is an old academic question, thrashed out and decided to the contrary nearly 50 years ago. Yet, Mr. Gompers intimates that if we take away their beer and wine, laborers may turn into Bolshevists. I wish that my good friend from Georgia [Mr. UPSHAW] would carefully digest the above, and then go back to Atlanta and explain why it is that he takes the floor in defense of unions when I point out the things they should purge their organizations of. Every State in the Union, except the three little ones, have ratified national prohibition. I told you the other day that I can not follow my beloved President when he asks me to repeal prohibition, as good a Democrat as I am. [Applause.]

Now, when the war was going on we found the railroad conductors on passenger trains, who did little work, and even had to have an auditor to go with them to take up the tickets. These conductors who were getting $135 to $165 a month plus time and a half for all time put in over eight hours and getting one day off each week, more than we paid the boys who were sent to the trenches of France, who stood fighting for 24 hours in trenches knee deep in the mud, cootie infested, fighting like the devil to save the country—we find 400,000 railroad men, organized like no organization was ever perfected before, coming to the Government in our hour of need and insisting that if we do not give them $754,000,000 right now in cash they are going to ruin us and going to tie up the railroads. They said: "We will tie up the railroads from Alaska to Florida."

Mr. McAdoo, statesman like he was, did like you and I would have done. When a highwayman pulls a pistol or a gun on you—we west Texas fellows do not usually let them get the drop on us—but if they do get the drop on us we throw up our hands. Mr. McAdoo did like you or I would have done and west Texas would do when the other fellow gets the drop on us, and said "take the money."

But he was honest, for when he turned the $754,000,000 over he resigned. Then they came to Mr. Hines, and they said: "If you do not give us $67,500,000 more, we will cause a revolution in this country." Mr. Hines did what we would have done. He handed over the money. That $822,000,000 came out of the pockets of the people of the United States. It came out of the pockets of the bleeding public of the United States. Talk about $10 shoes! Do you know why there are $10 shoes and $12 shoes? It is because these laborers, organized in these cities, are getting $1.25 an hour. The manufacturers of Hannan and Nettleton and Clapp and other shoes which you purchase for $12 or $15 do not make any more than they did 10 years ago when you bought those shoes for $5. It all goes into the pockets of organized labor. Maybe they deserve it.

The Rochester Herald of Thursday, April 10, 1919, published the startling notice that the local electrical union would thenceforth demand the following:

That its journeymen receive $9 per day of six hours; that its foremen of five or more men receive $10.50 per day of six hours; and that all time over that was to be paid for at the rate of $3 per hour; that on Saturday they would work only three hours, yet receive a full day's wages; that when they worked in rain or snow they would receive $18 per day for six hours.

The Washington Times yesterday said editorially that the time had come when laborers would work six hours for their employer, six hours for themselves, have eight hours for sleep and four for pleasure. Therein lies part of the vice. They clamor for shorter hours and higher wages only to do double employment and receive double salaries, just as is being done now by thousands of Government employees here in Washington who work seven hours for the Government and a great part of their time for private firms and corporations. If through strikes and force and disregard of law unions can force $9 a day for six hours, they can force $18 for three hours, and if railroad conductors on passenger trains can in war time force $180 per month plus time and a half for all time over eight hours and over six days a week they can force a salary of $500 for six hours with treble for overtime. The Board of Conciliation under such circumstances is a farce, and we ought to do away with it and save the thousands of dollars we spend on it each year.

Six thousand strikes in war time—a holdup of the people, and I say that the time has come for the tail to quit wagging the dog. It has been wagging the dog too long. Every extra dollar obtained by strikes has come out of the unorganized public. When you fellows wake up and find that the other 107,000,000 unorganized people of this Government have awakened to this situation, and they find that their money has been going to 3,000,000 organized men who have been slave driving them and this Government—when you find that out you are going to be just as afraid of the voice of the 107,000,000 people as we are now afraid of the voice of Morrison, when he tells us in the Washington papers that he is going to put us out of Congress if we do not obey. He will not beat me out of Congress, I promise you that. I have labor unions all over my district, but they have confidence in me. The laboring people in my district know that I am a better friend to them now than these Congressmen who get up on the floor and preach unionism and say they believe in strikes and force, and when you say that it is a perversion of the oath you took under the Constitution of this Government. I am not afraid of them. They are not going to beat me out of my district. I beat three men the last time, one of them an ex-Member of Congress and two legislators, by 15,000 majority, and much of the majority was made up of laboring men, and I will do it again. But if I have to be beaten, if they put a bomb under me to-night, Mr. Chairman and colleagues, I am ready to face my Maker and say, "God, my witness, I have done my duty in warning my colleagues of this awful thing that is grappling at the throat of our Republic."

But what happened to the late lamented Mr. Borland, from Missouri, will not happen to me. This man made a good fight and deserved to win, and I believe that he would still be living if his heart had not been broken by the fight Mr. Gompers and organized labor made upon him. They claim his defeat and gloat over it. Here is the kind of literature they used in Colorado. Here is one of their circulars:

To organized labor and its friends:

Ben C. Hilliard, Democratic candidate for Congress, is a friend of organized labor. He has established the workday system in the Denver schools, and all mechanical work is being done by organized labor.

The President of the United States has proven himself a friend of organized labor. He deserves a Congressman who will stand with him for progressive legislation.

Hilliard's opponent is an officer with the State militia.

Let us, my dear colleagues, do full justice to the unions of our country, see that they receive every consideration to which they are entitled, put into execution every labor principle contained in the peace treaty, but at the same time wake up and tell unions and tell Mr. Gompers that they must purge themselves of lawlessness and anarchy, for this Government must be run in the interest and welfare of all the 110,000,000 people alike if we follow the mandates of the Father of our Country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums are appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia to the extent that they are sufficient therefor and the remainder out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, but the amount to be paid from the Treasury of the United States shall in no event be as much as one-half of said expenses, in full for the following expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, except amounts to pay the interest and sinking fund on the funded debt of said District, of which amounts one half is appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, namely.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the paragraph. I do not care to discuss it at length, except to point out that it is clearly a change of the statute of June 11, 1878, which fixes the proportion that Congress shall appropriate as the amount that the Federal Government shall bear in the expenses of the District, found in volume 20 of the Statutes at Large, page 104.

Now, I make this point of order, being one of those who are in favor of abolishing the half-and-half system in the District of Columbia, but I do not think it should be done upon a general appropriation bill. I think it should be considered by the District Committee in regular course and that legislation should be brought into the House after hearings have been held, and I submit this is a change of organic law and is not in order upon a general appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota desire to be heard?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I do not know as a question of parliamentary law whether the gentleman is right or not, but I have been informed that this question has arisen several times and a point of order has been made upon which it has been universally decided, or at least two or three times, that it is not subject to the point of order under the Holman rule, and it has been so decided by two or three Speakers before. I may be wrong, but I think I am right, that the Holman rule protects it.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire whatever to take up the time of the committee in arguing the point of order if the Chairman does not care to hear from me. Of course, I take the position that the point of order is not well taken, that this amendment is clearly in order under the rules of the House. Mr. Chairman, as the Chair makes no intimation as to the views of the Chair I will briefly argue the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the statement of the gentleman will be of value, whether the Chair needs to be informed about the matter or not.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, it is undoubtedly true under the rules of the House that legislation is not in order upon an appropriation bill, with certain exceptions, one exception being under clause 2 of Rule XXI, which says that legislation is in order when it—

Shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salaries of the officers of the United States—

Of course, that is not applicable here—by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States—or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill: Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee or any joint commission authorized by law or the House Members of any such commission having jurisdiction of the subject matter of such amendment, which amendment, being germane to the subject matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

Under existing law, the act of June 11, 1878, half of the expenses of the District of Columbia is paid out of the Treasury. Now, the paragraph read, against which the point of order is made, is legislation, but what is the character of that legislation? It repeals the law saying half the expenses of the District government shall be paid out of the Treasury, and the paragraph goes further and it says that no amount paid out of the Treasury of the United States for the expenses of the District shall amount to as much as one-half of the expenses, which clearly, beyond cavil, reduces the amount appropriated out of the Treasury of the United States, and it fits like a glove the section of the rule providing that legislation is in order if it reduces the amount covered by the bill. I count myself happy, Mr. Chairman, however, to have precedents fortifying me in this position.

Way back in the Fifty-second Congress, when the Holman rule was adopted—and the language of the rule was, word for word, what it is now—the Speaker held that a motion to recommit, which is nothing but an amendment, reducing the proportion of the money to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States for the expenses of the District under one-half of the expenses was a retrenchment, that it reduced the amount covered in the bill, and that it came within the Holman rule, and, therefore, was in order. For the last three Congresses, I may state, this amendment has been before each one of those Congresses, and has always been held in order under the provision of the Holman rule, as it reduced expenditures. Every Chairman who has passed upon it has so held. I call the attention of the Chair to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 10, 1914, when an amendment exactly like this was offered, a point of order made against it, and the question was argued, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] in the chair held:

The Chair is of the opinion there is but one question in this, and that is the question of germaneness. The Chair will resolve that in favor of the amendment and hold that it is in order. The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order.

Now, I can continue, Mr. Chairman, to go on and consume the time of the committee, but if I proceed I shall simply be talking in a circle, for I have already, I think, clearly shown to the Chair that the rules of the House provide that legislation is in order on an appropriation bill in certain cases, one case being when it is germane and it reduces the amount of money to come out of the Treasury of the United States. The object of the Holman rule is a wholesome, beneficial one to economize and save money, and it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, this is a splendid time to put into effect retrenchment.

The amendment in question retrenches. It legislates, the legislation being to reduce the amount of money coming out of the Treasury, and the amendment specifically says that in no case shall the amount of money appropriated out of the Treasury of the United States for the expenses of the District of Columbia equal one-half of the amount of the appropriation bill. If it can not equal one-half, it is undoubtedly a retrenchment, and, in my opinion, is clearly in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's statement, as the Chair understands it, is borne out clearly by a long line of rulings. The organic act of June 11, 1878, provides that, to the extent to which Congress shall approve of said estimates, Congress shall appropriate the amount of 50 per cent thereof and the remaining 50 per cent of such approved estimates shall be levied and assessed upon the taxable property and privileges in the said District other than the property of the United States and the District of Columbia.

The language of the bill provides—

That the following sums are appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia to the extent that they are sufficient therefor, and the remainder out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

It is, of course, clear that this is a change of existing or basic law. It would be within the rule which does not allow legislation upon appropriation bills if it were not within one of the exceptions of such rule. The exception of the rule, called to the attention of the Chair by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], is the exception that provides that if by the amendment offered or the change in the law the appropriations are reduced, the exception prevails and the rule to that extent is nullified.

In this case it is quite clear that if the language of the bill remains a reduction of expenditures from the Treasury of the United States must necessarily result. The very point has been decided in two recent cases exactly in point except the positions were reversed. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], I think, was in the chair when the bill as presented contained the provision exactly in accordance with the organic act:

That one-half of the following sums, respectively, be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury.

And in two successive years the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] held, after an elaborate argument in the first instance, that the language of an amendment offered as a substitute, almost, if not exactly, identical with the language which is now the first section of this bill, was in order as an amendment to the original law, because of the fact that it reduced expenditures.

So it seems to the Chair it is quite clear that it is the duty of the Chair to hold that the point of order against the first section on that account is not well taken, and the objections are overruled.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Executive office: Two commissioners, at $6,000 each; engineer commissioner, so much as may be necessary (to make salary $6,000); secretary, $2,700; 3 assistant secretaries to commissioners, at $1,600 each; clerks—1 $1,500, 3 at $1,400 each, 1 $1,200, 1 (who shall be a stenographer and typewriter) $1,200, 1 $840, 2 at $720 each; 2 messengers, at $600 each; stenographer and typewriter, $1,200.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. WALSH. I reserve a point of order on this paragraph, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois making the point of order desire to be heard?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a disposition to increase the salaries of some that are already fixed by statute, but there is no disposition to increase the salaries of the little fellows who receive $900, $1,000, or $1,100.

I request, Mr. Chairman, that this paragraph be passed at this time and be taken up for consideration after the bill has been read. And I will withdraw any action on this at the present moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the paragraph be passed temporarily. Is there objection?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I have no objection, Mr. Chairman, to taking it up later. The gentleman may change his mind and withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and directed, from time to time, to prescribe a schedule of fees to be paid for inspecting passenger elevators and for inspecting hotels, public halls, moving-picture shows, theaters, and other places of amusement which are required to have annual licenses, and for inspecting buildings which are required by law to have fire escapes; and they are further authorized and directed to impose fees for all inspections or service to be performed by any public officer or employee of the District of Columbia under any law or regulation now in force or hereafter enacted; said fees to cover the cost and expense of such inspections or service; and a schedule of such fees shall be printed and conspicuously displayed in the office of the said commissioners, and said fees shall be paid to the collector of taxes, District of Columbia, and deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of revenues of the District of Columbia and the United States in equal parts.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph. It is clearly new legislation and should properly come before the Committee on the District of Columbia, which has jurisdiction of legislation of this nature. And it seems to me it is pernicious legislation, in addition, to have the owners of the premises inspected pay for the inspection.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman make the point of order or reserve it?

Mr. MAPES. I intend to make it, but I will reserve it if the gentleman cares to have me do so.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I wish the gentleman would. I wish to say that this is the same provision carried in the bill we passed here last session and which failed to become a law.

Mr. SISSON. We are already operating under that law now, and this statute is carrying that out. I will state frankly that we have no possible objection to the gentleman's committee going into this whole matter and bringing in a proper law, but until that is done I think the very safety of the people to be benefited would demand that they have this inspection.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It was passed before in the other bill, and no objection was raised to it.

Mr. SISSON. And they have had this inspection.

Mr. MAPES. What does the gentleman mean by the statement that this is the law now?

Mr. SISSON. I say this is the law under which they are now operating—this statute here now.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. This is the law now.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will yield further, I want to inquire is it not a fact that this is what has been construed by the District authorities to be the law?

Mr. SISSON. I did not intend to go into that.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will pardon me, I will complete the statement. The authorities have construed the law as giving them the authority; but recently, through litigation, it has been developed that they have not the authority; and in order to continue the inspection in the same way and with the same charges as heretofore they have asked for this legislation.

Mr. SISSON. Yes. This has been the construction placed upon an old statute for quite a while. Now, if you do not do this, there will be practically no inspection in the District. There is no provision made to pay the inspectors out of these fees. I will say frankly to the gentleman that the Committee on Appropriations will be glad if the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] will permit this item to remain in the bill until a statute can be put on the statute books, because then the committee will have an absolute guide as to what ought to be done in this case.

Mr. MAPES. If the gentleman will permit, this is clearly new legislation. It is not on the appropriation act passed last session. While I do not desire to go into the merits of the question now, it seems to me it is not desirable legislation, and it strikes me that the Committee on Appropriations should report an appropriation to pay these inspectors, rather than to have them paid by the men whose premises they inspect.

Mr. SISSON. I will say to the gentleman that in most of the cities they have a fee system for the inspection of elevators, where a certificate or license is issued. A regular license is posted up in every elevator. I do not know of any exception to that, although there may be exceptions. But in order to run an elevator in most of the cities a license is required, and that license states on its face the last inspection of the elevator, and a certain fee is paid for that license.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, in most of the States the fee charged is only a nominal fee and is not a fee intended to cover the cost of inspection.

Mr. SISSON. That is not the case here.

Mr. WALSH. It says, "Said fees shall pay the cost of inspection."

Mr. SISSON. It is conducted on the fee system. I have not the information here, but I understand a certain fee is charged for inspecting the buildings.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. Does the language in this paragraph in any way interfere with the authority of the commissioners to make the inspection of elevators, and so forth? Does it not simply authorize them to charge the owners of the premises for the inspection? In other words, if this language is stricken out, would it interfere in any way with the right of the commissioners to inspect the buildings and the elevators?

Mr. SISSON. The testimony of the commissioners is that this language is absolutely necessary now.

Mr. MAPES. Necessary for what?

Mr. SISSON. Necessary for the inspection of these buildings.

Mr. MAPES. The language does not so read.

Mr. SISSON. That is the construction they have placed upon it. They have had some little litigation in reference to the power of the District Commissioners to regulate the elevators under the present law—that is, the statute—and that lawsuit which was in progress at that time was the occasion for the District Commissioners asking for this authority. The last committee unanimously gave it to them, and this committee simply reaffirmed the action of the committee before.

Now, I hope the gentleman will permit this provision to remain in the bill, and that his committee will take the matter up and prepare a well-considered plan for having the elevators in the hotels and public buildings inspected.

Mr. MAPES. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that the language of this provision seems to me clear that it can not in any way interfere with the actual inspection. This language simply authorizes the commissioners to provide a schedule of fees for the owners of the premises to pay for the inspection; and for that reason, Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think it is subject to a point of order, although it is very unfortunate. It is very important legislation and the inspection of buildings, which by law are required to have fire escapes, will not be carried on.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MAPES. It seems to me clear, Mr. Chairman, that there is nothing in this provision that justifies the remark of the chairman reporting the bill, that it in any way prohibits or restricts the commissioners in authorizing the inspection of buildings and elevators and fire escapes and what not. It is so apparent from the language of the provision that I do not want to let the remark of the gentleman from Minnesota go unanswered.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. Suppose that this legislation goes out and the District Commissioners find themselves where they can not have these elevators inspected, and suppose an accident occurs in an elevator. Of course, I suppose the gentleman is willing to assume the burden of that responsibility, but I am frank to say that no member of the Committee on Appropriations was willing to assume that burden, especially when the gentlemen charged with enforcing this law were so positive that they needed this additional fund. The fees have already been fixed. This does not change any fees nor the amount of money that is paid for any inspection, but there has been no authority heretofore to require that an elevator which on inspection is found to be in bad shape shall be condemned. They insist very strenuously that they need this power. If the gentleman is willing to assume the responsibility, I will say frankly that the Committee on Appropriations have absolutely no pride in the matter.

Mr. MAPES. I dislike to take the rôle of calling the attention of the members of the Appropriations Committee to the testimony of the commissioners on this subject, but I think if they will read the testimony of the commissioners they will see that their recollection of the testimony is very much distorted. The commissioners themselves testified that this has nothing to do with their right to make the inspection but with the right to make the charge.

Mr. SISSON. But they must have the inspection fee for the purpose of getting the men to make the inspection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Public Utilities Commission: For salaries (including inspector of gas and meters, $2,000; assistant inspectors of gas and meters—1 $1,200, 2 at $900 each; messenger, $600); in all, $33,000: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $4,000 per annum.

Mr. MAPES. I move to strike out the last word. I should like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], who has charge of the bill, who the persons are who are employed by the Public Utilities Commission in addition to the people mentioned in this paragraph.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That proviso was a safeguard put on there which is carried in the current law, so that they shall not, under any emergency that might arise, employ anybody at a greater rate of compensation than $4,000. They seemed to have pretty complete blanket authority under the utilities proposition, and that was put on there for the reason I have stated. It is carried in the permanent law.

Mr. MAPES. This appropriates specifically only $4,000; but there is a lump-sum appropriation of $33,000.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will read the gentleman the schedule of salaries: Executive secretary, $4,000; accountant, $3,000; assistant accountant, $2,000; traffic engineer, $3,600; inspector, $1,600; another inspector, $1,600; another at $1,400; another at $1,200; inspector of gas and meters, $2,000; assistant inspector of gas and meters, $1,200; another at $900; inspector of electric meters, $1,600; chief clerk, $1,800; clerk and stenographer, $1,400; another clerk and stenographer, $1,200; another at $1,200; another at $1,000; messenger, $720; another messenger at $600, making $32,920. That is the salary list. Now, there has been no increase in it or anything of that kind.

Mr. MAPES. Why does the Committee on Appropriations in this case change its settled policy of a great many years against appropriating lump sums and in favor of making specific appropriations?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. We have not done so in this case.

Mr. MAPES. Why have you changed from the specific appropriation to the lump sum?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. We have not changed. It has always been a lump sum, and I have simply given the gentleman the details that make up that lump sum.

Mr. MAPES. Why in this particular item does the Committee on Appropriations report it in a lump sum instead of specifically, as it does in other cases?

Mr. SISSON. Under the specific law authorizing these commissioners to make the valuation in the District of Columbia they carry a lump sum, and have no pay roll and no salary, because they did not know at what salary they could get the men.

Mr. MAPES. Is not this true, that under this appropriation, instead of dividing the $28,000 among these different employees, as the gentleman from Minnesota has read, the commissioners could divide it into seven equal parts and pay each man $4,000?

Mr. SISSON. I suppose they could have done that.

Mr. MAPES. My question is, why the Appropriation Committee recommended in this instance against the long-settled policy of lump-sum appropriations?

Mr. SISSON. I have always been opposed to lump sums. But at this particular time we could not have made up a pay roll, nor could the District commissioners have made it up.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be recognized in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I think I have the information which my colleague is seeking. I think the motive which actuated the committee was this: We could have put into the bill the salary roll which has just been read by the chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. DAVIS. To have done so would have tended to make such a roll permanent or a statutory roll, and we feared that it never would be reduced, and so it was felt by the subcommittee that there would be a better chance of hereafter cutting down appropriations for the utility commission if we appropriated a lump sum.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. In 1918 the appropriation was $34,000, but they only spent $28,785.07. When you put them on a statutory roll you never knew a salary reduced.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee or the gentleman from Michigan under what authority of law are these employees and officers paid, the list of which the chairman of the subcommittee has read.

Mr. CRAMTON. That list was paid under the authority of the appropriatiton bill of the current year, but if the bill is passed as reported I suppose that list in so far as it may be necessary for the work of the commission will be continued.

Mr. WALSH. I direct the attention of the gentleman from Michigan to the fact that it is paid under the current law or under the item carried in this bill. There is no authority for spending any of this money for salary to other people, because the amount of salary is limited to $2,000.

Mr. CRAMTON. No; I think the gentleman is in error.

Mr. WALSH. They may have paid it under the next paragraph.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will call the gentleman's attention to the value of small punctuation marks sometimes. He will notice the parentheses surrounding this language:

(including inspector of gas and meters, $2,000; assistant inspectors of gas and meters—1 $1,200, 2 at $900 each; messenger, $600).

The important language is "for salaries * * *; in all, $33,000." That whole $33,000 may be used for salaries and the gentleman overlooks the parentheses.

Mr. WALSH. I did not overlook the parentheses, but my question is, What authority of law is there for paying anybody $1,200, $1,600, or $900, and various other positions that have been paid for?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think you will find it under the act of March 4, 1913, creating the public-utilities commission. Paragraph 95 reads as follows:

The commission shall have the power in each and every instance to employ and prescribe the duties of such officers, clerks, stenographers, typewriters, inspectors, experts, and employees as it may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this section, and to fix and pay their compensation within the appropriations provided by Congress.

Mr. WALSH. And that is the authority for the list that the gentleman has just read?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes; but they did not want to put them on the statutory roll. The work of the utilities commission has greatly decreased.

Mr. WALSH. I should think so, when we consider the state of the public utilities.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The expenses are greatly decreasing, and if you put these on the statutory roll you never knew a salary on the statutory roll reduced.

The Clerk read as follows:

For incidental and all other general necessary expenses authorized by law, including the employment of expert services where necessary, $20,000.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Can the gentleman inform the committee what this $20,000 is to be expended for? I notice that the language here includes the employment of expert services, which I suppose was provided for by the lump-sum appropriation of $33,000 in the preceding paragraph.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. No; that is extra. I read the gentleman the law under which they were authorized to employ expert services. They had a man named Beeler here, and some others, when we were all jammed up in consequence of war work, when the cars were stopped, and everything of that kind. They employed this man Beeler and paid him quite a salary to put in these skip-stops and the platforms and things of that kind. The cost of that is included in this $20,000. There has to be considerable more of that kind of work done before we have satisfactory services on the part of the street cars. This is not the $33,000 salary item at all.

Mr. MAPES. To bear out what the gentleman said, that the expenses were being reduced, I notice this appropriation is for $20,000, and last year the appropriation for the same item was $25,000.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. I would like to ask the gentleman how much of the $25,000 was paid to the expert, Mr. Beeler?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I notice here the expenses: Services of John A. Beeler, 71 days, at $110 a day, $7,810; services of assistant, $7,261, without giving the number of days.

Mr. MAPES. The assistant was paid more than the principal?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes; he apparently worked longer. Traveling expenses, John A. Beeler, $150.68; traveling expenses, assistant, $81.10; total expenses, aside from expert's fees, $231.78. Total, $15,302.78.

Mr. MAPES. Was that all of the $25,000 that was expended?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is all that was expended for this particular expert.

Mr. MAPES. Who is this Mr. Beeler?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. He is supposed to be the greatest expert in the United States on matters of this kind. They paid him a pretty good salary, something I rather objected to at the time, but they said they could not get Mr. Beeler—and they had to have him, they thought—for less than $110 a day.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Minnesota yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The gentleman from Michigan has the floor.

Mr. MAPES. I yield the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota for five minutes.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. Is this the expert who is responsible for eliminating the six tickets for a quarter system of fares and imposing the 2-cent extra charge for transfers, along with increasing in number of flat-wheeled cars upon which we are obliged to ride, and disrupting things generally?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I have no official information along that line, except that I have conversed with some members of the Utilities Commission, without naming them; but Mr. Beeler had nothing to do with this at all. The Utilities Commission proper fixed the 2-cent transfer charge.

Mr. WALSH. And this $110-per-day expert advice that he has been giving——

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It was not on the transfers at all.

Mr. WALSH. It was not upon the fare or the equipment of the cars?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. No.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the language beginning on line 10, page 9, and including all the language in line 12, on the same page, including the figures $20,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Page 9, line 10, strike out all of lines 10, 11, and 12, including the figures $20,000.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I am anxious to have information about this item, but it seems to me that the carrying of this tremendous lump-sum item in this appropriation bill is simply an invitation to do again what was apparently done in the employment of some experts at what would seem to be highly exorbitant fees and perquisites in connection with the duty which must repose in the Public Utilities Commission. I think that I am not overstating the case when I state that the public utilities of Washington, the Capital City of the Nation, particularly in regard to its street car services, are entirely inadequate, and the word "inadequate" is a most mild expression. Not alone during the time of confusion incident to the coming of many people into Washington, but to-day the street car service in Washington is a crying shame. The people who are dependent upon it, and there are thousands of them dependent upon it, are compelled to resort to the shifting system of reporting at different times and all sorts of staggered hours, all sorts of subterfuges made to meet the existing contingencies, and the sum result of what has been done in regard to the street car service in the city of Washington has been the charge of 2 cents for a transfer, which the Capital Traction Co. said it did not want and did not need, and the Washington Electric Railway have said is not sufficient to tide it over its financial difficulties. Now, I but speak of this because when we consider all that has been done we have this lump sum of $20,000 here open as an invitation to these men who compose the Public Utilities Commission, these men who are intrusted and who have the authority, an unquestioned authority, to provide good public utilities for the people of Washington in transportation, in gas, electric light, and in telephones——

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman know who make up the Public Utilities Commission?

Mr. GARD. Why, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia make up that commission.

Mr. WALSH. Do they appoint themselves the Public Utilities Commission?

Mr. GARD. Oh, no; they are by operation of law. By operation of law the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are the Public Utilities Commission, and it would seem to me that these excellent gentlemen, two of them residents of the District of Columbia and one a delegate from the Engineer Corps, by themselves and their present assistants are in all respects competent to do that which the law imposes on them to do, and that is to oversee the public utilities, the different public utilities in the District of Columbia, and I repeat, not alone to the residents here but to the visitor at the National Capital. The public utilities of the city of Washington, in telephone and transportation especially, are a crying shame, and I think instead of having a lump-sum item of $20,000 here carried to attract some alleged expert who receives out of $20,000 about $15,000 in his per diem charges and in his expenses and everything of that kind, that what we need is a more rigid adherence to that which the law imposes upon the Public Utilities Commission, their counsel, their inspectors, and all who get the greater part of this $33,000 charge, to see that for all the people of the United States here in the Capital City are maintained as they should be maintained the public utilities, and I would be pleased to hear from members of the committee regarding the continuation of this item of $20,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I will state that the hearings and the statement of the commissioners as to what became of the $20,000 in the last item are as follows: Stenographic services and notes, $2,000; car tickets, $25; books, periodicals, and so forth, $150; stationery and office supplies, $875; blank books, printing, and so forth, $1,400; postage, $100; traveling expenses, $250. Then comes expert services, which I do not think will be necessary next time, $15,000; making a total of $20,000. Now, that is what the $20,000 item was composed of last year and the estimate for the next year the same thing. Now, if this is stricken out the utilities commission will have nothing to work upon at all. This really is contingent expenses. Now, that is the way it was put to your subcommittee.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, with the word of the chairman of the committee, I ask unanimous consent to modify the amendment proposed so as to strike out the figures "$20,000" and insert "$10,000," because it would seem to me that would cover all the emergency which seems to face the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modified amendment offered by Mr. GARD: Page 9, line 12, strike out the figures "$20,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$10,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have my colleague read a little from the hearings along this particular line, which will take two or three minutes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, if I may be recognized, I wish to say I do not care to delay the committee, but the motion pending is, in effect, a motion to end the work of the Public Utilities Commission, and whether we favor or disapprove some of the results of their work, we all agree that the subject matter, pertaining, as it does, to our public utilities, is one of the utmost importance to the people of this city. I am sure that if the street railroads, for instance, of Washington were now under public ownership and rendered service only one-half as poor as we have had here the last year it would be hailed everywhere as a proof of the failure of municipal ownership. Now, I am sure the gentleman does not want to end the work of the only public agency that there is at present struggling with these problems. But that is what his amendment would result in.

Now, in the hearings one of the commissioners, Mr. Gardiner, expressed his views as to the need of this money for experts, which is what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] especially objects to. He points out that the Public Utilities Commission is of the same membership as the District commission, and therefore these men on the Public Utilities Commission have all the other multitudinous duties of District Commissioners to attend to, and hence they must either entirely neglect their work as commissioners, which is very important, or they must to a large degree delegate the work of investigation under the Public Utilities Commission. Mr. Gardiner, one of the commissioners, said:

As public utility commissioners we should ride on those street cars every day; we should drive along the tracks and ride on the street cars; and we should take up the complaints of the people and look into them and find out the conditions. That is what a public utility commission should do, but we can not do it. As you know very well, we are kept right in that building all the time. That is my own opinion about this thing. * * * The Public Utilities Commission should be a separate body, who should devote all their attention to their work. Then it would not need the services of all of these experts.

But this Congress has created a commission composed of these commissioners, and unless this bill is to blindly legislate out of existence the only body now charged with that work we must continue a decent appropriation that will enable them to do their work. And while I agree with the motives that I am sure inspire the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD], I am sure it would be extremely shortsighted for this House, without investigation and simply on the impulse of the moment, to hamstring the work of this utilities commission.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly.

Mr. MAPES. Can the gentleman tell us whether the Public Utilities Commission has investigated anything in connection with the street car service here except the question of the fares and putting into effect the skip stops?

Mr. CRAMTON. The Public Utilities Commission has up the matter of gas rates, the electric rates, the whole electric situation, the valuation of these utilities, and, as one of these matters, this matter of street car service, and that includes both the matter of fares and of service, the furnishing of more cars, the routing of cars, the issuance of transfers, providing skip stops, and other propositions of that kind.

Mr. MAPES. What has it done to improve the service and prevent the tie-ups and the delays in the traffic?

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, I hope my colleague will understand that I am not one of the experts that is provided for in this appropriation and I am not prepared to answer all of those questions in detail.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Ohio rise?

Mr. GARD. I rise to be heard on the modified amendment. I have not been heard on that. However, I will be very glad to yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON].

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the utilities commission has not acted as promptly as I would like in regard to the valuation of all the public utilities in the District of Columbia, but they have had some litigation. They have been assisted in the making of these valuations, but every point has been contested by some of the companies. Some of the companies have agreed to the valuation, and the commission has made a valuation on the majority of the utilities.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Is it not a fact—not only a fact now, but contemplated in the future—that there is going to be more litigation in regard to this matter, and that out of this fund they would have to pay some of the expenses?

Mr. SISSON. I was about to say that they are getting down to the point where they expect to make some orders to carry into effect all of the reforms that they hope to be able to bring about in the District of Columbia.

This legislation, you will all recall, was made necessary by virtue of a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, which decided that before you could make a rate as to railways the burden of proof was on the Government to be able to show that the rates were not confiscatory. I have never agreed to the soundness of that decision, but still that is the position in which we find ourselves. That made it necessary not only throughout the States, that valuation of railroads on the part of the Federal Government should be made, but also within the District of Columbia. Congress was about to pass an act granting universal transfers, and another bill was introduced consolidating the street railway companies. Col. Harding was then on the District commission, and Col. Harding and the attorneys came before your subcommittee some years ago and stated that in the event that legislation should be enacted it would simply put the District into litigation, and they requested that nothing of that sort should be done until this physical valuation should be made. Now, we have all agreed that the public utilities in the District of Columbia are not what they ought to be, but your committee did not feel that it would be proper for it to deprive the commission of the money which it requested and which it might need in the event it had quite a good deal of litigation in reference to any other order which it might enter. So we left this sum at $20,000 not to enable them to bring about the very reforms that my friend from Ohio desires to be made but——

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for an observation?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Also our committee feels that if there is a change in the legislation as to the kind of commission we should have, the committee headed by my colleague from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] should wrestle with that problem.

Mr. SISSON. Yes; and his committee framed the legislation by which we are operating.

Mr. MAPES. I am glad that there is one piece of legislation that the Committee on Appropriations is willing that the regular Committee on the District of Columbia should handle.

Mr. SISSON. We will turn it all over to you.

Mr. MAPES. I rose to ask the gentleman a question about a subject to which he referred when he spoke about legislation being proposed some time ago looking toward the consolidation of the different companies. I saw a notice in one of the newspapers a few days ago to the effect that a public utilities company had defaulted on the interest on its bonds, and the newspaper article went on to say that a company was organized some time ago for the purpose of bringing about a merger of the two companies. I would like to ask the gentleman if the Public Utilities Commission is doing any work to bring about the consolidation of the two companies here?

Mr. SISSON. Some time ago I went into the matter with a great deal of earnestness, but whether that earnestness was accompanied by much ability I do not know; but I have been a very strong advocate of a universal transfer. I also felt that if we did not have universal transfers we ought to have a consolidation of the companies. You would thereby be relieved of managerial and overhead charges, it seems to me, which would tend to bring the business into a position where the overhead charges would be brought down to about half what they are now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. SISSON. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. Now, if I could have my way about it, I would like to eliminate the two companies and have but one company.

Mr. MAPES. It is universally conceded that two street car companies in one city are a nuisance.

Mr. SISSON. That is absolutely true.

Mr. MAPES. I wanted to direct the gentleman's attention to this question: Is there not some way in which the Public Utilities Commission can spend this money in the employment of expert services to force a consolidation of the two companies?

Mr. SISSON. My understanding is that before you could make a consolidation, even by act of Congress, it would be necessary that the body making the order of consolidation should not only have the authority to make the order, but also under that decision of the Supreme Court in making the consolidation it would be necessary to have a physical valuation of the property, so that the accounts might be properly adjusted. Of course, they could make a consolidation, but they would have to agree upon the respective values of the properties. But when you are compelling them to do it you ought to have the facts whereby you and the court could sustain the order.

Mr. MAPES. As a matter of practical procedure, is there no way that we can compel a consolidation of the companies here, except by taking them over by the Government?

Mr. SISSON. I do not know about that. I think Congress would have the power to pass an act requiring them to consolidate, but the Utilities Commission or some other commission would have to make the valuation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] desire time?

Mr. GARD. Yes; I desire to be heard in favor of the amendment offered by me.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment can be modified by unanimous consent, reducing the amount from $20,000 to $10,000.

Mr. GARD. I want to be heard on that. I was heard on the proposition to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, first, I would like to inquire how long the chairman in charge of the bill desires to keep the committee in session?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. We would like to proceed for an hour longer, but probably we shall not be able to proceed more than half an hour.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I say I would like to proceed for an hour, but I know we can not, and hence I was going to suggest that the committee rise at 6 o'clock.

Mr. BLANTON. If the chairman of the committee intends to move to rise at 6 o'clock, I will withdraw the point.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes; at 6 o'clock I will move that the committee rise.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, if there was any sort of procedure by which the public utilities of Washington could be benefited and the benefit accrue to the people who live here and who come here, I should be in favor of any sort of an appropriation, even in excess of this lump-sum appropriation of $20,000.

The test of public utilities, which are created and have their existence only for the benefit of the public, is in the good they bring to the public, and it is not a proper carrying out of an authorized service when the extent of benefit of any public utilities commission consists in giving increased rates to telephone companies, gas companies, electric-light companies, and street railway companies, and no benefit is afforded to the people who are compelled to use these commodities. I would not for a moment think of handicapping the Public Utilities Commission of Washington, but here we have three commissioners, we have a number of officers whom the chairman says it is the plan not to carry on the permanent roll, because they hope every year that there will not be any necessity for their continuance. Therefore they carry only little inconsequential items amounting to about $3,800, whereas the bulk of the appropriation, the $28,000, is spent upon assistants, upon counsel for the public utilities commission, upon engineers, upon inspectors, upon men who do the work. The only thing that remains therefore for this $20,000 which they said a moment ago they thought there was no use for—the chairman of this commitee, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Davis], has figured out that practically all the expense of last year was the expense of the expert, which will not be needed this year. But in order that full scope might be given to whatever necessities could arise, in order to give full scope to the payment of all necessary expenses, it was my thought to decrease this apparently unnecessary provision of $20,000 at least to $10,000.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. GARD. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Does the gentleman want this commission to stop work?

Mr. GARD. I want them to go to work.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Can they go to work unless they have the money?

Mr. GARD. They certainly can go to work. They have $33,000 in a previous item.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The gentleman's argument is certainly in favor of these utility companies themselves, because they want the commission to stop work, and not to spend any money, and not to do anything.

Mr. GARD. They have their own salaries and this $33,000 with which to carry on their work, and unless the gentleman can tell me something immediately in prospect for which this $20,000 can be properly expended, then I must insist upon my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. GARD) there were—ayes 6, noes 10.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. On this question the ayes are 6, the noes are 10, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. BLANTON. I made the point of no quorum before the Chair made that announcement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Will not the gentleman withdraw that point?

Mr. BLANTON. I would rather have a larger vote here than the few Republicans who sit over there and the few Democrats who sit here. I think there are about 14 Republicans on the other side.

Mr. GARD. There are hardly 20 people in the Hall, and I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I thought we could proceed rapidly with the appropriation bill, but it does not appear possible to do so, and I will move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the District of Columbia appropriation bill, H. R. 4226, had come to no resolution thereon.

JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILL PRESENTED TO THE WHITE HOUSE FOR THE APPROVAL OF THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the White House for the approval of the President of the United States the following joint resolution and bill:

H. J. Res. 79. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to loan to the city of Dawson, Ga., tents and cots for use of Confederate veterans in their State convention, June 17 and 18, 1919.

H. R. 1200. Making appropriations for certain expenses incident to the first session of the Sixty-sixth Congress, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 1. Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution extending the right of suffrage to women.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. KREIDER appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Thursday, June 5, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 5, 1919.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we invoke Thy blessing upon our labor this new day. The words which are spoken here are far-reaching in their effect. The final conclusions of this high office have to do with the happiness and prosperity of millions of Thy people. Give us a just sense of our responsibility. Give us a blessed consciousness of the Divine Presence, that we may know that we are working together with God in the upbuilding of a fairer, higher, and sweeter civilization. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Monday, June 3, 1919, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LODGE. I present two telegrams in the nature of petitions from citizens of Holyoke, Mass., which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegrams were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOLYOKE, MASS., June 2, 1919.

Hon. H. LODGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Resolution adopted at mass meeting May 29, 1919, by citizens of Polish extraction in Easthampton:

"Whereas on the 22d day of May, 1919, there were held in nearly all cities of the United States meetings and demonstrations at which one portion of the population was being incited in a demagogic manner against the other; and

"Whereas at these meetings there was made an attempt at disgracing in the eyes of the American people the new Polish State now arising from bondage of over a century; and

"Whereas, due to an ingenious propoganda, the Senate of the United States, contrary to the tenets of the Monroe doctrine and to the principle of the inviolability of the internal affairs of each and every country, interfered, without previously investigating the merits of the case, with the internal affairs of Poland, we therefore, American citizens of Polish descent, resolve as follows:

"First. To call upon the Secretary of State of the United States to curb forthwith said propaganda as carried on by the Jews, propaganda which is spreading unrest and racial hatred.

"Second. To impress upon the American press the necessity for a proper caution in connection with spreading news concerning Poland as supplied by the Jews, in order to avoid the jeopardizing of the good name of the American journalism, which good name might suffer a blot as soon as authentic information in re alleged massacres of the Jews in Poland would be on hand.

"Third. We call upon the Jewish population in America to be diligently cautious of the motives prompting the slandering of the Polish nation and behold the pernicious results of the anti-Polish propaganda, which can not but bring harm to the Jews in Poland, and which would solely benefit the Germans.

"We furthermore resolve to forward copies of these unanimously adopted resolutions to the President of the United States, to the Secretary of State, and to the Speakers of both Houses of the United States Congress."

HOLYOKE, MASS., May 31, 1919.

Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The following resolutions were adopted at a mass meeting of American citizens of Polish extraction, May 30, at Kosciusko Hall, Holyoke, Mass.:

"Whereas almost on the very day when, at the peace conference in Paris, there were going on negotiations concerning the eastern frontiers of Poland, malicious intrigue attempted to disgrace Poland in the eyes of the world at large and of America in particular, by denouncing Poland as a country of pogroms and of anarchy was started; and

"Whereas for the purpose of achieving the aforesaid end Jewish propagandists did not hesitate to provoke racial hatred in America at a time when each and every loyal citizen of this country should be duty bound to preserve harmony among American citizens of whatever creed or race; and

"Whereas these very propagandists attempt to drag the United States Government and Congress into their shady political game by insinuating interference with the international affairs of Poland, an undertaking which might establish for Europe a precedent for a similar meddling with the internal affairs of the United States: We, therefore, American citizens of Polish descent, protesting solemnly against the unparalleled carelessness of disgracing the good name and the honor of the Polish nation without previously investigating the merits of the matter, without securing information from official Polish sources, do herewith

"Resolve, To call upon the United States Government to curb the investigating of one portion of the American Nation against the other in time to prevent the harm from passing beyond repair.

"To urge upon our fellow citizens to be more impartial, equitable, and just in giving credence to rumors concerning Poland; rumors emanating invariably from the same source and invariably benefitting solely the Germans.

"To call upon the American press, urging the latter to familiarize itself with matters Polish through the medium of trustworthy correspondents who have no racial interest in slandering Poland.

"Furthermore, we resolve to forward copies of this resolution, which was carried unanimously, to the President of the United States, to the Secretary of State, to the Speakers of both Houses of Congress, and to the Associated Press."

There being no objection, the telegram was read and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., June 3, 1919.

Hon. L. Y. SHERMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

Army Hospital No. 32 ordered closed June 15. Patients transferred to Fort Sheridan. We in wheel chairs and on crutches protest leaving fireproof building and moved where our lives will be endangered in wooden buildings already condemned and publicly protested. We were willing to give our lives in France, but refuse to risk being burned alive here. Are helpless unless you interest Illinois Senators and Congressmen to keep us where we will be safe from death by fire and where we can have some comfort and recreation. Some of us are paralyzed. Many are unable to move without help. For God's sake come to our rescue.

Privates Walter F. Darmsfel, Edward Sauer, Ernest A. Cohn, George Prokosch, Harrison H. Webb, Johnston Rowlston, Joseph Krzywacki, M. B. Kipp, Gus Meyn, Charles H. Vanfleet, George F. Hadd, Maurice T. Blair, Frank C. Schultz, Charles Chandler, Harry Rackowcky, Irvine S. Tucker, Vito Adamo, Thomas H. Tiller, and 100 more of our pals if you want them.

Mr. SHERMAN presented petitions of sundry citizens of the counties of Hancock and McDonough, in the State of Illinois, praying for the repeal of the so-called daylight-saving law, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Monmouth, Little York, and Kirkwood, all in the State of Illinois, remonstrating against the repeal of war-time prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HALE presented a memorial of the Aroostook and Penobscot Union Pomona Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Presque Isle, Me., remonstrating against the free entry of potatoes from all other countries, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Yarmouth, Me., praying for the ratification of the proposed league of nations treaty, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Mapleton, Me., remonstrating against the repeal of war-time prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PHELAN presented a memorial of the California Cattlemen's Association, of San Francisco, Calif., remonstrating against Government ownership or operation of marketing facilities, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. KNOX presented a memorial of the General Assembly of the State of Pennsylvania, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas in the proper economic development of the resources of the various States of the Union, it is essential that a connected system of main arteries of traffic between the States be evolved, which will assist in the marketing and distribution of their products and commodities; and

Whereas in order to develop such an interstate system the Federal Government should establish a national highway system and make the necessary appropriations to carry the same into effect; and

Whereas in the construction of a system of main arteries an opportunity will be offered to provide employment, during the period of adjustment of this Nation, for unemployed labor and the heroes returning from France: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved (if the house concur), That the members of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania hereby petition the Congress of the United States to establish a national system of highways, and to cooperate with the States of the Union in carrying out plans for the development of such a system, together with the provisions of the present Federal aid act or any amendment or amendments thereto.

Resolved, That the present appropriation for Federal aid to the States be continued and increased, and the States urged to undertake comprehensive highway improvements to keep pace with the transportation needs of the Nation.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Commonwealth forward a copy of this resolution to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, and that a copy thereof be sent to each Member of said bodies from the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

W. P. GALLAGHER,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.

The foregoing resolution was concurred in by the house of representatives May 6, 1919.

THOMAS H. GARVIN,
Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA,
Harrisburg, May 17, 1919.

PENNSYLVANIA, ss:

I, Cyrus E. Woods, secretary of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, having the custody of the great seal of Pennsylvania, do hereby certify that the foregoing and annexed is a full, true, and correct copy of concurrent resolution No. 14–B, passed by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, petitioning the Congress of the United States to establish a national system of highways, etc., as the same remains on file and appears of record in this office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the great seal of the State to be affixed, the day and year above written.

[SEAL.]

CYRUS E. WOODS,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

Mr. KNOX presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Pittsburgh, Pa., remonstrating against the repeal of the so-called daylight-saving law, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Unionville, Newmansville, Towanda, and Powell, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the repeal of the so-called daylight-saving law, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Meadville, Cochranton, Pen Argyl, Williamsport, Monessen, Wilkes-Barre, Hatboro, Lock Haven, Pittsburgh, Horsham, Houston, Shenandoah, West Chester, South Brownsville, Gowen City, and Ulysses, all in the State of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the repeal of war-time prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MYERS presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Eureka, Mont., remonstrating against the repeal of war-time prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SOLDIERS' VIEW OF ANARCHISTIC OUTRAGES.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I hold in my hand a copy of the Come Back of June 4, 1919. The Come Back is published by and for the patients and enlisted personnel of the Walter Reed Army General Hospital, with the authority of the Surgeon General of the Army. It has, under the title "More plain words," a rather brief statement in every way showing the spirit we would expect in the gallant boys of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps. I ask that the Secretary may read the article headed "More plain words."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What is the newspaper?

Mr. FLETCHER. The Come Back, published at the Walter Reed Hospital.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

MORE PLAIN WORDS.

Under the caption "Plain words," a circular, setting out the creed of the anarchist bomber, was found among the tattered clothes of the terrorist who was blown to pieces when he dynamited the home of A. Mitchell Palmer, Attorney General, late Monday night.

We take those "plain words" of social sedition, proclaiming "Down with the powers that be," to represent the tenets of all the band of "reds" who tried to murder several officials by setting infernal machines and wrecking the homes of their intended victims.

It is time for "plain words" when bombs are scattered and when "The Anarchist Fighters" put out literature announcing "It is war, class war, against the darkness of your laws and the institutions you call order."

Army men are used to plain words. Open speaking and to the point is right in our line. We are just back from a campaign where "Over we go!" meant worlds of trouble for the Prussian lads who had said that our "so-called order" of democracy was all bunk.

We left several of our best "buddies" on the torn fields of France because we think our "so-called order" is one of the finest institutions on earth.

We have come back home with a deeper pride in the freedom of our laws because we have seen strong men die for their perpetuation and because we have looked upon the wreckage of other "so-called orders."

We have come back home, some of us with empty sleeves and shattered nerves, to enjoy the peace of freedom, for which we have suffered through two red years. We are a peace-loving lot, but we instinctively reach for the musket when we hear slander of the good things for which that old flag stands.

If there must be a house cleaning at home we are the boys to do it. If the autocracy of terrorism prowls in the shadows we are the fellows who are ready to go scouting for the scowling face.

We don't propose to allow Columbia to become a "no clean man's land"; we've had enough of the "so-called order" of might in Flanders.

Mystic promises of terror don't worry us. Prussian propaganda made black threats in more trying days; it bluffed lots of folks but not our outfit. We have seen the German menace smashed like an eggshell. We saw the infernal machines of the greatest war engine in history broken to atoms and the boasted Head Hussars hurled from their holds of hate.

We know how to subdue spies and snipers and submarines. We can squelch the sneaking terrorists.

We don't want any misunderstanding. Our order of democracy and justice is here to stay. The officers we placed at the head of our Government are going to stick on the job. "Old Glory" is going to float over a land of folks who do not hide bombs under front porches.

That is all of our plain words. In the drive on the terrorists you can count on those of us in the uniform of the United States for the front-line positions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 122) authorizing a commission to acquire and maintain a cemetery in France in the name of the United States for the reception and interment of the bodies of American officers and men who lost their lives in connection with the European war, and to appropriate $500,000 therefor, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 7) thereon.

Mr. JONES of Washington, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 1274) making it unnecessary to secure permits from the United States Shipping Board for the construction of ships in American shipyards for foreign account, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 8) thereon.

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 643) to provide for the equitable distribution of captured war devices and trophies to the States and Territories of the United States and to the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 9) thereon.

RATIFICATION OF TREATIES (S. DOC. NO. 26).

Mr. MOSES, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 67), and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the manuscript submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] on June 2, 1919, entitled "Ratification of treaties—method and procedure in foreign countries and proceedings in the Senate in the case of rejected treaties," be printed as a Senate document.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS (S. DOC. NO. 27).

Mr. MOSES, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 68), and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

Resolved, That the articles submitted by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] on June 2, 1919, entitled "The league of nations," be printed as a Senate document.

REPRESENTATIVES OF IRELAND AT PARIS.

Mr. BORAH. I report from the Committee on Foreign Relations in an amended form Senate resolution 48 submitted by me, and I submit a report (No. 6) thereon. As it has been changed so that it would be difficult for the Secretary to read, I will read it.

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States earnestly requests the American peace commission at Versailles to endeavor to secure for Edward De Valera, Arthur Griffiths, and Count George Noble Plunkett a hearing before said peace conference in order that they may present the cause of Ireland.

I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho whether he thinks it will require any length of time for consideration?

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator mean of the peace conference?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; whether it will require any considerable length of time of the Senate? I have a resolution coming over from yesterday, and I do not want it to be crowded out.

Mr. BORAH. I do not think it will take any considerable length of time. I do not know of any debate to be had upon it. I do not intend to discuss it at length myself, unless debate is started by some other Senator.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Otherwise, I should like to have the resolution go over until to-morrow.

Mr. BORAH. I do not think it will take any length of time to consider the resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I dislike very much to object to the immediate consideration of this resolution, but I consider it ill-advised, and really none of our business. I shall object to the immediate consideration of the resolution. I shall, however, satisfy myself when it comes up in the regular way with merely voting against it and shall not take up the time of the Senate to discuss it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution goes to the calendar.

AUXILIARY ENGINEER CORPS.

Mr. RANSDELL. By request I introduce a bill to create an auxiliary engineer corps in the United States Army for duty on works of public improvement, and I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (S. 1376) to create an auxiliary engineer corps in the United States Army for duty on works of public improvement was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. RANSDELL. To accompany the proposed bill is a brief statement explaining its purposes, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

Brief to accompany the proposed bill for an auxiliary engineer corps, under the direction of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

The purpose of this bill, briefly stated, is:

1. To provide an organization auxiliary to the Army Engineer Corps and subject to the orders of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, in the discharge of his duties and needed for the efficient and economical performance of the Government work under his charge.

2. To provide an efficient working organization, complete from top to bottom, with a military status based solely upon the merit system and with provisions for continuity of service and moderate pay, but with sufficient inducement offered men to enter and remain in the organization as a chosen profession and life work, in which the lowest-paid employee may have a chance to make something out of himself if he is made of the right stuff. As the honor men of the West Point Military Academy furnish the personnel of the Army Engineer Corps, so shall our colleges and schools throughout the United States furnish their honor men for the proposed personnel of the auxiliary engineer corps through the civil service. The functions of this organization are clearly set forth in the bill.

3. To provide a complete business and engineering organization for all its departments in the field and office of highly trained and experienced men as a national after-the-war necessity to meet existing conditions that will put the United States on a par with England, which has its Corps of Royal Engineers, and with France, which has its Corps de Pont et Chaussee, that construct and take care of the public works, transportation, and highway facilities in those two countries.

4. To meet existing unusual conditions which defy and hinder economical progress, that can not be met except by the legislation proposed in this bill, to lift the Engineer Service at large out of the present ever-shifting conditions, and to give permanency and stability to the service. Men enter the service and use the training they receive to obtain better positions and better pay outside the Engineer Service. There are no means available and no inducements to offer any man to remain in the service. Conditions in this respect are growing worse. Experienced men who have been in the service for many years quit to better their conditions financially, and in many instances they more than double their pay by leaving the service. The loss of every trained and experienced man is a dead loss to the service as well as a financial loss to the Government, and what is worse, it reduces efficiency, hampers and cripples progress, and at times brings work to a standstill. On the other hand, the men quitting the service have nothing to lose but everything to gain financially. The proposed bill remedies all these defects. There is a remedy provided nearly in every section, that is called for by present conditions.

5. The proposed legislation will stabilize wages on public works and will have the same influence on the Nation's industries. It will eliminate strikes. No one has ever heard or known of a strike within a military organization. The thing is impossible, unthinkable. The principles laid down in this bill when put to practice will provide the United States a well-organized and highly intelligent and scientific dependable working force, instead of the present force of individuals without esprit de corps, everyone for himself.

6. The three-year training period provided before a man can get into the permanent organization will call for those sound qualifications upon which the proposed organization will be built.

7. The Engineer Service at large now contains the men qualified and ready to be mobilized into the permanent organization, also some men who are in the three-year training period.

8. The war has revolutionized many ideas and given man's judgment a new setting. The legislation proposed by this bill is an evolution which is called for by conditions due to the war and for which there can be found no remedy except by an act of Congress. There is no other way to get out of the deep rut. All effort and progress now are like climbing up hill on roller skates; anyone who has ever tried the latter performance will understand the meaning.

9. It is not a change of engineers which the country called for, but a permanent organization with a military status, to consist of the experienced men trained in the Engineer Service, men with the special qualifications needed in the performance of our Nation's waterway work and with provision for filling its depleted ranks and under the orders and direction of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, so as to relieve the War Department of all duties not strictly military.

10. The proposed legislation is not a salary grasp; ability, length of service, and present pay establish the grade of the personnel in the auxiliary engineer corps, as shall be determined by the efficiency board provided in the bill.

11. The business men of this country will support this measure.

EMPLOYMENT OF ASSISTANT CLERK.

Mr. KNOX submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 70), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be, and is hereby, authorized to employ an assistant clerk at the rate of $1,800 per annum, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided by law.

EMPLOYMENT OF ADDITIONAL PAGES.

Mr. HARDING submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 69), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to employ five additional pages for the Senate Chamber, at $3 per day each, for a period lasting until the end of the present session of the Sixty-sixth Congress, to be paid from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

CALENDAR MONDAY.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that hereafter I shall insist upon the observance of the rule relating to Calendar Monday. This means that after the conclusion of routine morning business no Senator may speak or introduce any business not on the calendar so long as there is objection. I do this in order that the calendar may be considered during the morning hour on Mondays until 2 o'clock, as is contemplated by the rule. I give this notice now in order that Senators may understand that there will be nothing personal in any objection that I may make.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 3157. An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

TREATY OF PEACE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was informed privately by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] that he wanted to call up his resolution.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I supposed that the resolution came up as a matter of right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The ruling of the Chair has been for four years that such resolutions do not come up unless they are called up.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to have the resolution laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska.

The Secretary proceeded to read the resolution.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry, and, if I may do so, I should like to make a preliminary statement before I submit the question. The Indian appropriation bill is on the calendar. I am very anxious to get it up this morning. I do not think it will take very long to dispose of it. It is important that this legislation should get through at the earliest date possible, and I want to ask if debate is in order on the pending resolution during the morning hour?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is, after the routine morning business has been completed. It has been the invariable ruling that resolutions coming over were debatable.

Mr. CURTIS. Under Rule VIII it is provided that—

All motions made before 2 o'clock to proceed to the consideration of any matter shall be determined without debate.

Of course, the question is whether this resolution comes up as a matter of fact without motion. If it comes up as a matter of course it is subject to debate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is quite clear about this matter. It was the custom of Presiding Officers prior to the induction into office of the present occupant of the chair to formally lay before the Senate all resolutions coming over from a preceding day, but the present occupant of the chair has made the ruling, and the Senate has acquiesced in it, that he would not lay such resolutions before the Senate, but that the Senators who had submitted them should have the right to call them up before the close of morning business.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I shall not take up any more time, but I trust that the Senator from Nebraska will get through as soon as he can, because I should like to get up the Indian appropriation bill at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, of course I have no desire unduly to detain the Senate on this matter, and I have already assured the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] that I should not do so. I realize the great desirability of bringing before the Senate the appropriation bill to which the Senator from Kansas refers, but I have suggested to him that it would be a very easy matter under the circumstances for him to secure from the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] permission temporarily to lay aside the unfinished business, as we have done in many other cases, and then to put through the appropriation bill which he desires passed.

Mr. President, I ask first that the Secretary read the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 64), as follows:

Whereas the Senator from Idaho, Mr. BORAH, has stated in the Senate that certain interests in the city of New York have secured copies of the peace treaty with Germany while the American people have been unable to secure one; and

Whereas the Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. LODGE, has stated in the Senate that he knows of four such copies of said treaty of peace with Germany now in New York and that the only place where it is not allowed to come is the United States Senate; and

Whereas the Senator from Idaho, Mr. BORAH, has stated that the interests now having possession of said copies of said treaty are peculiarly interested in the treaty: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be, and it hereby is, authorized and directed to investigate the matter with a view to ascertaining the facts, and particularly to ascertain and report to the Senate the name of the persons, corporations, or interests which have secured copies of said treaty and from whom they were secured and by what methods, and also to ascertain and report to the Senate in what manner and to what extent said interests are "particularly" interested in said treaty. For these purposes the Committee on Foreign Relations, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and it is, authorized to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with the same, the expenses thereof, including the cost of travel, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I assume that there will not be any very substantial objection to the adoption of this resolution. I realize that, as a proper formality, it must first be sent to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and I shall later on ask that that action be taken; but it seems to me a matter of the most tremendous urgency that an investigation should be had of the charge made upon the responsibility of two Senators upon the floor of the Senate that copies of the peace treaty with Germany have fallen into the hands of New York interests while being withheld from the Senate of the United States.

The demand for an investigation should have been made by the Senators who lugged into the Senate this very serious charge. They do not appear to have appreciated either the gravity of their own statements, or the embarrassing position in which they place themselves by not demanding an investigation. They declare, in effect, that the President of the United States withholds copies of this treaty from the Senate, and they insinuate very broadly that he permits copies to go to business concerns in New York City. These concerns, they say, have particular interest in the treaty, of which they have secured advance copies.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, I am ready to take all the blame that can be placed upon me by the Senator, but I wish he would not say "they." I said nothing whatever about financial interests.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I shall quote what the Senator said——

Mr. LODGE. I wish the Senator would.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And I assume when the Senator from Massachusetts, leading the main body of the Senators on the other side of the Chamber, and the Senator from Idaho, leading the other faction of his party, concur on the same day in making these charges and insinuations against a coordinate branch of the Government, that they are in accord, and that what one of them says is indorsed by the other. These New York concerns——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Idaho has no objection to that statement, but he thinks that it may be a little harsh upon the Senator from Massachusetts. The Senator from Massachusetts did not say anything about "special interests" at all, nor "particular interests," nor anything of that sort. I was sorry he did not; but he did not.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, it is possible that the Senator from Massachusetts is in a slightly different attitude from the Senator from Idaho. They concurred, however, in their attack. Apparently these special New York interests having an interest in the treaty did not permit the Senator from Idaho to examine it while in their possession, whereas the Senator from Massachusetts appears to have been particularly favored. These New York concerns, they say, have particular interest in the terms of the treaty. This involves an attack upon the President of the United States of the most scandalous character.

It appears to be a new chapter in the attack on the treaty itself, a new chapter in which both of the Senators concur. It is done for the purpose of attacking the treaty. It conveys to the public mind the idea that there is a secret combination between the commission headed by the President in Paris and the business interests in New York, by which the latter are to be given advance information withheld from the Senate—a monstrous charge. Men who make such a charge owe it to the public to demand an investigation, and they would have demanded an investigation if they had been making a charge in the public interest and not merely for the purpose of injuring the great treaty and postponing the establishment of peace.

I was not in Washington on the day these senatorial statements and insinuations were made; but I searched the papers in vain to find a report of any demand by either of the Senators that the scandalous situation they pictured be investigated. Indeed, the Senator from Idaho went so far as to say upon the floor of the Senate that he did not want an investigation.

Personally I have no knowledge of this matter; I have never seen the treaty, nor asked to see it. I do not know the New York interests that have copies. If any New York interests have copies, they evidently have closer communication with the enemies of the treaty than with the friends of the treaty. I want to know how those New York interests got those copies, if they have them; the country wants to know; the Senate must find out. It is not sufficient to leave the matter to the confidential knowledge of the Senators who are fighting this treaty. We are all entitled to know what New York interests are using copies of this treaty in their business, not simply those Senators taken into the confidence of the aforesaid New York interests.

Mr. President, I shall not, unless it becomes necessary, take the time to quote into the RECORD all of the statements made by the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Idaho on June 3, but I notice one statement made by the Senator from Massachusetts in which he says that he held in his hand yesterday a copy of the treaty and that it was offered to him to bring here. He says that it was not given to him, but that it still exists in New York.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does he say why he would not accept it?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think he does.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What was the reason? I should like to have that go in the RECORD also; also the page from which the Senator is reading.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am reading from page 558; and as the Senator is so curious, I will read that paragraph.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to hear it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK (reading)—

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I will now take occasion to say what I was going to say out of order when the request for unanimous consent was before us. Now, I will say in order upon the woman-suffrage joint resolution that the treaty is in New York. I had a copy of it in my hand yesterday, and I heard of several others. I was offered a copy to bring on here and show to my colleagues. I said that no copy could come into my hands without being made public.

It evidently did come into his hands without being made public; and, if we are to believe the reports, it rested in his hands for an hour and a half.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. He meant that he would not accept it and bring it down here unless he made it public.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not know any great moral advantage of such a treaty coming into the hands of the Senator from Massachusetts and being withheld from the hands of his associates. I can see no great moral boast in that. If he held the treaty in his hands, he held stolen goods—goods probably secured by bribery; goods which the President of the United States and other international representatives in Paris had promised should not be made public, for public reasons, and in order that the negotiation of the treaty might not be interfered with—

Therefore, it was not given to me, but it is there in New York. I heard of four copies in existence in New York.

The Senator is very well advised, evidently, of these nefarious interests concerning which the Senator from Idaho has made some rather strong insinuations—

How many more there may be in the country I do not know; but, as far as I can make out, the only place where it is not allowed to come is the Senate of the United States.

That is a pretty strong statement for a Senator of the United States to make—that the President is withholding copies of the treaty from the Senate and permitting it to go everywhere else, and into the hands of concerns that have special interests in the treaty. How a Senator could have believed such a thing, and not have demanded an investigation, I do not understand.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will.

Mr. FALL. What information has the Senator that the President is withholding the treaty from the Senate?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. My information is of various characters; and it is a matter of world-wide notoriety that the representatives of the nations which made this treaty agreed, for the public interest and in the interest of an early peace, to withhold the publication of the copies until a result had been secured with Germany, just as has always been the case in the negotiation of treaties.

Mr. FALL. That is my understanding of the general situation—that is, that there should be no publicity given to the treaty—but I have not any information leading me to believe that the President has refused to give it to the Senate, because a treaty is given to the Senate in confidence, and publicity is not given to it except by the consent of the President or the Senate. We on this side, I am sure, have no information that the President would decline to give the Senate the treaty, but we have proof that the Senator from Nebraska is leading the opposition to an inquiry for the treaty. That is all we know about it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator is going far afield from the issue which is now before the Senate.

Mr. FALL. I will come to that issue before we get through with it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. When we come to debate the question of whether the Senate of the United States should break into presidential negotiations, and demand the tentative copy of a treaty before it has been signed by the enemy, the Senator is going into a field in which he will find no precedent whatever for the Senate making any such meddlesome demand.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And, if the Senator will pardon me, he is going into a field where George Washington denied that the Senate had the right to enter.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Absolutely.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to correct that statement a moment, the message of George Washington was to the House of Representatives; and he distinctly said that he had already furnished to the Senate of the United States all the information, including every particle of the evidence, every letter, and all communications.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator is right about that. It does happen that the House did ask for the information.

Mr. FALL. Exactly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the President denied the right of the legislative branch of the Government.

Mr. FALL. Oh, no. He denied it to the House, because of the publicity, and stated that he had already transmitted to the Senate of the United States all the information.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I desire to add, however, that he did not transmit it, or transmit anything, until after the treaty was completed and signed.

Mr. FALL. That is a question as between the Senator from Montana and historical records with reference to the matter and President Washington's own note to the House, to which reference has just been made.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, there is later authority on this question than George Washington.

Mr. BORAH. I was going to say, why do you quote George Washington? You have repudiated all his doctrines.

Mr. SWANSON. We have the illustrious Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] as a later authority on this question. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to read, for the edification of the Senator from New Mexico, what the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee said on this question. He is a very fine authority on the prerogatives of the Senate and the prerogatives of the President.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I shall be very glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. FALL. The Senator from Virginia always edifies the Senator from New Mexico. I shall be glad to have him pursue his ordinary course.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator from Massachusetts is the latest authority we have, in 1906.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, that was during the administration of a Republican President, was it not?

Mr. SWANSON. I was about to suggest that. I want to show what the Senator's views were when a Republican President was engaged in negotiations and a demand was made by some Democrats for certain information. I should like to put in a later authority on that point. This was the Algeciras conference, and Senator Bacon was trying to get some information with reference to it.

Mr. BORAH. May I make a suggestion? That has been read some twenty-five or thirty times. May I suggest that we have a special print of it, so that we will have ready access to it?

Mr. SWANSON. I shall be very glad to have printed the portion of it that I shall read:

He is entitled under the Constitution to come here and join with us in the consideration of treaties or other executive business. As a matter of fact, that was never done but by Washington, and it has been abandoned ever since, although the right remains recognized by our rule to-day. Yet I think we should be disposed to resent it if a request of that sort was made to us by the President of the United States.

* * * * * * *

Mr. President, I repeat we are justly jealous of our own prerogatives and our own rights, but we can not maintain them or insist upon them unless we are equally observant of the prerogatives and the rights of the other departments of the Government. It is a mere invasion of the powers and rights of the President if we are to plunge in at a stage of the negotiation where we have no business whatever and demand from him the instructions which he has given to his properly appointed representatives. When the treaty made by those representatives comes before us, then is the time, and not before, in which we can properly ask for information in regard to all which led up to it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator to ask a question?

Mr. SWANSON. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. What is the date of that?

Mr. SWANSON. January 24, 1906, when there was a Republican President.

Mr. NORRIS. That was before the promulgation of the doctrine of "open covenants of peace, openly arrived at." It does not apply now.

Mr. SWANSON. That does not change the constitutional right.

Let me give another suggestion to the Senator from Massachusetts, which, I think, has not been put. As was suggested to me by a distinguished Senator the other day, it would be just as right and just as just if the President were to send word to us that, if not incompatible with the public interest, he would be obliged if we would send him our secret Journal.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In conclusion, Mr. President, I have very little to say. The Senator from Massachusetts has gone on record in the declaration that this treaty is under the control of the President of the United States; that the United States has no representatives in Paris besides the President. He has made the statement, almost flat-footed, that those representatives, under the control of the President of the United States, have given out copies of this treaty. He states that there are at least four, and I think he really said five, copies extant in New York at the present time. The Senator from Idaho indorses what he says, and declares that those treaties are in the hands of interests which are using them for private purposes, because they are interested in the terms of the treaty.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, the Senator from Idaho asserted the right to print it in the RECORD, while the Senator from Massachusetts would not even bring it to the Senate at all. That is where they differ.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Now, I say the time has come for an investigation. I want to know what interests the Senator from Massachusetts has been talking to. I want to know what interests there are which are denounced by the Senator from Idaho as having special interests in the terms of this treaty. I want to know how those interests got possession of copies of this treaty, and hold them in New York at the present time, and confidentially discuss them with Senators of the United States. I think the people of the United States have a right to know, and therefore I ask that this resolution be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I wish the Senator from Nebraska would not talk in such a violent way. He frightens me, he frightens the Senate, when he gets so violent.

Let me say to my friend from Virginia——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I hope the Senator will not construe as violence what is simply a robust voice gathered upon the plains of the West.

Mr. LODGE. I do not know where it was gathered.

I want to say to the Senator from Virginia that that paragraph from my speech, which has been read here repeatedly—I think the Senator from Idaho understated it when he said it had been read twenty-five times—is just as correct and true today as it was then, absolutely. We can not compel the President to send anything here, and what I spoke about was asking for instructions, his instructions to his representatives. We are not asking for instructions. We are asking for a public document, and he can refuse it if he sees fit.

Now, Mr. President, let me come to the question of the investigation, which I shall be delighted to have ordered. I went to the chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate this morning and said that I hoped he would get through this morning this resolution getting authority from the Committee to Audit and Control. To my surprise I found that the Senator from Nebraska, who is in such a state of hurry and haste, had had it put over, so that I could not get it before the Senate this morning. If I had had my way we would have passed it and begun the investigation at once. I shall be delighted to have it come to my committee, which is also the committee of the Senator from Idaho, and we will investigate each other with great pleasure.

The Senator finds fault that we did not carry on an investigation in New York. I am not aware that we have any authority to carry on investigations.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Oh, Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. Let me finish. I did not interrupt the Senator.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But the Senator is misrepresenting my statement and my position, and I am sure he does not desire to do that. What I criticized the Senator for was not demanding an investigation in the Senate, as I have now demanded it.

Mr. LODGE. I noted down that the Senator said, "should have investigated."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; the Senator is enitrely mistaken. I have it here in writing.

Mr. LODGE. At all events, I saw no reason why we should undertake an investigation in New York.

Now, let me state all that the committee can possibly find out from me. I will state it now. It will save time.

I was shown a copy of the treaty with Germany by a friend of mine who is connected with no interest, but is entirely a private citizen. How it came into his hands I did not inquire. He is a man of the utmost uprightness of character. If I were at liberty to mention his name, which I am not, the whole country would know that there never was a more outrageous suggestion than to suppose that anything could have come into his hands by corruption. It came to him, I have not any question, in a perfectly legitimate way; I have no knowledge how.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS. Day before yesterday the Senator spoke of four copies of the existence of which he had knowledge.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me to tell my poor little story in my own way, I will come to that.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I stand rebuked by the unconscious arrogance of conscious power and will take my seat.

Mr. LODGE. There is no arrogance to it; but the Senator is trying to tell it, and no doubt can tell it much better than I. I wanted to go on and tell it in my own way, and then he can tell it in his way afterwards.

Mr. THOMAS. I merely asked a question, Mr. President, and I am sorry that I interrupted the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. I am coming to it if the Senator will permit me. I think I have at least the right to tell it in my own way. I had the floor.

I was going on to say that that copy I had an opportunity to examine, at least one article of it. The text of the treaty covers 208 folio pages. The whole treaty, French and English text both, covers 415 pages. The English text covers 208 small folio pages, as I recall. The only part that I acquired any sort of familiarity with was an article at the end, which seemed to be a sort of addendum to the body of the treaty with Germany, because it had nothing to do with the peace with Germany, but which established, at great length—I think it is as long as the league of nations article; that is a mere guess, but I should think so—a great and permanent organization for the internationalization of labor, a very interesting article. I was afterwards told by another gentleman, wholly unconnected with any great business or financial interests in any way, that he also had a copy, which he would allow me to take and examine at length; and I told him I preferred not to take any copy to bring here, because any copy that was put into my hands I should feel it my duty to make public. It was this gentleman who said to me that he knew of four copies in New York. That is merely hearsay. I know personally of only two.

I saw nobody representing a financial interest. I did not go within 2 or 3 miles of Wall Street. Therefore I can not bear testimony as to the possession of copies of the treaty by financial interests. But it was stated by the State Department when they were explaining what I had said and what I had seen, although the State Department was not with me when I saw it. They said that they thought I must have seen parts of the treaty which were in the hands of financial interests in New York. I suggest, when you begin to investigate, you investigate your own department at the start. They said that publicly. It was published in the newspapers.

Nobody has denied the presence of those copies here or in New York. Of course, there is a copy here in the State Department, and I have no doubt that Senators more favored than I have seen it. Those copies are here. How they came I do not pretend to say. They must have come from Paris. They must have been given out by somebody who had control of them. I do not pretend to say who did it. I only know they are here in this country and, on the authority of the State Department, that they are in the hands of some of the financial interests. That is not my statement.

Now, Mr. President, that is all I could suggest to any committee.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator state who in the State Department made that statement and to whom it was made?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Frank Polk made it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. To whom?

Mr. LODGE. He made it to the press, and it was printed in the press that evening.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator is willing sometimes to take the press statements, but I notice on other occasions he discredits them.

Mr. LODGE. I am not fond of speaking of private conversation, but I know personally that the statement was given. That is all I can give in the way of testimony. That is all I shall give. It would be on my part a gross breach of faith to state the names of the two gentlemen, who are friends of mine, who told me they had copies. That I shall decline, of course, to give; but anything beyond that question which the Senator from Nebraska thinks he will find serviceable I shall be only too happy to give, and I will call before the committee everyone he can suggest.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Including the peace commission?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; including the peace commission, if I can reach them. I shall be very glad to find out the whole of it. That is the whole story, as far as I know it.

Mr. FALL. If the Senator from Massachusetts will allow me a moment——

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. FALL. Does not the Senator think it would be a good idea to call before the Senate Committee the Senator from Nebraska himself, who a few days since in the Senate stated definitely of his own knowledge certain things with reference to this treaty, knowledge which none in this body has except as communicated by him. I refer to his statement with reference to the resolution of the Senator from California, made on the 23d of May and printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. For instance, he said that he can state definitely that no publication of this treaty had been made in any country whatsoever, and yet the public press notifies us of the fact that it has been made and is on sale in a book of 415 pages to-day, in Norway, Sweden, Denmark, or in any neutral countries of the Continent as well as in Germany. He has made the statement, as I understand him, that he knew the President of the United States wanted the treaty made public. He said:

> I do not know that I am going too far, but I feel justified in saying that the President of the United States would have no objection, so far as the United States and the people of the United States are concerned, to the full publication of this document, but it can not be published in the United States without getting back to other countries.
> As I say, I hesitate to go too far in stating things that I believe I know; but I do know that it would be a cause of infinite embarrassment, particularly in France, to make public at this time the present terms of the demands being made on Germany.

I suggest in the investigation the chairman should investigate as to the source of knowledge of the one member of this committee who apparently has some confidential knowledge which the other Members of the Senate have not.

Mr. LODGE. Of course the Senator from Nebraska is a leading and most distinguished member of the Foreign Relations Committee. He is right there, and he can investigate himself while he is investigating us. That is all very easily done.

Mr. President, the whole thing is very simple. There is no question about the fact that copies of the treaty with Germany are in this country. That is admitted by the State Department, and I can bear witness to having seen one. There is no question whatever that they are on sale in neutral countries, as the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] has just said.

Now, I can see no good reason why we should not have from the State Department the official copy of the text of a treaty which the rest of the world has no difficulty in procuring. But if the President thinks there is any reason why we should not have it, why does he not tell us so, and the whole demand would cease at once? Yet we know nothing but this hearsay, what the newspapers say, and what the Senator from Nebraska thinks the President thinks. One word would stop it.

Mr. FALL and Mr. HITCHCOCK addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Will the Senator from Massachusetts yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. FALL. I presume the Senator would not consider the sending of the treaty to the Senate as imparting instructions to us to publish it, or as necessarily followed by a publication of the treaty.

Mr. LODGE. Not in the least. All treaties are marked confidential, and they are published only when we take off the injunction of secrecy.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, a moment ago I said that George Washington had denied the right which is sought here. The Senator from New Mexico very properly said that matter happened to come before George Washington in the shape of a resolution from the House of Representatives. I then stated that he was perfectly correct about the source, but that the language which Gen. Washington used was equally applicable to either branch of the National Legislature. I shall quote that language now.

Mr. President, I am reading from one of the ablest recent presentations of the constitutional power of the United States as related to world affairs and treaty rights. It comes from the pen of the former Senator from Utah, Mr. Sutherland, one of the three greatest lawyers who have been in this body since I have been here—one of the best international lawyers. I can not find the original, but I am quoting it as quoted by him in this book.

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. FALL. Does ex-Senator Sutherland attempt to set out the entire letter of Washington or only a part of it?

Mr. WILLIAMS. He sets out so much of it as applies to the particular question that you and I are now discussing.

Mr. FALL. But he does not set out that portion of it which the Senator admitted was contained in the letter, to the effect that he had already communicated to the Senate all these documents.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; but not on the demand to the Senate nor by its right. The language that Gen. Washington used is this:

> The nature of foreign negotiations requires caution, and their success must often depend on secrecy; and even when brought to a conclusion a full disclosure of all the measures, demands, or eventual concessions which may have been proposed or contemplated would be extremely impolitic; for this might have a pernicious influence on future negotiations or produce immediate inconveniences, perhaps danger and mischief, in relation to other powers—

That is, foreign powers—

> The necessity of such caution and secrecy was one cogent reason for vesting the power of making treaties in the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, the principle upon which that body was formed confining it to a small number of members.

Then he goes on to deny the special right of the House of Representatives to make a demand of that sort.

Now, then, I want to quote a little from ex-Senator Sutherland in connection with this point. Then I shall quote a little from, perhaps, the ablest diplomatist and international lawyer that the other side has furnished to the country since the Civil War, with two exceptions—Senator Spooner, of Wisconsin. From ex-Senator Sutherland I now quote. He tells how in the convention forming the Constitution the framers had a great deal of dispute as to with whom should be left the treaty-making power, some of them wanting to imitate the example of Great Britain and leave it exclusively with the Executive, others wanting to go to the opposite extreme and leave it to the House of Representatives. Then ex-Senator Sutherland says:

> In the end the plan which was finally adopted commended itself to the good sense of the convention as insuring preliminary secrecy and expedition whenever necessary, without losing the benefit of the thorough consideration and popular approval which would result from the independent action of the Senate, in which every State would have an equal vote and an equal opportunity of being heard. Negotiation with foreign Governments is a matter of such delicacy that it can be carried on far better by a single person, like the President, than by a large number of officials, like the Senate, while the combined judgment of the larger number, including both President and Senate, respecting the value and wisdom of the result of the negotiation will generally prove a safer reliance.
> The unwisdom of premature and sometimes of ultimate public disclosure of treaty or other negotiations with foreign Governments is so clear that the refusal of President Washington to accede to a request from the House of Representatives to lay before that body the instructions, correspondence, and documents relating to the negotiation of the Jay treaty was approved by the House itself, and has ever since been recognized as establishing a wise precedent for subsequent guidance.

Now, Mr. President, our forefathers happened to be in that particular generation very remarkable men in their knowledge of what had been taking place upon the earth in connection with the formation of governments and the carrying of them on. They finally decided that so far as the negotiation of a treaty was concerned it should be left with the Executive, untrammeled, unworried, unbothered by anybody, and that so far as the making of a treaty was concerned, after the result of the negotiation was made known, that it should be the deliberate action of this body, representing in equal numbers the separate States of the Union, this Government being combined of these United States.

One of the three or four ablest men who have appeared upon the other side of the Chamber since the Civil War was former Senator Spooner, of the State of Wisconsin. Senator Spooner said, on page 1418 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 23, 1906:

> I believe that it is not a proper course to be pursued by the Senate in respect to our foreign relations, save in extraordinary circumstances, if at all.

That was in connection with a resolution that had been introduced by the late Senator from Georgia, Mr. Bacon, then upon the Foreign Relations Committee, wanting to know the status of the negotiation which the then President of the United States was carrying on.

The Senate—

Says Senator Spooner—

> has nothing whatever to do with the negotiation of treaties or the conduct of our foreign intercourse and relations save the exercise of the one constitutional function of advice and consent, which the Constitution requires as a precedent condition to the making of a treaty.

Not the negotiation of it.

> Except as to the participation in the treaty-making power, the Senate, under the Constitution, has obviously neither responsibilities nor power.

Mr. President, this comes with a good deal of weight when you consider the man who uttered it. He was by long odds the ablest man in connection with our foreign affairs I have known in this Chamber, except, perhaps, two others.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will continue reading, if the Senator will pardon me, until I finish this part from Mr. Spooner.

Mr. FALL. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS (reading)—

> From the foundation of the Government it has been conceded in practice and in theory that the Constitution vests the power of negotiation and the various phases—and they are multifarious—of the conduct of our foreign relations exclusively in the President. And, Mr. President, he does not exercise that constitutional power, nor can he be made to do it, under the tutelage or guardianship of the Senate or of the House or of the Senate and House combined.

Mr. President, from the beginning of this discussion down to now there has been a plain, palpable, and obvious effort and desire, or something that looked like it, to nag and worry and bedevil the President of the United States, not with regard to the making of a treaty but with regard to its negotiation, and every possible step has been taken to create in foreign countries the impression that his own people are not behind him. Instead of leaving him to his constitutional function, and then considering what he has done after he has done it and brought it here, you have been constantly suggesting and nagging and worrying and bedeviling, and you are up to it now.

Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts talks as if the treaty had been completed. The treaty not only has not been completed but we are in negotiation with Germany right now about its modification in certain respects, and it was a very wise thing upon the part of the President not to send a part of the treaty here, or the treaty in process of negotiation, instead of waiting until after it was finally negotiated. The treaty has not been negotiated yet. The other side to the treaty—Germany, Austria, Turkey—has not yet signed it. The other side to the treaty has requested modifications, and the latest news shows that, as far as the financial part of the treaty is concerned, there are going to be modifications. And yet you want your own Executive, charged by the Constitution with the exclusive right—not under your tutelage at all—of negotiating treaties, to send to you parts of the negotiations in process of construction. From day to day, I suppose, he ought to have sent you just what they had done the day before, according to these gentlemen, and then correct the day after to-morrow what they had undone the day before.

As to this particular matter of copies of the treaty being in New York, I will undertake to wager a doughnut or two that when we come to find out who has these treaties, who has these copies of the treaty, we will find that they are Republicans, and that the man who first brought back a copy, or several copies, of the treaty is a Republican, and a high financial magnate in the Republican Party.

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Just one moment. Now, then, as to how the copies could have gotten here, I can imagine only one honest way in which they could have come. The German commissioners violated faith, published the treaty, and sent it not only over Germany but over neutral countries. They afterwards apologized for it, and said that the publication had taken place at Berlin contrary to their will and without their consent. It is possible that one of these copies in French and in German and in English, which I am informed are on the streets in Holland, in Denmark, and in some other parts of the world, have been gotten hold of honestly; but the insinuation, if such an insinuation is intended—and I hope it is not—that the President gave it to some interests somewhere, while declining to give it to the Senate of the United States, or that somebody in the President's confidence, by the President's consent, did it, is a thing which I repel, and I do not believe is true.

Now I will yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I will not interrupt the Senator now, but I shall try to get the floor later.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well.

Now, Mr. President, there are those who think that this Government has been awkwardly constructed—the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is not one of them, I am glad to say—and that our forefathers blundered in many respects. Some people think that we ought not to have had a Government limited by the will of the people as expressed in the Constitution at all, but that it ought to have been left, as the British Parliament is left, to do whatever we thought was well and right. There are others who think that all of the lines of demarcation between the powers of the respective parts of the Federal Government in the Constitution are "more honored in the breach than the observance."

I believe that the Constitutional Convention did one of the wisest things it ever did when it put the treaty-making power just exactly as it did—in its first stage of negotiation, for the purpose of secrecy and surety and for keeping the confidence amongst nations and amongst States, exclusively in the hands of the President of the United States, for, as George Washington says here:

> The nature of foreign negotiations requires caution, and their success must often depend on secrecy; and even when brought to a conclusion a full disclosure of all the measures * * * proposed or contemplated would be extremely impolitic.

As Senator Spooner says in what I read you a moment ago, the very purpose and object of giving the President exclusive negotiatory power, as contradistinguished from the treaty-making power, was that the whole treaty power might work effectively. You can not carry the negotiations of a treaty to the newsboys on the street and have their votes as to what you are going to do next.

The President of the United States had a right to do what he has done; he was wise in doing it; and the proceedings in this body demonstrate his wisdom, for in so far as we have interfered we have interfered only to mar and not to mend.

Then when it came to the making of a treaty the framers of the Constitution were also wise there. They said that while we will entrust negotiations exclusively to the Executive, we will not trust the final result to him; he must take into his confidence then the ambassadors from the States who represent these United States in this Union and who are assembled in the Senate of the United States. So they made him do that.

Then, thinking further that the other House—the direct representatives of the people—were not consulted, they said, "We will make it safe by requiring two-thirds of the Senators present to vote affirmatively in favor of a ratification before a treaty shall be valid and binding. We feel assured that two-thirds of the Senators will never do anything in connection with our foreign affairs that a majority of the House of Representatives would not be in accord with."

Mr. President, if this copy or these copies of the treaty have not come by getting hold of the German copies, and if they have come to any special interests—and it will be discovered later on that the head of the interests is a Republican—then they must have been gotten out in some wrongful way; and if so, that is not a thing to be proud of.

So far as I am concerned, it seems to me, now that the Germans have published the treaty, it does not make much difference whether it is published everywhere else or by us or not; but the President has made an agreement with these other peoples that the treaty was not to be published until it was completely negotiated and until Germany had signed it. And, by the way, that is only courtesy and comity to Germany, enemy as she is. She did not live up to it; she violated the trust reposed in her. A part of the consideration that led men to come to that conclusion of temporary secrecy was that we ought to wait until the other side to the treaty has agreed to it before we send it to our own people—until Germany, Austria, Turkey, and Bulgaria have signed up.

The treaty can not be sent to the Senate until the negotiations are completed, and the negotiations can not be completed until Germany and the others have signed. It begins to look as though Germany is not going to sign, and that we shall have to go to Berlin. When we go to Berlin we shall have a different treaty. If we are forced to go to Berlin we are not going to be satisfied with the present treaty. There will then be other exactions. There will have to be additions to it.

Now, how are Senators helping the United States in Europe in these negotiations? Is what you are saying here in the shape of carping and criticism helping your representatives there? Are you gaining for them the greater confidence of neutrals and enemies and friends by what you are doing and saying here? If you are destroying that confidence, are you doing it deliberately and for a set purpose, or are you doing it accidentally and just out of pure foolishness? Which is it?

I think, Mr. President, that I have demonstrated the fact that the language of George Washington would apply to the Senate as well as to the other House, although the language which I have quoted was used in reply to a House resolution.

I wish merely to state this before I conclude: It has been universally admitted that the President's power of negotiation is so exclusive that he may make a treaty, have it signed, and then pocket it, as Thomas Jefferson did in the case of a treaty with Great Britain; or the President may send the treaty to the Senate, the Senate may amend it, and then he may pocket it at the White House, as Taft did in reference to the British arbitration treaty, because he declined to pursue the negotiation any further, and the Senate had no right to negotiate and no method of doing it, because that was the President's exclusive power and his exclusive right. As Taft said, you remember, "I merely put that treaty on the shelf, waiting for the people to elect a new Senate"; and he added, in his very felicitous and facetious way—he was the best loser, by the way, that America has ever had—"but the people instead of changing the Senate changed me," and the treaty is still on the shelf at the White House. He did, however, what he had a right to do and what everybody knew he had a right to do, as did Washington and Jefferson and Madison in the cases with which Senators are, or ought to be, acquainted.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, the Senator, of course, pursues one of the methods of argument by reading a portion of a document proving his point and declining or failing to read the other portion. In Senator Sutherland's work he was commenting upon a certain condition which might exist and giving his views with reference to the publicity of pending treaty negotiations or the publicity of certain documents after a treaty had been concluded. For the purposes of his argument no more than for the purposes of the Senator's argument was it necessary for him to disclose the entire facts of the case. It would not have been, however, at all disastrous, in so far as the argument was concerned which Senator Sutherland was making, to have disclosed the entire George Washington letter, but it would have been disastrous to the Senator if he was attempting to make any argument to disclose the entire Washington letter.

The House of Representatives called upon Washington by joint resolution for certain letters from and to foreigners during the negotiations in connection with a treaty. The treaty had been communicated to the Senate of the United States prior to that time, and the treaty was ratified by the Senate, I may say. The House of Representatives for the purpose of openly discussing not the treaty itself, because the seal of secrecy had at that time been removed from the treaty, but for the purpose of discussing the actions of certain negotiators and certain private information upon which the negotiators acted, requested this information from the President. The present occupant of the chair [Mr. POMERENE in the chair] will of course recall at that time that all sessions of the Senate of the United States were secret; there were no open debates in the Senate. In the House of Representatives the debates were open. President Washington replied, making the argument exactly as it has been read by the Senator against publicity of the negotiations or of private documents in public debate in the House of Representatives, but stated to the House of Representatives that he had sent every one of the papers requested by them, together with all of the other papers in the case, to the constitutional body entitled to their possession, the Senate of the United States. That statement is made in the same Washington letter.

I asked to interrupt the Senator for a moment while he was reading Senator Spooner's remarks, to request that he read Senator Bacon's remarks at that time. Senator Bacon was a very eminent and very prominent Senator, a member of the Foreign Relations Committee of this body for many years, and died as the chairman of that committee. It was his resolution to which Senator Spooner was objecting.

There are some Senators in this body, Mr. President, who are sticklers for precedent and who do not agree with the President of the United States, or at least with the declarations of the President of the United States, with reference to open diplomacy and "open covenants openly arrived at." I am sorry to say that there are many Senators upon my side of the Chamber who insist that all treaties should be discussed behind closed doors, with the audience excluded from the galleries. I am not one of those Senators. I think, sir, as the President said—and I shall not undertake to quote his words—when he addressed this body and the other body with reference to the Brest-Litovsk treaty which had just been made, a new era had come, and he congratulated Lenin and Trotski and the Bolsheviki that they insisted upon conducting the negotiations at Brest-Litovsk openly and publishing the treaty broadcast.

While the President of the United States should be pretty fair authority, and despite the fact that once before his sentiments upon this particular subject at issue have been read into the RECORD, yet in view of the fact that fifteen or twenty times the sentiments of Senator Spooner or the words of Senator Spooner and the words of Senator LODGE and others have been read into the RECORD, I shall presume upon the time of the Senate to call attention again, specifically, to the President's ideas entertained prior to this time, at least, and even later, when he addressed the Congress of the United States upon the German Bolsheviki treaty. Referring to the President, he says:

> But there is another course which the President may follow, and which one or two Presidents of unusual political sagacity have followed, with the satisfactory results that were to have been expected. He may himself be less stiff and offish, may himself act in the true spirit of the Constitution, and establish intimate relations of confidence with the Senate on his own initiative, not carrying his plans to completion, and then laying them in final form before the Senate, to be accepted or rejected, but keeping himself in confidential communication with the leaders of the Senate while his plans are in course, when their advice will be of service to him and his information of the greatest service to them, in order that there may be veritable counsel and a real accommodation of views, instead of a final challenge and contest. The policy which has made rivals of the President and Senate has shown itself in the President as often as in the Senate, and if the Constitution did intend that the Senate should in such matters be an executive council it is not only the privilege of the President to treat it as such, it is also his best policy and his plain duty. (Woodrow Wilson's Constitutional Government in the United States, ch. 5 (1917).)

Mr. President, I have maintained since my entrance into public life that secret diplomacy was the greatest evil which our democracy was compelled to confront, that there lay more injury and more evil to the body politic, to the people, to our Government itself, and to the perpetuity of our American institutions in secret diplomacy than in all other weaknesses contained in our form of government or written in our Constitution combined. If precedent as established is followed in the treatment of this matter now at issue—and precedent, of course, will be insisted upon even by those who under different conditions or at different times have urged an opposite point of view—as it is now being insisted upon, the great people of the United States will know nothing about this treaty until it is published, if it is ratified. They know nothing about it now, and it appears that they are practically the only people in the world who are in ignorance of it. They are not to be informed of it, and, finally, under the forms of precedent, it will be communicated secretly by the President of the United States when he brings it back with him to this Chamber, which will, upon motion of some Senator or Senators, proceed to close its doors and consider this treaty changing the form of the Government of the United States, in secrecy from the people whose Government it is.

Senators insist upon precedent in this matter. Why, Mr. President, a portion of the treaty, a tentative draft of the treaty, was brought back by the President of the United States, and the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate and the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House were called into consultation by him. He presented it to them; they discussed the matter there. What was the purpose? Why should he have presented a portion of the treaty to them, and why should his associates here, or his counsellors in the Senate, insist that he does not want the other portion of the treaty presented, confidentially at least, to us?

They may be right. The Senator from Nebraska is always assuming knowledge which he does not impart to us. He has intimate sources of knowledge, doubtless. He may be justified in saying that the President of the United States does not want the true text of this treaty to come before the Senate, and be considered by it, either publicly or privately. However, Mr. President, in view of the many declarations of the President of the United States upon this subject, unless I have a definite assurance that the President has so stated—not intimated to some Senator, in whose word, of course, I will have confidence—I must say that I doubt the objection of the President of the United States to a consideration of the treaty as so far agreed upon.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FALL. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator conceive conditions to exist in Europe that might call for withholding the publication of the treaty from the public until after it had been submitted to the German representatives and they had full opportunity to discuss it and present it to their Government, and perhaps their Government had opportunity to take advices from various parts of the—Empire, I was about to say? I will withdraw the word "Empire" and say "the Republic of Germany."

Mr. FALL. I can conceive of such conditions, but only upon the assumption that the people of France do not want this treaty, and therefore that the negotiators are afraid to give publicity to it, or that the people of England do not want the treaty, and therefore that their negotiators decline to give it to them.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator think that the delegates from Germany themselves would request that the treaty be withheld from the public until they had an opportunity to examine it and to communicate its contents to their Government?

Mr. FALL. Oh, the Senator may be correct. Germany may have made such a request. Of that I have no knowledge. I do not know whether she has or not. Has the Senator seen any suggestion that Germany has requested that it be kept private?

Mr. KING. I have seen some intimation in some of the press to the effect that the German delegates asked that knowledge of the terms of the treaty be withheld from the public.

Mr. FALL. Well, I have not. There were no German delegates until the treaty was prepared and presented to them.

Mr. KING. I understand; but I mean after it was presented to them. Does not the Senator think also that a treaty of this character, where it was only tentative—that is to say, it had not been agreed upon by the other side, and they had not presented any definitive terms—should be withheld from the public until the other side had an opportunity to examine its contents and to make their suggestions, if they had any to make, of changes or modifications which they regarded as essential to secure their rights and perhaps to secure the support of their Government?

Mr. FALL. The course which the Senator has suggested is, of course, one which has been almost universally followed in the past history of the world; but it has been said that it was so followed because it was in the power of those who were in absolute control of the countries of the world to make treaties of peace or treaties of commerce or treaties of alliance, offensive or defensive, without the knowledge of their constituents or of their subjects, and that it was not the business of the subjects. It was under conditions of that kind that this precedent was established. The President of the United States himself has called attention to it much more eloquently than I can. We had all hoped that those conditions had been so changed that the negotiations for this peace might be open.

Now, as to our own attitude and as to what I think, replying further to the Senator, allow me to say this:

Great Britain and France and Italy and the other Allies had been at war with the German Empire for several years before the United States entered the war. These nations, including Russia, had a treaty—a hard and fast treaty—negotiated between the representatives of those countries, and under their constitutions binding upon the countries themselves, not submitted to their people in any way whatsoever. They had entered into a treaty by which it was agreed that Russia would not make peace with Germany or with the Central Powers without the consent of Italy, France, and Great Britain; that Great Britain would not make peace with Germany or the Central Powers without the consent of France, Italy, and Russia, and each of the other nations was bound by that treaty.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. FALL. Let me conclude my sentence. Each of the other nations was bound by that treaty. We knew that treaty to exist when we entered the war. The Congress of the United States declared that the acts of the German Empire constituted war, and that we declared the state of war thus thrust upon us to exist. We did not declare war against Germany, as the Senator recalls, directly. We made that declaration, knowing that the Allies had this agreement between themselves, that they would meet in common at the peace table, and that neither would sign any agreement of any kind or character with any or all of the Central Powers without the consent of the others, or unless the others also signed it.

Now, that far I am correct. If the Senator wishes to ask me a question, I will yield at this point.

Mr. KING. I was not quite sure whether I apprehended the meaning of the Senator; and I wanted to ask him whether he felt that it was an act for which the Allies should be criticized, when they were in a war for their very existence, that they entered into treaties, offensive and defensive, and those treaties stipulated that neither should make a treaty of peace with the enemy without the consent of all?

Mr. FALL. Oh, no; oh, no. I have not the remotest idea of criticizing the Allies. Anything is justifiable under the plea of self-defense, as the Senator knows well as a lawyer. This was a perfectly justifiable act, of course, and I am not attempting to criticize it at all; but I am stating the historical and record facts, that the United States did not enter into any such alliance with those States. It could not have done so, except by negotiations carried on through the President, presented to and ratified by this body. Therefore, I can say that this Government had no understanding of any kind or character with reference to the signing of peace treaties with the other Allies. Is not that statement correct, as the Senator understands?

Mr. KING. As I understand the statement, I think the Senator is correct.

Mr. FALL. Very well.

Mr. KING. But it does not seem to me that the mere fact that there was a treaty, to which the Senator has referred, between the Allies before we entered into the war changes the proposition as to the propriety, if those making the treaty thought that such was the proper course to pursue, of withholding knowledge of the treaty from the public until certain conditions had been complied with, or until the treaty had been submitted to the enemy and they were perfectly willing that it should be disclosed to the public.

Mr. FALL. The Senator has asked me a question as to my judgment about these matters, and I will proceed to give it. I am trying to give it logically, and I will reach the point he is speaking of right now. I have it in mind.

Mr. President, remember that we were not a party to any treaty as to how the terms of peace should be arrived at. Remember that the President of the United States had solemnly said to the Congress of the United States and to the people of the United States that with the causes of this war we were not concerned; we had nothing to do with it. Remember that only recently the Vice President, the presiding officer of this body, has publicly stated that he was ashamed to acknowledge—I am not attempting to quote his words, but I think this is what he said, in effect—that for years he had believed that we had nothing to do with or nothing in common with those who were fighting this war, that our interests were not as theirs, and that he had changed his opinion. The President of the United States notified the people of the United States that with the causes of this war—whether they might be ethnological, whether they might be geographical, whether this war might have been brought about because there were certain numbers of alien people within the boundaries of a certain geographical division, irrespective of the cause of the war itself—this country was not concerned. Many of us disagreed with him at that time. I am frank to say that I am one who disagreed; but he held that opinion.

Therefore, when this country entered the war, in every communication to foreign Governments and to our own people on the subject, the President of the United States treated the Allies not as allies of this country, but, to use his own expression, as those countries with which we were associated in fighting the war; and I defy any Senator to read every remark made by the President upon this subject and to point out to me where he has not, with all his magnificent ability in handling language, declined to commit himself to the fact that we were allies of Great Britain, France, Russia, Italy, or of the other combatant countries. Not only do I defy you to show where he has ever intimated that we were allies, but, with his usual insight and discernment in the use of words, he has used a word which would convey to any mind the distinction which he has clearly in mind and which, up to the time when he went to Europe, he undoubtedly insisted that the people of the United States should bear in mind.

Now, sir, what were the causes of the war, as he set them forth in his message to the Congress of the United States? I am not going to undertake to quote them. Senators remember why we went to war with Germany—why the President of the United States stated that we were justifiable in declaring a state of war to exist, which he did ask us to declare to exist. Not one word with reference to the thousand and one matters which he is now considering through the assistance of the geographical and ethnological experts, who have overrun the streets of Paris; not one word of any invitation or desire upon his part that we should divide the roundheads from the longheads in Europe and set aside to each of them, or to the Czechs or to the Teutons, a certain geographical division. I say that the President of the United States might well have followed the example of other Presidents before he proceeded to Europe. He might well have taken counsel with himself; he might well have acquired the frame of mind which he was undoubtedly in when he wrote those words which I have read into the RECORD. If he had any idea of entering into such negotiations as he is now embarked upon he might well have taken counsel with himself and followed the example of other illustrious Presidents and consulted the Senate of the United States before he proceeded to bind himself hard and fast to Great Britain, to France, to Italy, and to the other allied countries of whom we are only associates.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FALL. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator mean to suggest in the statement he has just made that the President of the United States or that the Government, in dealing with the Central Powers after their defeat, should have conducted negotiations separate and apart from the governments with which our Government was associated during the war?

Mr. FALL. I mean just exactly that. I mean, sir, that the United States of America was entitled to deal, through its President as negotiator, with the German Empire, Austria, and their allies, and that upon making their peace we should have declared it, brought our soldiers home, and they should be here now, in my judgment, and restored the conditions prior to the war, or agreed upon new conditions upon which our people might do business with the German people.

Mr. KING. Then, as I understand——

Mr. FALL. Pardon me; I am going to answer the Senator. That is my judgment and it is my judgment of what should be done to-day. Then, as we were associated with these other people, and as the people of the United States of America are a peaceful people; as the people of America, while a great warlike people, are not a military people; as the people of the United States of America want peace forever, and will never change the condition of peace of their own free will, then the President of the United States, and I think justifiably, should have said, and I think his hands would have been upheld had he said: "We will now sit here; if you desire, we will counsel with you when you undertake to arrange the much more complex conditions existing between you and the German Empire. We have been your associates in this fight. We have fought to prevent future wars. We have fought for the United States of America, and its fight. Now, we are perfectly willing to be enrolled among those who will use every effort consistent with national sovereignty and integrity and American patriotism to assist you in preserving peace, not only for the next 10 years or the next 40 years, but for the next 100 years, or for unknown or untold centuries. We will sit here, if you so desire. We have settled our personal matters, those of particular interest to the people of the United States. We are back on a peace basis, except that this treaty has not yet been ratified. Pending its ratification, pending its consideration, pending my return to the United States carrying it with me as a completed document, I will sit here and counsel with you, with this statement—that if you can arrive at a treaty between yourselves any portion of which tending toward keeping the peace of the world in the future I can support, I will underwrite that treaty for you or that portion of that treaty."

You have been asking what I thought should have been the process of the negotiations, what I thought should have been the conduct of the President of the United States, with due deference to the great position which he holds, I say that these are my sentiments, and what I should have done.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. FALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator think that if the President of the United States were merely an advisor, a sort of an amicus curiæ, as I understand the position of the Senator, in the negotiations, then after the treaty of peace had been made between the allied Governments and the Central Powers, if this Government had underwritten it he would have subjected himself to a storm of criticism——

Mr. FALL. Oh, Mr. President——

Mr. KING. Let me complete the question.

Mr. FALL. But the Senator assumes to put me in a position which I do not occupy.

Mr. KING. As I understood the Senator, and I am, of course, placing the interpretation upon the Senator's remarks that seemed to me to be obvious. Assuming that my interpretation is correct, does not the Senator think that would have been an entangling alliance against which he and other Senators are now inveighing?

Mr. FALL. What are you in now?

Mr. KING. I will wait until the treaty is signed, and then I shall be very happy to tell the Senator.

Mr. FALL. You saw a tentative draft of the proposed league of nations. What does the Senator call that? I did not propose the league of nations. I stated distinctly, and I reiterate it now for the benefit of the Senator, that looking on during the negotiations for peace, if I, in my judgment, believed that those negotiations had resulted in such a state of affairs that under the terms of the treaty peace could be kept, that it would conduce to peace, in so far as the terms relating to peace or conducing to peace hereafter were concerned, I would have ratified it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MYERS in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate resolution No. 12.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I had not intended to enter upon this line of discussion. It was brought out, as the Senators know is so often the case, by first one suggestion and then another. I shall consider, with the permission of the Senate, at some early date in the future some portions of this treaty and state some of my particular objections to it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN obtained the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the Senator from New Jersey will permit me, everyone seems to be in favor of the resolution submitted by my colleague. Can we not have unanimous consent to refer it to the committee? Then if Senators want to do so they can continue to debate it.

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask to which resolution the Senator refers?

Mr. NORRIS. The resolution of the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

Mr. THOMAS. The resolution of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is now the unfinished business before the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand, but it will take only a moment to get unanimous consent that this resolution of investigation be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Nebraska for that purpose?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I am perfectly willing to do so if it is understood that I do not lose the floor.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is interested in this resolution.

Mr. NORRIS. He is not opposed to it; he is in favor of it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I thought he might want to discuss it.

Mr. NORRIS. He can discuss it at any time.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not know whether he will want to discuss it when it is away from the Senate or not. I think I shall object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made and the resolution goes to the calendar.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I may be wrong about the position of the Senator from Idaho, but I know he was waiting here and expected to discuss the matter.

Mr. NORRIS. He can discuss it when it comes back from the committee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand that, but he may want to discuss it now in view of the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]. Let it lie on the table until the Senator from Idaho returns to the Chamber.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. May I suggest to the Senator from Washington that the discussion for the last hour has been on the resolution which the Presiding Officer has just laid before the Senate anyway? The Senator from Idaho will have ample opportunity in which to present his views and to answer the senior Senator from Nebraska, so I trust the Senator will make no objection to the request for unanimous consent to refer the resolution to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It may only delay the reference of it until the Senator from Idaho comes into the Chamber. Then, if he does not want to discuss it at that time, it can go to the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the request of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. NORRIS. My request was that the resolution introduced for the investigation by my colleague be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, where it has to go under the rule before we can pass it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that objection was made.

Mr. NORRIS. I so understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution then goes to the calendar.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator from Iowa yield to me for a moment?

Mr. KENYON. I was just going to ask a question with the permission of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. I would like to ask the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], whose resolution is now before the Senate and the unfinished business, when he expects to get a vote on it? There are some very important bills on the calendar, which we would like to have brought up, and this stands in the way of any other business.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I hesitate to state when I expect to get a vote on it, but I will answer the Senator from Iowa by saying that I am going to endeavor to get a vote upon it and shall continue in that endeavor every time the matter is laid before the Senate until a vote is obtained. I trust it may be within the next hour or so. If not, I hope within the next day or so, and if not then, within the next week or so, but at any rate I am going to continue it as the unfinished business until it comes to an issue and we learn exactly what our rights are or whether we have any rights at all.

Mr. KENYON. Then I hope the Senator will not lay the resolution aside for anything that may come along, but let us get rid of it and go on with some other business that does not require so much time.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I quite agree with the Senator, and I shall not consent to lay it aside again.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution we were discussing before 2 o'clock be laid on the table without prejudice.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is satisfactory to me, unless we can have it referred.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] thinks the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] may want to speak upon it, and he does not wish to have it referred until the Senator from Idaho says whether he wants to speak upon it or not. This will not delay it long. Unanimous consent can be asked later in the day that it be referred to the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah asks that the resolution lie on the table, going over without objection. Is there objection?

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to ask the Senator from California if he will not consent to temporarily lay aside the unfinished business, so that I may call up the Indian appropriation bill? It is very important that that bill should be acted on speedily. I thought the order had been made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would like to know first if there is any objection to the request of the Senator from Utah. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. By unanimous consent, that will be the order.

Mr. CURTIS. I now renew my request of the Senator from California. It is important that the Indian appropriation bill shall be passed before July 1. In some of the departments they are already issuing furloughs to clerks because they have not money to pay them for this month. That being true, I would like to get the Indian appropriation bill through this afternoon. I do not think it will take over an hour or an hour and a half. If it should take a longer time, then I would very gladly consent to laying it aside.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I regret exceedingly that I can not comply with the request of the Senator from Kansas. I would be delighted to do so, but so much time has been occupied with what seemed to me a simple proposition that I want to bring it to a conclusion at the earliest possible moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. CURTIS. I give notice that I am going to stay here and do my best toward calling up the Indian appropriation bill. To-morrow morning, if it is not called up to-day, I shall call it up at the conclusion of the morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business, Senate resolution No. 12, is before the Senate and the pending question is the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations, on which the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BORAH subsequently said: I understand that during my absence from the Chamber the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] went over upon the supposition that I might desire to debate it and therefore it was not permitted to be referred. I wish to say that if the Senator from Nebraska will ask unanimous consent, which will not interfere with the pending order, that it go to the committee, whatever I have to say upon it I can say while it is in the committee just as well as while it is here. If the Senator will ask permission that it be considered now, I will not object.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution introduced by me last night be now referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPENCER in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the resolution is referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I want to say a few words briefly in support of the resolution offered by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]. I do not propose to make any extended remarks. I think this issue has been clearly debated by the Senate, probably at too great length, and I noticed this morning that the discussion of the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] drifted into the question as to why the Senate was not furnished with a copy of the treaty. Some few days ago I introduced a similar resolution, requesting the Committee on Foreign Relations to transmit to the Senate an official copy of the treaty of peace. I care nothing for the form the resolution is to take. The Senate should be furnished with a copy of the treaty of peace immediately.

From my State and from every section of the country there is a demand for an authentic copy of this very important document, insistent inquiry as to why it is withheld and suggestion that continued refusal to make public the treaty necessarily implies that no reliance can be placed on the summary. Demand for publicity is made by lawyers, bankers, professional and educational men, and also by importers and manufacturers who are anxious to shape their commercial policy according to the lines of the treaty. To many of these men the summary has become an object of suspicion, and to some of actual distrust.

We have never had a war similar to this, and there was never so much interest in any public question. Anxiously the people awaited information of the treaty, and all that they received was a publication in the newspapers of what purported to be a summary. One naturally would expect a summary to be followed by the publication of that which was summarized. A sufficient time has elapsed for the receipt of the treaty. In fact, I am informed it is in the hands of the State Department. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], in his recent speech, if I understood him correctly, gave as the reason why the treaty is withheld that negotiations are still in progress, and then he volunteered the information that some changes have been made in it, information based apparently not on any word of the President or of the Department of State but derived solely from the press. If treaties can be made only with the advice and consent of the Senate, is it not strange that the Senate must look to the press for information? If our sole source of information is the press, can anyone maintain that the treaty is being made with our advice? Perhaps there are some among us who will maintain that the treaty is being made in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution. To me, a layman, it seems that the treaty is being made in open defiance of all precedents. How can anyone say that the treaty is being made with the advice of the Senate when the Senate knows nothing of the negotiations except what it gleans from the press? Can it be that he who is negotiating that treaty believes that he needs no advice and spurns the provision of the Constitution which requires that treaties must be made with the advice of the Senate? An alleged detailed summary has been published broadcast throughout the country. If it is a summary, if it is honest, if it was given forth in good faith, why is the whole document, now that it is in possession of the State Department, withheld from publication?

I should like to ask the former chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, who has acted as the spokesman of the administration, this question: What is the real reason the official draft of the treaty is not forthcoming? Is there any reason why it should be withheld? And this question also: Has the former chairman been afforded an opportunity of seeing and reading the copy said to be in the State Department?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I have stated to-day that I have neither seen nor asked to see a copy of the treaty. I am confident that it would be a breach of the proprieties for me to ask the Executive or any branch of the executive department of the Government to look at a copy of a treaty that is not yet negotiated, a copy of a treaty that will not be fit to come to the Senate until it has been negotiated in accordance with the universal custom of the Government since it was established. There is not an instance the Senator can point to in the last 100 years in which the Senate has asked the Executive to send to it a copy of a treaty under negotiation.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I thank the Senator for his frank statement. He has quoted a precedent, but I will quote later in my speech the reasons why the precedent should be at this time disregarded by the President, because he himself has made a change by his messages to Congress in the very precedent and policy heretofore established.

If there is any real reason why it should be withheld, why does not the President make a plain statement to Congress and show why secret covenants secretly arrived at are indispensable. It is stated that the treaty contains a provision that when three signatories are obtained from the allied powers, the treaty becomes effective. Does this mean that if Italy, France, and England signed, they may resume commercial relations with Germany immediately, and thereby secure an advantage over the United States, unless this Senate will take the treaty on faith, and, without even reading it, consent to it? If any attention is to be paid to our commercial interests, is it not right and proper that a copy of the treaty be furnished to this Senate, so that its study may be at once commenced?

It may be that, owing to the difficulty with Italy, it was necessary to frame the treaty in this way, but, as I understand it at the present time, Italy is in agreement, and the danger that lurks in this provision may fall on the United States.

I can not understand why, if the German delegates are to be entrusted with this treaty, the United States Senate can not be trusted with it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The German delegates are no more entrusted with this treaty than the representatives of the United States are entrusted with it. The German delegates are not the treaty-ratifying body. They bear the same relation to Germany that the President of the United States and his associates on the American commission bear to our country. They are to negotiate the treaty. After they have negotiated it, after they have signed it, it will then be submitted to the ratifying body in Germany. The Senator realizes that this treaty has not been laid before the British Parliament; he realizes that it has not been laid before the Chamber of Deputies; it has not been laid before the Italian Parliament for ratification or for reading, even. It has not been laid before any ratifying body. It is exclusively and properly in the hands of those who are engaged in negotiating it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Senator probably well knows there is no parliamentary body except this one that has the ratifying power. I do not know the source of his information, and I venture to say that a copy of this treaty, or a correct summary of it, has been perused and scanned by the members of the parliamentary bodies of Europe.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator from New Jersey is mistaken in saying that the Senate of the United States is the only body which will pass in ratification upon this treaty. It is the custom with treaties of this sort to submit them for ratification to the responsible Governments of the country. It is true there have been treaties negotiated in the past of a minor character that were not submitted to Parliament, but this treaty undoubtedly will be submitted to the House of Commons for approval.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I see nothing in the argument of the Senator from Nebraska which will convince me that the treaty should be withheld from the Senate and the people of the United States. Those of us who are to bear the responsibility to vote upon it are anxious to study it in connection with the proposed covenant for a league of nations, and we should not be denied that right. Neither should the President longer withhold information from the American people, in view of the promise he has made to them.

It was stated here the other day that it was contrary to precedent to send to this body a treaty of peace, inasmuch as it is left to the President to negotiate the treaty, and that, therefore, it would not officially come before this body until he had presented it. The President, however, is acting as a peace delegate in this connection rather than as President. What has been the situation? In every war that we have ever had—and there never was one like this—the President has been in Washington directing the peace commissioners and conferring with the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate. He remained at the White House, ready to give to the treaty his impartial opinion and, when necessary, instructing the peace commissioners and directing changes if in his judgment the draft is not in the interests of the United States. Finally he sends it to the Senate with his recommendations. The President in this connection is acting as a peace delegate, and when he returns to the United States he returns with the treaty. He comes as a peace delegate, it is true, but really as a partisan committed to the terms of peace, and the American people are denied his impartial judgment and opinion as their President.

The only coordinate branch of government which can give the American people an impartial consideration of this treaty, inasmuch as they have been deprived of the impartial judgment of the President, is the Senate. It is therefore desirable that the President should immediately release the text of the treaty of peace in order that we may have sufficient time to consider the terms and give to the peace delegation at Versailles, as representatives of the people of this country, our suggestions.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should like to know the attitude of the Senator from New Jersey. Assuming that the President either wisely or unwisely has agreed with the other delegates to the peace conference not to give it out, what would the Senator say to that?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will come to that later, because I will state to the Senator from Montana that it is in open defiance of the President's promise to the American people that he would have no secret covenant secretly arrived at.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Would the Senator have him break his promise to the other representatives?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I would have him revise it and say the time has come when the American people should have the information, as I promised them on January 8, 1918, they would have.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Permit me to remind the Senator the resolution is not to ask the President to revise his promise, but to break his promise, assuming that it has been given.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator, in connection with the question asked by the Senator from Montana, if the President has promised the other Governments that he will not give publicity to the treaty, then has he not already violated that agreement in giving a summary, assuming the summary to be correct?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. Is not that just as bad, if that is a correct summary, as to give us the treaty itself?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am very glad the Senator has asked that question. I think everyone naturally assumes, and it is a very reasonable assumption in view of everything we know and have heard about this matter, that the representatives at the peace conference agreed among themselves not to give out the full text of the treaty, but to give out only a summary thereof, and that summary has been given out in strict accordance with the agreement, presumably.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator assume that the summary is correct and that it is a summary of the entire treaty?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator from Montana assumes that the summary was given out by and under the direction of the delegates at the peace conference.

Mr. NORRIS. But the Senator has not answered my question.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I assume that it is a reasonably accurate summary.

Mr. NORRIS. Assume that it is not only reasonably accurate, but that it is accurate. It seems to me we ought to have no assumption if that summary has come from the President.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. How can I assume it?

Mr. NORRIS. Then what is the difference between giving that summary publicity and making the whole treaty public and letting everyone draw his own conclusion as to what it is?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is another question altogether. That is a question that should be addressed to the wisdom of the conference at Paris. They agreed among themselves, I assume, not to give out the full treaty, but to give out a summary which, I assume, they approved.

Mr. NORRIS. Again, the Senator has not answered the question. What is the difference between the two, as far as publicity is concerned, if this summary is correct? What more harm could come from giving out all the treaty and letting everybody draw his own conclusion as to what it might mean than giving out somebody's conclusion as to what the treaty means?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not know that there is the slightest difference, but I am directing my mind to what they did over there. They reached the conclusion that it would be prudent and wise to give out a summary and that it would be imprudent and unwise to give out the full treaty. They may have erred, they may have reached a very senseless conclusion, but I want the Senator to assume that the President of the United States, either upon his own motion or being constrained to that course by the views of the others, agreed that the whole treaty should not be given out.

Mr. NORRIS. Assuming that to be true, we have not any official knowledge of it. The reply to this resolution, if those are the facts, would give an official statement in substance the same as the Senator from Montana has given, and that would be an answer; that is, I take it——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But it would be quite appropriate.

Mr. NORRIS. While it would convince me that it was a very unwise thing to do, as the Senator said, he might conclude it was a foolish thing to do, it would at least be a proper answer to the resolution, and, I presume, would end the controversy.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But would it not be equally appropriate for the Senate to find out what the facts are before it demands the production of the treaty?

Mr. NORRIS. That is the way to find out. I do not believe there would be any difference in passing a resolution that would ask the President whether he has made this kind of an agreement. Would it not be just the same thing, in effect, as to pass this resolution and ask him to send the treaty to us?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am very glad, indeed, the Senator from Nebraska takes the view that if the President did enter into such an agreement, either willingly or being constrained to do so by reason of the views of the other delegates there, we ought not to ask him to break his agreement.

Mr. NORRIS. No; I would not, and if the President makes that answer, no matter how great a mistake I might think he had made, if he says officially that those are the facts, then it is finished; I will have to abide by it, and I would abide by it. It seems to me this resolution is the way to reach it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have no quarrel with the Senator from Nebraska, only I think the right way is to ascertain the facts beforehand.

Mr. NORRIS. How can that be done?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The State Department will tell you. The Committee on Foreign Relations is to ascertain what the fact is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] has the floor, and he will proceed.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] that I would far rather have the President keep his promises to the American people and revise his promise to the peace delegates than to break his promise to the American people.

Mr. WALSH of Montana and Mr. McCORMICK addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield to the Senator from Montana, in view of the fact I made the statement just now.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I quite agree with the Senator. I am wholly in accord with his desire that if the President made such a promise I should like to ask him to revise it; but I have not the slightest doubt that before he made it he had in mind his promise to the American people. I have no doubt in the world if he could have his own way this treaty would be placed in the form in which it is now, even if it is incomplete, before the American people. We all understand that at the outset he was desirous of giving to this proceeding a greater degree of publicity than was given to it, but he was overruled by representatives of France, Italy, and Japan, if we can rely upon——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Where does the Senator——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Wait a minute. I am coming to this point. I apprehend very likely that if the President was asked to revise his promise he would say he had reflected upon the matter with the other gentlemen associated with him. If that were true, what would the Senator from New Jersey do? Would he still demand the treaty?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I most certainly should demand that the President keep his pledge made to the American people January 8, 1918. I yield now to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I venture to suggest to the Senator from Montana that, if this entirely respectful resolution were passed, it would fortify the President in suggesting to his colleagues that the American people still cherish some faint faith in the pledge that we would have "open covenants openly arrived at," and would help him to persuade his colleagues that he ought to abide by his pledge therein implied.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. May I ask a question, with the indulgence of the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I desire to say that I do not agree with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] that this is an entirely respectful resolution. Attention has already been called in the Senate to the fact that it is not in the form of the respectful resolutions which have usually been addressed to the President with reference to such matters.

In that connection, reference was made this morning to a late discussion on this general subject by Senator Sutherland, formerly a Member of this body, who states in the very same connection that the only appropriate way to draft a resolution in relation to matters of this character is to ask the President respectfully, if the matter is not inconsistent with public policy, to transmit the documents that are requested.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I care nothing for the verbiage of this resolution. I hope it is in plain terms calling for a copy of this treaty. I think the time has come to speak plainly, and I will not——

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. No; I will not yield until I finish, and then I shall be very glad to answer any question. I am going to conclude what I have to say in a few moments. I have been interrupted so often that I have spoken longer than I intended.

The only coordinate branch of government which can give the American people an impartial consideration of this treaty, inasmuch as they have been deprived of the impartial judgment of the President, he being committed at the peace table, is the Senate of the United States. It is therefore desirable that the President should immediately release the text of the treaty of peace in order that we may have sufficient time to consider the terms and give to the peace delegation at Versailles, as representatives of the people of this country, our suggestions on these great questions.

On January 8, 1918, the President of the United States came before Congress and delivered this message:

> It will be our wish and purpose that the processes of peace, when they are begun, shall be absolutely open and that they shall involve and permit henceforth no secret understandings of any kind. The day of conquest and aggrandizement is gone by; so is also the day of secret covenants entered into in the interest of particular governments and likely at some unlooked-for moment to upset the peace of the world. It is this happy fact, now clear to the view of every public man whose thoughts do not still linger in an age that is dead and gone, which makes it possible for every nation whose purposes are consistent with justice and the peace of the world to avow now or at any other time the objects it has in view.

Then followed the famous 14 points, the first one of which is:

> I. Open covenants of peace, openly arrived at, after which there shall be no private international understandings of any kind but diplomacy shall proceed always frankly and in the public view.

When the President of the United States appeared before Congress on December 2, 1918, he stated his intention of departing immediately for Europe. He gave his reasons and made this pledge to the American people and to this body:

> I shall be in close touch with you and with affairs on this side of the water and you will know all that I do. At my request the French and English Governments have absolutely removed the censorship of cable news, which until within a fortnight they had maintained, and there is now no censorship whatever exercised at this end, except upon attempted trade communications with enemy countries. * * * I did so at the advice of the most experienced cable officials, and I hope that the results will justify my hopes that the news of the next few months may pass with utmost freedom and with the least possible delay from each side of the ocean to the other.

I trusted the President of the United States, as did the American people. The American people are patient, they are long-suffering, but the time will come when they will resent vigorously the secrecy of these negotiations. No sufficient reason has been given why the doctrine of open covenants openly arrived at, so frequently proclaimed as an essential, has not been practiced. "You can fool some of the people all of the time, you can fool all of the people some of the time, but you can not fool all of the people all of the time." The President of the United States is responsible to the people of this country, and it is his duty to keep the pledge he has made. It is plainly his duty to tell what he is doing, and as he appears unwilling to do so it is our duty to remind him of his promise, and that is the purpose of this resolution.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, at the outset I wish to express my regret to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] that I interrupted him this morning at a time when my interruption seemed to be an annoyance.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I trust the Senator will allow me to say that his interruptions are never to me an annoyance, and I hope I am incapable of being in any way rude to him. I did not intend to be. All I meant to say was, and I think what I did say was, that I was coming to that point in my own poor way if he would give me time. I certainly did not intend to be otherwise than courteous to the Senator from Colorado. I always welcome interruptions from him.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the fact that the Senator from Massachusetts is always courteous, not only to myself but to all of his associates, is what prompted me at this time to express regret that I had asked a question at a time when possibly I might have interfered with his general curfent of thought.

I did not intend further to delay the progress of this resolution to a final vote until the little colloquy of day before yesterday projected a new feature into the controversy and which formed, and very properly formed, the basis of the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]. I am glad, Mr. President, that the Senator from Nebraska prepared and introduced his resolution so promptly, and I know that it would have been even more promptly introduced had he been here at the time the colloquy took place.

Mr. President, the situation, so far as I am able to comprehend it, may be thus summarized: Early in May the peace congress at Paris concluded tentatively its labors. Immediately thereafter, for reasons doubtless of a convincing character to them, the members of that congress agreed inter se to postpone the publication of the treaty, but gave to the world a synopsis of the treaty which purported, at least, to convey an intelligent idea of its contents. At the same time a complete copy of the proposed agreement was forwarded to the office of the Secretary of State at Washington, and it has been there ever since.

Copies of this treaty were, as a matter of course and of necessity, furnished to the representatives of the German Government or of the German people, who doubtless received them subject to the same injunction, but, characteristically, the treaty was published in Germany without regard to the condition.

About this time the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] prepared and introduced his resolution instructing the Secretary of State to transmit to this body a complete copy of the proposed treaty. Pending that resolution, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] was shown by a friend of his in the city of New York what purported to be a complete copy of the treaty, accompanied by the information that at least four such copies were in the hands of private parties in that city.

At the same time the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] made this announcement on day before yesterday on this floor, which is found on page 558 of the RECORD:

> That the treaty is now in the possession of certain interests in New York City. While the Senate of the United States is asking for a treaty with which it will ultimately have to deal, and while the American people are asking for a treaty by which they will ultimately, in all probability, be bound, and are unable to secure it, certain interests in the city of New York are in the possession of this treaty and are discussing it.

It was after and doubtless because of that statement that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] gave to the Senate the information which he had upon the subject. In a colloquy which immediately followed between the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and the Senator from Massachusetts the following statements were made:

> Mr. LODGE. * * * The copies of the treaty were given out that I have referred to, and they found that many of them were going to America, and an order was issued from our headquarters in Paris that no more were to be permitted.
> Mr. SWANSON. By whom were they given out?
> Mr. LODGE. Given out by the authorities.
> Mr. SWANSON. What authorities?
> Mr. LODGE. The representatives of the United States.
> Mr. SWANSON. What representatives?
> Mr. LODGE. I suppose some of the President's followers. I do not suppose he gave them out himself.

Mr. SWANSON. What followers? They are not representatives. I have understood they do not represent the United States.

Mr. LODGE. There are no representatives over there except the President's personal agents.

Mr. SWANSON. There is nobody authorized to give out foreign affairs under the Constitution except the President of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. Very well, then, they were given out by his order.

Mr. SWANSON. Does the Senator make that statement on his own responsibility?

Mr. LODGE. No; I do not know whether he ordered it or not.

Mr. SWANSON. Does the Senator know where they came from?

Mr. LODGE. They came from Paris. They were given out by our representatives there.

Mr. President, I think it is a necessary conclusion from this discussion that the Senator from Massachusetts not only saw one of these copies but received information at the same time justifying his statement that they were given out by representatives of the United States in Paris. I was astounded at that declaration, and felt that it should be considered at some time in the future, in view of the serious nature of the assertion, because if it be true that by an agreement between the Nations, including our own, none of these copies was to be made public; and if it be also true that pending this agreement, and while it was in full force, some representative or representatives of the Government did transmit these copies to New York, those representatives should be identified and disciplined in the absence of some cogent explanation justifying their extraordinary action. I think, therefore, that this resolution is not only desirable, but absolutely necessary, for if, in addition to what I have said, it be also true—and I have no doubt that the Senator from Idaho believed it to be true when he made the statement—that certain interests in New York, deeply concerned in the terms and in the ratification or rejection of the treaty, had been favored with these copies in advance of information given to the American people, then there has not only been a breach of the agreement but a betrayal, in so far as information of the contents of the treaty may be concerned, of the interests and possibly of the well-being of the United States.

We know that there are great interests in this country centering in the city of New York, with which presumably up to this time the Senator from Idaho is not on familiar terms, but to which he further made reference in a subsequent part of the discussion by the statement:

> I want the President to know that those people in New York who have these copies are using it in a semipublic way, to wit, in a way which will inform all those who are interested with them as to its contents, and I shall not assume until the facts have shown the contrary that when that fact is brought to the attention of the President he will withhold from the people that which those who are particularly interested in the treaty have in their possession.

This conclusion, Mr. President, is a correct one, for, if it be true that certain specific parties of powerful industrial, economic, and commercial standing in the United States have, in spite of this agreement, been able to forearm themselves with copies of the treaty, then it is equally true that they have some sinister, or at least some private, purpose in view as contradistinguished from the public interest; and it is not only the right but the duty under those circumstances of the President of the United States at once to take the public into his confidence and see to it that the full text of the treaty is immediately published. I do not pretend to know anything about the matter beyond the statements which were made by the two distinguished Senators who made the statements to which I have called attention.

I have refrained, Mr. President, from discussing the treaty for a number of reasons which seemed to me, at least, to be controlling. In the first place, I do not know what the treaty is, and can not know until the Executive sees fit in some manner to inform the Senate of its contents. I do not believe that we can safely discuss it in advance of full knowledge of its terms, and I am not at all convinced that its discussion in this body in advance of its transmission will be helpful to the treaty-making powers across the sea.

Moreover, Mr. President, I entertain, and have always entertained, the conviction that we have no jurisdiction over this treaty, and can have no jurisdiction over it until the Executive sees fit in the usual course to submit it to our consideration. I have heretofore discussed my understanding of that provision of the treaty-making power which clothes the Senate with an authority which must be jointly exercised with that of the Executive. I shall not attempt at this time to review what I have said on that subject, but I do not think that I overstate the proposition when I say that, with two or three exceptions, among whom Mr. Madison and the late Senator Bacon may, perhaps, be considered the most conspicuous, the overwhelming judgment and opinion of the great lawyers and statesmen of the past and of the present has been that the President may consult the Senate or decline to consult the Senate in advance of the signing of a treaty and its transmission to this body by the Executive; that in almost all instances he has deemed it expedient to submit the treaty to us after it has been completed by negotiation, and it is only when he takes the initiative, either prior to the negotiation of the treaty or afterwards, that our part of the treaty-making power comes into play. While we may be concerned, and deeply concerned, regarding the covenants of any proposed treaty subject to negotiation; while we have a right, of course, following the dictates of our individual consciences, to discuss it in advance of its reception, I think the proposition I have stated is unchallengeable.

The Senator from Massachusetts, who complained this morning that he had been so frequently quoted, always took that ground prior to the inauguration of the present President of the United States, and, if I remember correctly, he always advocated cloture prior to that time, but has been one of the champions in opposition to the proposition since. The Senator is a man of great versatility; but if it be true that consistency is the vice of little minds, it is equally true that the Senator is entirely free from that vice; and if I were uncharitably disposed I might emphasize the fact that upon the great question of the league of nations the Senator has been equally emphatic in his advocacy of and his dissent from the virtue or the expediency of that great proposition.

Now, Mr. President, a word or two with regard to the pending resolution and I will yield the floor. I may do the Senator from Massachusetts a grave injustice—and if so, I am very sorry—but I can not relieve my mind from the suspicion that on any other occasion than this he would use his great knowledge and his great powers of argument in vindication of the right and jurisdiction of the Committee on Foreign Relations to take charge of and investigate the matter before the final investigation by the Senate. It is true that many resolutions comparatively unimportant have by unanimous consent been immediately considered which, if referred, would have gone to that committee, but this is not an unimportant resolution. I am sure that the author of it, at least, does not so regard it, notwithstanding the fact that it is couched in terms entirely at variance with all of the precedents of the past.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. Does the Senator know of any instance in which there has been material difference of opinion amongst Senators as to any statement of fact involved in a resolution when that resolution has not been referred to a committee for inquiry and report?

Mr. THOMAS. No, Mr. President; I do not. I think I so stated when I had the floor upon another occasion in the discussion of this particular subject.

Mr. President, I wish I could dismiss from my mind the impression that this resolution is more of a political resolution than anything else; that it is one of the various movements, now so common and with which we shall become more familiar as time shall pass, leading up to the great presidential campaign of 1920 and designed as material for that campaign. Of that I am not complaining; human nature is human nature, whether we find it on the other side or on this side of the Chamber, and the play of politics, to use a common expression, is one which has its experts on this side as well as upon the other side of the Chamber. I have come to this conclusion by listening to and reading the discussions upon the other side of the Chamber of this particular resolution. It seems to me that they are composed, generally speaking, of 99 per cent of politics and reflections upon the President of the United States and 1 per cent of genuine argument.

Mr. President, it may be that the result of a policy like this will be beneficial to those who are responsible for it. As to that, however, I am also somewhat doubtful. We all know that since the death of Mr. Roosevelt—whose demise has been publicly mourned and privately rejoiced over—many candidates for the Presidency of the United States have blossomed, and will continue to blossom, on the other side of this Chamber; and each, of course, is plowing his own furrow with his own heifer, in the hope that his plowshare will turn up the particular presidential grub. I hate to say anything that will put a damper upon the aspirations of my brethren upon the other side, for all of whom I entertain the highest personal opinion; yet I must remind them that never in the history of the United States has a Senator been nominated and elected to the Presidency; and from some of the performances that I have seen in this body since I have been here, on both sides, I have long ago ceased to wonder at what once addressed itself to my mind as a most remarkable phenomenon. So, while we may sow, there is every probability that those on the outside will reap, if there should be a harvest at all.

I have always regretted the intrusion of the personal factor into the consideration of any international question, unless, indeed, circumstances exist of the most irrefragible character reflecting upon the motives or the intentions of those conducting the negotiations. Some one has said that vituperation is not argument, but a mere form of self-indulgence; and I have never known a man to enter into it very largely who did not both weaken the force of his argument and justify suspicion of his sincerity. Now, it is very difficult for many people—good people, too; well-meaning people and sincere people—to discuss the league of nations, which is the most prominent feature of the proposed treaty, either as advocates for or opponents of that measure, without impugning the motives, ridiculing the arguments, or aspersing the mental integrity of their opponents; and that, Mr. President, if it is continued in, is just as sure as anything can be to drive the consideration of this great treaty into the arena of party politics, and thereby either largely imperil its success or contribute to its defeat.

I say this, Mr. President, not as an advocate of the treaty, because I do not know whether I shall vote for it or not, and I do not propose to commit myself until I have thoroughly familiarized myself, or become as familiar as I can, with all of its various specifications and covenants. I am not an enthusiast over a league of nations. I certainly have not been well disposed toward some of the articles of the original draft. I am not entirely sure that the amendments which have been offered are sufficiently comprehensive to remove my objections. But, Mr. President, I have no more doubt of the earnestness and the patriotism and the sincerity of those who believe in this league of nations, as it is drawn or otherwise, I have no more doubt that they are inspired by the highest motives of patriotism and sense of duty than I have that I try to be guided by the same lofty principles and sentiments in my consideration of it.

The President of the United States has for a long time borne the greatest burden ever placed by fate and the circumstances of the times upon the shoulders of a human being. He has carried the weight of the world upon himself and has been compelled to act not only as the advocate but as the arbiter of the mightiest problems that ever confronted a peace congress or any other congregation of men since civilization began. That he has made mistakes goes without saying; that he may have made blunders is equally probable; but that he has been actuated by a high sense of duty, a love of country, and with a full realization of his great responsibilities and their consequences I make no more doubt than I would presume to express the same doubt with regard to the responsibilities and performances of the martyred President. Whether or not I agree with the President finally in the vote which my duties require me to cast in this body, I here and now pay tribute to his intelligence, to his wisdom, to his patriotism, and to his statesmanship.

I sometimes think, Mr. President, that men can not forgive Mr. Wilson for the part he has been compelled to play, and has played so well, in the greatest crisis that has ever confronted the world of mankind, and that his fault in their eyes is that fate so arranged the destinies of America as to have laid its heavy hand upon the Republic during his administration; and I am reminded by the history of my country that every Executive compelled to meet, because confronted with, extraordinary conditions and responsibilities had to undergo the same ordeal and walk through the same valley of misunderstanding and vituperation, only to receive, when too late for him to appreciate it, the grateful plaudits of an admiring posterity.

Mr. President, a friend of mine a day or two ago handed me this clipping, which I will read. It is entitled "A Voice From the Past"; and then follows this quotation:

> The President succeeded on this occasion because he acted without sense and without constraint in a panorama that was gotten up more for the benefit of his party than for the glory of the Nation and the honor of the dead. * * * We pass over the silly remarks of the President; for the credit of the Nation we are willing that the veil of oblivion shall be dropped over them and that they shall no more be repeated or thought of.

Then follows the comment:

> This is not an extract from an editorial in the New York Sun or the New York Tribune. Nor were the sentiments quoted above taken from any of the public utterances of Senator POINDEXTER or Senator SHERMAN or Senator MCCORMICK. They are from an editorial that was printed in the Harrisburg Patriot and Union on November 24, 1863, and have no reference to Woodrow Wilson.
> The President in question was Abraham Lincoln. The "silly remarks" were the Gettysburg speech.

So, Mr. President, in time to come, some may be remembered, if remembered at all, only because of their abuse and misunderstanding, their vituperation and derogation, of the President of the United States. I do not wish to be understood in what I have just said as in the slightest degree reflecting upon the purpose or the sincerity of the author of this resolution; but I do say that when a resolution like this comes—which should be addressed to the President, instead of which it is addressed to the Secretary of State, which should be conditioned upon compatibility with the public interest, and that condition is absent, and which is sought to be forced through this body without reference to the appropriate channels—it justifies a criticism of the course pursued.

I do not myself see the present importance of the motion, if it be true that publicity has already been given to this treaty, and in any event I am willing to agree with my associates upon a time to vote upon it. I have no desire to take up the time of the Senate or of the country, to postpone or delay the consideration of important appropriation bills by an interminable discussion of a resolution that ought to come to a vote.

I hope, therefore, that before long the Senator will suggest the possibility of a unanimous-consent agreement under which we can dispose of the question one way or the other, get it behind us, as we have finally gotten the suffrage amendment behind us, and take up these more important, practical, and immediate measures.

Mr. BORAH obtained the floor.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator from North Dakota wish to discuss the pending resolution?

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to say just a word on this resolution.

Mr. BORAH. The one we are now considering?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Very well; I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, in this great world crisis, when the greatest burdens that were ever imposed upon public men are now being carried on the shoulders of delegates assembled in Paris, I feel that I should be worse than wasting my time if I spent a single moment in attempting to put the President in a hole by holding up his declarations for "open covenants openly arrived at" on the one hand and his acts of secret covenants secretly arrived at on the other hand.

I do not agree with his declaration at all in international relations. There never has been a time in the history of the United States when every international question was not considered by the Senate behind closed doors; and even at our legislative sessions we have often, when we considered that we were trenching upon ground which might create international ill feeling, immediately voted to close the doors and to consider the matter in secret.

As between two families in which there is a proposal for marital relations, each family may consider from its own standpoint the advisability of the proposed union. Now, if it were possible that each must publish what was said in the family circle concerning the family of the other, there would be eternal enmity between those two families. So in the family of nations, in order that we may secure a fair and just consideration of every matter without at the same time affecting the other country in a way that would make that country our enemy for all time, we have found it necessary—and every other nation in the world has followed the same course—to consider those delicate international questions behind closed doors.

Mr. President, the President of the United States, in his declarations that appeal possibly to the ear but do not appeal to the judgment in the practical affairs of life, has seen fit to use the phrase that is so often quoted before the Senate of the United States. Not agreeing with him upon that, I think he has found that it is not applicable in considering the thousands of complex and delicate questions that are arising in that distracted country to-day, and among people upon whose lips is still the froth of battle and in whose hearts is still the hate of conflict; that it is not wise that all that is said and done should be openly said and done before the entire world. So, if he entered into an agreement with the other nations of the world, or if he opposed it, and the other great nations—our Allies—forced the matter to be considered behind closed doors, I think that they used the better judgment; and I would not for a moment infringe upon their right to first bring before us a completed treaty, signed and negotiated, before we had anything to do with it.

But, Mr. President, a little different situation is presented to-day. A portion of this treaty has already been published. It is asserted, and asserted in such a way that I can not doubt its authenticity, that complete copies of the treaty have fallen into the hands of certain Americans and American interests, and possibly into the public forums of some of the other countries of the world. That presents a little different aspect of the case. Now, I am not in favor of voting for this resolution exactly in the form that it is. I believe that it should have been addressed to the President of the United States and not to the Secretary of State. But that is merely a matter of form, because the Secretary of State will act only upon the advice and with the consent of the President of the United States. I do think, however, that we ought to follow one precedent that has been a precedent from the very beginning of the intercourse between the executive and the legislative branches of the Government, and that is, in asking for any matter in which the executive department has in the first instance the entire and complete jurisdiction, it is but proper that we ask that department to give us the facts "if not incompatible with public interest."

Now, what objection can there be to that? I will ask the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] if he would have any objection to so amending his resolution that there shall be added after the word "requested," on line 2, the words "if not incompatible with public interest"?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, in response to the Senator's query, I will say that I have no objection to the addition of such a matter, and I will explain, if desired, the reasons why the resolution is addressed to the Secretary of State.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator is entitled to explain, and I yield for that purpose.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The Senator has well remarked that the particular proposition that is presented here is a vastly different proposition from that presented by the ordinary diplomatic procedure, or that which comes to us during the ordinary proceedings when treaties are considered. As he says, there has been given to the people a synopsis of the treaty. That synopsis has been printed by the official authority of the Secretary of State. In the possession of the Secretary of State is the completed document, as we understand, and therefore, a document having been given out by the Secretary of State that presumably gave a synopsis of the particular treaty, to the entire information the Congress and the people are entitled. I shall be very glad, if the Senator deems it essential, to amend the resolution in the respect that he suggests by adding "if not incompatible with the public welfare."

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I can see no impropriety in the world in asking the President of the United States or the Secretary of State to give us this information, if not incompatible with public interest; and I can see no impropriety or inconsistency, if the facts justify it, in the President's saying that it has been agreed between the nations of the world that entire publicity shall not be given until the instrument has been completed. That would be a sufficient answer to the American people, in my opinion, and would be a full justification, for certainly if there has been an agreement that all of the facts which are being considered shall not be given publicity until they arrive at an arrangement, then the President can well say, "It is against the public interest for me to break the word of the representatives of the United States that this shall be our course of conduct."

So, Mr. President, I can see no reason on earth why we can not properly ask the President for this information through the Secretary of State, coupling with it the courteous phrase which we have always used, "if not incompatible with public interest." Then if the President thinks the facts warrant the statement, notwithstanding the fact that some portions have been made public in the shape of a synopsis and that some portions have surreptitiously escaped from the control of the delegation, he will fairly and honestly say to the American people that he does not think it compatible with public interest—and he might say, with national honor—to disclose to the public at present all of the terms of the proposed treaty.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I agree with very much that the Senator has said about the delicacy of international treaties, where each nation wants to secure the fullest possible advantages for its own country without giving the negotiations to the world; but there is one suggestion I should like to make to the Senator that has been troubling me somewhat.

This is a confessedly unfinished treaty, subject this minute to amendment of any item in it by the commissioners having it now under charge. What advantage can it be to the Senate to have it at present? What use have you or I or any other Senator for an unfinished, still amendable, and still being amended treaty; and what is our purpose in wanting it, if we are in fact earnestly engaged in an effort to carry the treaty to a final vote in the Senate? I can not see the purpose in wanting it.

Mr. McCUMBER. There can not be so very much more in these supposed treaties that are in the hands of certain financial or other interests in New York than that which is contained in the synopsis; and I am rather inclined to think that at least under all the conditions the American people have a right to know whether or not there is anything so diametrically opposed to what has been given out in the synopsis as to justify any such apprehensions as have been created by the mere verbal statements and hints.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. But the knowledge of the fact to which the Senator refers came out subsequently to the introduction of this resolution. I am only wondering why we want an unfinished treaty that the President does not himself willingly give out?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not know, Mr. President. I want the President to express an opinion whether or not he wishes willingly to give it out. I do not want the President to be charged with attempting to hold this matter in secret of his own accord when, as a matter of fact, he would like to give it out. I would be perfectly willing to present the matter to him and ask him to give us the facts if not incompatible with the public interest, and his judgment will determine whether or not it would be so incompatible.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. There is great force in what the Senator says, and it is appealing. The thing itself has justified at this time this particular course. If this had gone to the committee, it seems to me, the very argument the Senator makes here might have led us long ago to pass this resolution, and I think we could have done it. I think the Senator's appeal is one that would strike a reasonable man; and if there is any necessity for this action at all, which I still can not see, it strikes me how easily the course would have been, as applied to the Hitchcock resolution, to have it go to the committee for its consideration and report to the Senate in the usual way. Suspicion attaches to it, perhaps, that it is desired to avoid the committee's investigation.

Mr. McCUMBER. As I said before, if I thought this was being done in any way to gain some kind of a partisan or political advantage, I would never vote for it, because I think that in this particular season in the world's history we ought to lay aside our partisanship. I must assume that it is in the best of faith that we may secure for the benefit of the American people all that has been given to the world and nothing more, and if the President feels, as I have an opinion that he will feel undoubtedly, that he can not with justice to us or his colleagues give out this information, all he has to do is to say so.

Mr. President, I move to amend the resolution by inserting——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is not in order at this time. There is a motion before the Senate, and the amendment is not in order, unless the original mover of the resolution accepts it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I accept the amendment, which I understand it is to add "if not incompatible with public interest."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed modification will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "requested," in line 2, insert "if not incompatible with the public interest."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This modification of the original resolution will be made.

Mr. KELLOGG obtained the floor.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. KELLOGG. If it is only for a question.

Mr. EDGE. I wish to ask a question of the Senator who offered the amendment. I have no particular objection to the amendment, but I did not have the opportunity of hearing his entire argument, having been called from the Chamber. On what particular line of reasoning does he assume it is necessary to insert the words "if not incompatible with the public interest" when it has been so clearly established by the various arguments during the last three weeks that the public already has to a great extent the entire document? The Senator from California feels that there is no objection to including it, but if the public already has it, and it has been clearly established that they have, I can not conceive why it could possibly be incompatible with the public interest.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not know that the public has a true, authenticated copy of the treaty or that any portion of the public has a true copy of the final agreement or so far as it has progressed to-day. I explained in my argument, and I would not wish to repeat it at this time, that certainly this is the usual courteous way of addressing the President upon diplomatic questions which he has under consideration. It is his right, of course, no matter whether we use the term or not to state to us that it is not compatible with the public interest for him to do so at this time, but the old custom of intercourse between the legislative and executive branches upon matters that are peculiarly within the jurisdiction of the legislative branch has been to make the request in this courteous language.

Mr. EDGE. If I may have just a moment more, with permission of the Senator from Minnesota——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota has the floor. Does he yield?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield to the Senator if he will be very brief. I was going to make a few remarks on this matter myself.

Mr. EDGE. Very well, I will postpone my statement for the moment.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, ordinarily I would not take the time of the Senate to discuss this resolution, as I know there is important business pending, but it is a matter of principle, I think of great consequence to the people of this country, and I wish very briefly to state the reasons which impel me to vote for it.

I do not agree with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] with regard to consideration of treaties in secret session. I supported and voted for a rule to change the rules of the Senate so that treaties should be considered in open session. I did not mean by that that all treaties and all discussions were to be considered in open session. I meant to make that the rule, subject to exception whenever the Senate should so vote, because whenever there arises a situation where the relations of foreign countries are so delicate that the subject to be discusssd may affect our interests, the doors should be closed.

I realize that it is the prerogative of the Senate and to the interest of the public that it should be done under such circumstances. But I do believe that the day of secret treaties and the day of the consideration of treaties of such vast importance in the world as this are past and that they should be considered in the open. I shall not base what I have to say upon any narrow construction of the declarations of the President in the past nor upon his declarations at all, except I would remind the Senate that they were not simply remarks made in passing during some public speech under the enthusiasm of the occasion. The principles laid down by the President as to open covenants were deliberate statements delivered in a message of the greatest importance, in which he outlined the 14 points which in his mind should form the foundation of the world peace to terminate the war, and in the list it was made the corner stone of this peace that diplomacy should be in the open, "Open covenants of peace, openly arrived at, after which there shall be no private international understandings of any kind, but diplomacy shall proceed frankly and in the public view."

Not alone that, but the President has stated this time and again as the principle in which he believed. I do not say that all the conversation across the table at Versailles in the peace conference should be made public or that the meetings should be open to the entire public. I believe, however, that the great fundamental principles which the allied Governments are laying down in this treaty should be given to the world and should from time to time be made known to the people of the United States as well as to the people of other countries. They have a right to consider them. That self-determination which seems to be the corner stone of the President's theory of peace should impel him and should impel everyone in good faith to see that the people are informed as to the real terms of this treaty.

Mr. President, do we realize the tremendous importance to the world of this peace treaty? As the war involved more nations, more peoples, greater destruction and devastation, greater change in governments and overthrow of nations than has occurred in the same time since recorded history, so this peace treaty involves issues of greater moment to the people of the world than any and all the other treaties, I might say, that have ever come into existence and have gone on the tides of time.

The treaty proposes to determine the destiny of many nations and many peoples with aspirations of self-government, to divide territories, to impose punishment an dthe burdens of the war, and to evolve from this world chaos a peace that will be more satisfactory to the world than any prior peace, a peace that will be permanent. If it is to be a lasting peace, if it is not to be simply the cause of future wars, it must to a certain degree satisfy the aspirations of all the struggling nations of the world. Our country entered the war to protect our rights, our people, and our institutions, and to aid in developing such a peace, and we should from time to time be informed of the facts as to the activities of the peace commissioners in France.

Does the Senate remember the tremendous arraignment in the English journals of the secrecy that was observed in Paris and the injury it did in England and the other countries of Europe? Perhaps it was necessary. I am not disposed to criticize what has been done in that regard, but the situation is different now. I might lay aside entirely the declarations of the President, and I do not discuss them with any partisan view; I might disregard all his statements and all consideration of the consequences to the people of this country and the people of the world in connection with an understanding of the terms of the treaty which are about to be imposed upon them; but there are other reasons why the Senate will not at this time encroach upon the prerogative of the President by asking for the official text of this treaty. I realize fully that the negotiation of the terms of the treaty is peculiarly the prerogative of the President. I realize that he might consult the Senate, and concerning a treaty of such great importance to his country I think it would be wise; but he must decide that.

The peace pact has been drafted after months of careful consideration by the principal statesmen of Europe, including our own commissioners. It has been delivered to the representatives of the German Government. It would seem inevitable that upon such delivery it would be made public. But beyond that let us look at it reasonably.

A synopsis of this treaty was published, and presumably it was intended that the summary should embrace an accurate description of the terms of the treaty, so that we might be informed as to the character of the treaty our commissioners were negotiating. If the synopsis was accurate the publication of the treaty can do no harm. If it is not accurate, without impugning the motive of anyone, there is every reason why we should have the treaty at the earliest possible moment. The American people have a right to express their opinion upon the settlement of these great issues.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not mean by that that we should always have our ear to the ground to catch every sound of public approval or disapproval, but I remember the statement William H. Vanderbilt once made, that everybody knows more than anybody; and the Senate of the United States can learn something from the people of this country. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. The Senator, as I understand his very clear exposition of this question, concedes that the jurisdiction of the Senate as a part of the treaty-making power does not attach until after the treaty is made. Am I right in assuming that?

Mr. KELLOGG. I concede that the Executive has the right to negotiate the terms of a treaty, but, of course, it has no binding effect until it is ratified by the coordinate branch of the Government which is a part of the treaty-making power. I concede that the President need not consult the Senate before he has formulated the treaty, if that is his judgment, although I believe he should have done it, and that practice is justified by precedent.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit another inquiry?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator has just used the word "formulated." Does the Senator contend that the treaty is now formulated in the sense that jurisdiction of the Senate attaches and that it is the duty of the President to submit it to the Senate now?

Mr. KELLOGG. Not for ratification, of course. I concede this. For five months the statesmen of the allied countries have labored in Paris to formulate a treaty which it is stated was to be presented to Germany for Germany's signature, and, as Lloyd-George said, it must be signed either in Paris or Berlin. That treaty was given to the German representatives. It has been published in Germany. Beyond that, it has been given secretly to citizens in our own country. I wish to ask the Senator if there is any citizen in this country more entitled to know its terms than a Senator of the United States, who has upon him the great responsibility of considering its terms or making suggestions as to its revision?

Mr. KING. If the Senator propounds that question for the purpose of avoiding—and I do not use that word harshly—the question which I propounded to him, and he has not answered my question, I will say very frankly I think the Senate is as much entitled to it, and more so, than any citizen of the United States, the Senate being a part of the treaty-making power. If the Senator will permit me ,the point I am making is this: Does the Senator concede that the treaty is so formulated now that we are entitled, as a matter of right under the Constitution, to have it submitted to us for consideration?

Mr. KELLOGG. If the Senator's question is whether the treaty is at present completed sufficiently that the Senate may consider it for ratification, I should say no; but the Senate is entitled to know at this time the contents of that document, and there can be no harm, but the greatest good, accomplished by giving it to the Senate. A respectful request to the Secretary of State to produce a copy of the treaty is without objection and should be made.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. KELLOGG. If the Secretary of State knows of any reason why it should not be produced, if it is not compatible with the public interest, he can so state, and then the Senate can consider whether his statement justifies the Senate in further insistence. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. The question which I propounded did not call for an answer as to the question of the expediency or policy, but the question of right, predicated upon the Constitution, and I ask the question again, with the permission of my friend, the Senator from Minnesota, because he has not answered it. Does the Senator say that the Senate, as a matter of right under the Constitution, is entitled now to have the treaty submitted to it by the President of the United States?

Mr. KELLOGG. I do.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator is wrong.

Mr. KELLOGG. Not as a completed treaty for the purpose of ratification, but for the information of the Senate. As I said before, it is unbelievable that this treaty should be given out to private citizens without giving it to the Senate, and it should be resented by the Senate, and it should be resented by the people of this country who are entitled to know its contents.

In further answer to the Senator from Utah, ordinarily when commissioners or the President negotiate a treaty its terms are not given to the public either by synopsis or by publication of the entire text to a part of the world, but it is given to the Senate in confidence, and the Senate usually refers it to the Committee on Foreign Relations. The President or the high commissioners have not followed this ordinary custom of negotiating a treaty and first submitting it to the Senate, but they are negotiating a treaty and first submitting it to Germany and then to private citizens of this country, and third, at a time when it suits the convenience of the commissioners or the President, to the Senate of the United States. When the President or the commissioners, whoever is responsible, makes the treaty public by giving it out, either by a synopsis or a full text to the people of Germany or to the people of this country, or any of them, the Senate is entitled to the same rights that others enjoy, and indeed has a greater right. It should be given to the Senate first, and I can not see any way that it will embarrass or prejudice the negotiations at Paris or the President if this document is given to the Senate.

I know nothing of the pledges the President may have made. I have no desire that he should break his word to the statesmen of the allied nations. We do not know that he has given any pledge. We have read in the Associated Press—and that is the only information we have—that he has pledged himself, but the President has not so informed us nor has the Secretary of State nor any of the commissioners that they have given pledges that this treaty should not be published. We have read the synopsis in the public press. We are told that the treaty is in the hands of Germany and in the hands of private citizens in this country, and no one denies it. Under those circumstances we have the right to insist that it should have been given to us first.

Mr. PHELAN. If the Senator will yield to me I should like to ask him a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. PHELAN. It seems that some one has given out a copy of an inchoate treaty. The Senator does not pretend to say that it is the final treaty, but it is subject to possible objections by the German Government and to correction.

The Senate, therefore, in worrying over the absence of this pretended draft of a treaty is doing an idle thing, and I ask the Senator is it not the law that the President must first negotiate the treaty and then submit it to the Senate, and the Senate has no voice in the determination of the terms of that treaty until the President has made his final report to the Senate submitting to the Senate the treaty?

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I think I am fully aware of the constitutional power of the Senate. The Senate has no constitutional power to ratify a treaty until it has been made. I quite agree that the Senate has the right and power to give its advice in any phase of any negotiation, and it has been frequently asked, and it may offer that advice without a request, because the question whether a treaty shall finally be made is decided by the Senate of the United States. Where a treaty has progressed so far that it has been formulated by the allied and associated governments and presented practically as an ultimatum to Germany, and has been published in Germany and in this country, as well as delivered to private citizens, the Senate has a constitutional right to it and may advise the President of its opinion as to any of the terms of the treaty. I think some of the advice the President has received from publicists and statesmen of the United States has been of some benefit to the American people.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit an inquiry there?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield.

Mr. KING. Is the right of the Senate any greater to tender the President advice than the right of the House of Representatives to tender him advice?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes, sir; because treaties are made with the advice and consent of the Senate and not of the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, I do not wish to detain the Senate longer. What I have said is not uttered with a view to casting any obstacle in the way of the President. I agree, as I did during the entire course of the war, that the American people should be united, and that there should be no partisanship displayed in prosecuting the war or in adjusting foreign complications. I feel that this attitude should prevail now, that every Senator should act upon this great question according to his conscience and judgment, and that the American people have a right to express to their Senators their opinion by petition or otherwise. It is because I desire that the American people shall have accurate information and that Senators may have accurate information on which to found their opinions and advice that I am impelled to vote for the pending resolution.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I was so much impressed very shortly after I was sworn in as a Member of this deliberative body with the action on the part of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], when he held up to the view of the Senate a very large volume of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, purporting to be, as I recall it, the oral contributions of the last 10 days of the last session, that illustration being perhaps a forerunner of a little less deliberation and more action from the Sixty-sixth Congress, that I do not want to offend and take more than a moment of the time of the Senate to express a single thought in connection with this resolution.

While I am, may I say, still fresh from the country outside of the Senate Chamber, and perhaps have not yet absorbed the germ which seems in a way to develop long arguments, many of which, however, are very interesting and instructive, I believe that the passage of this resolution is important, particularly as a protest from the Senate of the United States to our representatives in Paris, not that the Secretary of State because of the passage of this resolution would probably send—for he probably would not—the peace treaty to this body, but rather that we shall send directly on the passage of the resolution to our representatives abroad this viewpoint—that we are not criticizing necessarily the action, which was undoubtedly deemed proper and necessary, agreeing with the representatives of other major nations originally, that the peace treaty should not be made public. That was perhaps in every way justified; I know nothing to the contrary; but conditions have certainly changed.

To-day it is a well-established fact that the peace treaty is in the hands of people in various sections of the world; and by the passage of this resolution we at least present the feeling of this body, representing the people of the country, that, if such an understanding was justified some weeks ago, to-day, at least, under existing circumstances, if it is necessary for us to officially pass a resolution to demonstrate it, the President of the United States should insist at another meeting with Clemenceau, Lloyd-George, and those with whom he has agreed, that the ban of secrecy under present conditions should be lifted, and that the Senate of the United States should be possessed of the document that is now apparently in the hands of the people of so many countries of the world.

For that reason I feel that the resolution is very important, so as to give that thought and that sentiment to the President, representing us, and we representing the people.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I had intended to say something on the resolution presented by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] this morning. The opportunity, however, did not present itself. I shall say something which may be relevant to that resolution, notwithstanding the fact that it has gone to the committee, and then submit a few observations with reference to the pending resolution.

I should have been satisfied to have left the treaty to be published at the pleasure of the President if the action of the peace conference had been confined to the question of making a treaty; but when the peace conference assumed the responsibility of not only formulating a treaty with the enemy, but of incorporating in that treaty what the President in France a few days ago stated in unmistakable terms to be a supergovernment for the world, then this whole matter became something more than a treaty.

It became a matter of grave concern not only to the treaty-making power, technically speaking, but a matter of the utmost concern to the American people to know just what kind of a supergovernment we were to have and how it is incorporated in the treaty, and why, as Mr. Taft repeats night after night, it is indispensable to the performance and execution of the treaty. In other words, we are facing a situation such as has never before confronted us, such as the men who framed the Constitution and provided for the treaty-making power never contemplated, to wit, a situation in which we are not only making a treaty, properly speaking, but under the guise of making a treaty are indeed changing the entire structure of our Government.

So I say—and I suspect that is the attitude of mind of the able Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]—that had these two matters been entirely divorced and the treaty with Germany had remained, as these things were contemplated by those who provided for the treaty-making power, distinctly and separately a treaty, there would have been very little discussion as to its publicity until such time as the President saw fit to make it public. But the league of nations incorporated in the treaty is being discussed from one end of the land to the other, and it is being constantly stated to the American people that the two are inseparably connected, and that the treaty with Germany can not be made effective without the league of nations. While that debate is going on by some one who assumes to know what the terms of the treaty are, those who are opposed to the league of nations are placed at the disadvantage of debating something as to which the retort is made to us, "You do not know anything about it." There is scarcely a night passes but Mr. Taft alights from his special car and tells the American people what the contents of this treaty are, while the American people know nothing about it through those upon whom is devolved the responsibility of knowing under the Constitution. Should not both sides and all parties and the people generally have equal opportunity to know the contents and terms of the treaty?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator from Idaho assure the Senate that he knows personally that Mr. Taft makes statements of that character concerning this treaty?

Mr. BORAH. I have read it over and over again until it has become perfectly familiar—as I have no doubt the Senator has heard over and over again, as I understand he has been out with Mr. Taft—I have read over and over again that Mr. Taft says the treaty with Germany can not be made effective and can not be carried out and executed without the league of nations being incorporated in and made a part of it. If that is true, it presupposes that Mr. Taft is familiar with all the details of the treaty, which he says can not be executed without the league of nations.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, I can say to the Senator that, from the several times that I have heard Mr. Taft speak, practically his whole discussion is upon the league of nations, of which we have official copies here published by the Senate, word for word, and concerning which there is no need to make any other inquiry as to its contents; that aside from that the only statement Mr. Taft makes is that it will be necessary to create some international machinery—he does not say what—to carry into effect a treaty against Germany and to compel her to observe that treaty after it is signed. That is the extent, the beginning and the end, of what Mr. Taft says.

Mr. BORAH. I thank the Senator for his contribution. It sustains precisely what I have said, to wit, that Mr. Taft reiterates that the peace treaty must be carried out through and by means of machinery provided by the league of nations. Now, how does Mr. Taft know that the details of the treaty can not be executed other than by the machinery of the league of nations unless he knows something about the treaty?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator from Idaho tell us what compulsion there is going to be to require Germany to observe the terms of the treaty if the various nations make the treaty and go home and leave nothing to require and to compel Germany to carry out its terms?

Mr. BORAH. That is what I say.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is all that Mr. Taft says.

Mr. BORAH. Well, that is precisely what I say. Mr. Taft says that this treaty can not be executed unless the league of nations is created and the machinery of the league is put into operation. There have been a vast number of treaties in the last 150 years made and executed without the league of nations, and it is not entirely clear to an obtuse mind, like some of us are supposed unfortunately to possess, why that could not be true again, unless there are some peculiar terms and conditions written into the German treaty of which we have no knowledge and of which Mr. Taft has sufficient knowledge. One reason why we want the treaty is because we believe it can be shown that the league is not necessary to the treaty.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to put some questions to the Senator from Idaho, if he will permit. Will the Senator from Idaho tell the public how it is going to be possible to insure the existence of Poland, which is necessarily set up under the terms of this treaty, and must be set up, no matter what they are; what means are to be adopted to secure the independence of Czechoslovakia, which we all have agreed must be a new nation, created under the terms of this treaty? Can the Senator answer those two questions? Is the United States going to guarantee the existence of those countries? Is Great Britain going to guarantee the existence of those countries? Can Germany be depended upon to permit the existence of those countries?

The Senator from Idaho can very well see that there is no possibility in carrying out the very purpose of this war, unless some machinery is set up of an international character to carry out the will of the countries that are imposing this peace upon Germany.

Mr. BORAH. I suppose the Senator would also include Shantung along with Poland?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, I will be satisfied if the Senator from Idaho will merely answer the questions I have asked.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I will answer.

I do not know how you are going to carry out the plans which have been formulated at Versailles without knowing the terms of the treaty, and I do not know how you are going to do it with a league of nations such as you have formed. The league of nations which you have formed is as powerless and ineffective to do what the Senator in his fancy contemplates that he and Mr. Taft are going to do as anything of which I can conceive. It has absolutely no power to do anything, except superinduce and bring on war, and it is utterly without power to prevent war or carry on war when it comes. It is almost perfect to bring on war. In fact, with such things in it as Shantung it practically guarantees war. But it is wholly inefficient to prevent war.

I was going to say, Mr. President, when interrupted by the Senator from Nebraska, that we would have been content to have left the treaty where it now is in the hands of the Executive and with certain Governments of Europe and certain people in New York had the matter been divorced from the league. But when they became intertwined and interlaced, the ex-President constantly insisting to the American people that a great danger arises out of the breakdown of that treaty with Germany without the league attached to it, it becomes necessary for those who are concerned in it to know its details.

Again, Mr. President, when the President of the United States took his second departure for our foreign capital he advised the people of the United States that when the treaty with Germany came back here the league of nations would be so interwoven with it, its conditions and its terms, that those who were opposed to the league of nations would find it exceedingly difficult to disentangle and disengage the two instruments, and, therefore, if we did not propose to delay peace we would be compelled to accept the league of nations, whether we desired it or not. I think that is a fair statement of what the President said; it is certainly a fair statement of what the President intended.

Now, what is the situation? We have the league of nations in its present form. We have no knowledge whatever of the manner in which it is intertwined or interwoven with the treaty itself, and yet we are advised by no less an authority than the negotiator of the treaty that it was the desire and purpose of those with whom he was associated so to intertwine it with the treaty that we would have to accept the league or else postpone the treaty of peace. Are we not entitled, therefore, in view of the task which is imposed upon us and the difficult undertaking which has been put up behind closed doors in Paris for us to deal with, to have both instruments and to know precisely how we are to meet the situation?

I want you to reflect for a moment upon the situation which confronts the Senate of the United States. A conclave of ambassadors, sitting behind closed doors at Versailles, have deliberately sat down to the task of imposing upon the American people, whether they want it or not, a league of nations by so linking that league up with the treaty of peace, which, in some form we do want, that we have to take the former in order to get the latter. They have had weeks and months to frame up their scheme so as to make it impossible for the American people to have a deliberate choice as to the two propositions. Perhaps never in the history of the world was it ever before deliberately determined to deprive a free people of a choice or of the right of selecting between two propositions—whether they would take one and leave the other or whether they would surrender their judgment upon one rather than refuse the other. But this is the situation which confronts us, and the instrument by which this is accomplished is now in possession of all the world, practically, except the people of the United States.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] said this morning, and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] reiterated it, that there is a disposition upon this side of the Chamber to assail the President personally. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] thought the mere statement that the treaty of peace was at large in this country was a criticism of the President. Let me say now, once for all in this debate, because I presume it will continue for some time, that, so far as the President is concerned as President or in his individual capacity, separated and divorced from this scheme of a league of nations, I have no personal feeling which I propose or wish to gratify here or elsewhere; but, in so far as he is attempting what, in my judgment, is a betrayal of the independence and sovereignty of this Republic into the hands of foreign powers, there is no energy that I possess and no intellectual power which is mine that I will not exert here and elsewhere to frustrate his designs. I do not challenge other men's motives; I am not discussing the league of nations from the viewpoint of other men, and therefore I do not assail individuals; but, as I view it from my standpoint, from the vision which I get into the future, if I should do less than all that is within my power to frustrate that design, I would feel that I had written myself down beside the betrayers of the American people. The Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Nebraska, much as I admire them personally and little as I desire to quarrel with them, will make no progress with the Senator from Idaho by charging personal assailment of the President. I intend at no time, unless driven to it, to engage in such tactics. But I do propose to speak freely and sincerely of this scheme as I see it, and that is a surrender of the dearest rights of a free people to the domination and control of foreign powers. This is not merely the negotiation and completion and ratification of a treaty. Those of us who view it as we do—and the Senator from Nebraska no doubt thinks it is our misfortune—look at it in an entirely different light, and no individual can stand between me and anything that I can do to defeat what I consider a treacherous scheme to forfeit those rights and privileges, without which we would be without power to choose our own policies or determine our own future.

Furthermore, the President said in his Decoration Day address a few days ago that those who were opposing this scheme were placing themselves in the same position and in the same attitude as the men who opposed the formation of the American Union, and that we would be just as ashamed in time to come as those who had attempted to thwart the efforts of the patriots who finally consummated the organization of our free institutions and set in operation the Constitution of the United States. I can not conceive of a more vicious attack upon the loyalty and patriotism of Senators or citizens than that attack and all which it implies. Does anyone suppose, now that the enemy are conquered, the war is over, and, thank God, free speech has been restored in the American Republic, that all the attacks in this fight are going to be on one side? If the supporters of the league prefer that style of debate, there will be blows to give as well as blows to take.

Neither the times from which the President chooses his figure nor the facts connected which his figure recalls are entirely happy. We might well retort that those who are now trying to place the people of the United States in a league which will be controlled or dominated by European powers and under the European system are the legitimate descendants of the Tories who insisted that the patriots of 1776 were making a great mistake in trying to establish and maintain here upon the Western Continent a free, independent, self-governing people, that which we who oppose the league are now contending for.

The time is here, the hour has struck, when men must speak boldly and without hesitation, and leave time to judge who are disloyal to American institutions.

When Mr. Taft opened his campaign in Portland, Oreg., after the first draft of the league, he declared that certain Senators, mentioning their names, were not to be trusted overnight, unfit, in other words, either in morals or patriotism, to be heard or heeded. Let those who are on the inside, who are in possession of all the documents, like the President and apparently the ex-President, make public those documents and give all parties the information to which they are entitled and then let them proceed to the debate upon a high plane and the discussion of the subject upon its merits and we will be glad to conform to their method of debate. But if they prefer the other style of warfare it may be that necessity will require us to conform to that also.

Mr. President, I stated on the floor of the Senate the other day that it was understood there were copies of this treaty in New York in the hands of business interests. I have no doubt about that at all. I did not say anything in my statement which indicated that the President had delivered those copies to those interests. On the other hand, I stated specifically that I assumed when the President ascertained that these interests had gotten hold of them he would feel that he was relieved from the arrangement he had made with the associated Governments and would publish the treaty to the American people. I have no right to assume, and I have not assumed, that the President would deliver these copies to these persons in New York, and it is not necessary for the Senator from Nebraska to go so far as to draw that inference from anything I said. If he is anxious to turn the matter into a reflection it must be either by reason of his misguided zeal or because he is unconsciously betraying knowledge personal to himself.

Mr. President, there are a great many people in Paris, and some of them are as thoroughly intertwined with the business interests of New York as the league of nations will be intertwined with the German treaty when we get it back here. I have in my own mind very little doubt as to how those copies of the treaty got to New York. We have had investigations heretofore which showed how quick some men who had been trusted transmitted information to Wall Street, and millions have been made by them, as they have confessed themselves, by inside information which they had. I do not attack or assail the President. I simply say that it is my belief the copies are there; they can be had; and it is immaterial to me whence they came. I believe those who are greatly concerned undoubtedly in all of the terms of the treaty, and especially interested in some provisions of it, have the document before them. I do not say I know it. I have not seen the documents, and yet I feel I know it; I am just as well satisfied that they are there, and have been for the last 10 days, as I can be of anything which I have not seen with my own eyes.

I did not make the statement, Mr. President, for any other purpose than to help get the treaty published. That is the only thing in which I am interested, and I feel that the Senator from Nebraska would concede that if copies of the treaty are at large, and have been put into hands which are semipublic, certainly nothing can be lost by their being sent here.

Again, Mr. President, we know that the treaty has been published in Germany for the last several days, according to the Associated Press, the only source of information in these days of "open covenants openly arrived at." We know that it has been published in Berlin, and that copies are in Switzerland, in Denmark, in Holland, in Norway, and in Sweden, and are circulating throughout the world. I take it, therefore, that no possible advantage can be derived by the Germans by reason of the fact that we should be given the information. Nothing can be conveyed from here to Germany that Germany has not had for weeks, and if any disturbance should arise by reason of the publication of the treaty it will not be a disturbance in Germany, but it will be a disturbance among the many millions of American people who still love and are deeply concerned over things which relate to the life and honor of this old Republic. The disturbance will be among those who believe that the treaty, with the league intertwined and the obligations which it imposes upon us, will be such that, if accepted, would be detrimental to our interests and at war with our future happiness and tranquillity.

Suppose it should appear in this treaty, as has been stated to the public, that it ratifies the outrage upon China by the Germans in 1905; suppose it should appear unmistakably that in 1905 the German Government went into China and took possession of Shantung or certain interests therein by force and held them in the same way until after the breaking out of this war, when Japan, another military power, took possession of those interests under a solemn pledge to return them to the Chinese people at the end of the war; suppose it should appear that this outrage has been perpetuated and underwritten and guaranteed—by whom? By the man power, the sons and brothers and fathers, of the United States.

When that comes to be well understood by the American people the disturbance over the treaty will be under the American flag and not in Germany. It would seem to be the judgment of the American people that is feared.

These are the things, Mr. President, which have been foreshadowed, and which, by reason of the obligations which we are assuming under the league, are of transcendent moment, not to the Senate alone but to all the people of the United States; and therefore we are asking for the text of the treaty in order that we may not only have it ourselves but that those whom we represent may have it.

Why are Mr. Taft and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and this combination of able gentlemen presenting this matter to the American people? Mr. Taft has advised us why. He proposes to make public opinion so strong, so irresistible, according to his statement, that the American Senate can be and will be whipped into submission. Are we not entitled to have public opinion informed on both sides of the question? Are they so afraid of the justice and wisdom of the cause as to feel under the necessity of withhholding from us the facts that both sides may be presented?

A great New York paper, perhaps one of the great newspapers in the world, the other day said in its editorial columns that the Senate of the United States must ratify the treaty for the same reason that the Germans must sign it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BORAH. Just a moment. That newspaper said the Senate of the United States must ratify the treaty for the same reason that the Germans must sign it. That is the point at which we have arrived in this discussion. A dictatorial power, speaking as if by authority within a short distance of where these treaties have been circulating for the last 10 days, notifies the American Senate that it must act as the Germans act, under force and duress!

I say to this newspaper we will not consider it and pass upon it whipped, coerced, and forced like a conquered people. This paper and all kindred spirits, so anxious to hasten their country into this compromising alliance with foreign powers, will learn that the Senate will deal with this question as becomes American Senators. We will debate and we will have the facts upon which to debate, and some, at least, will disregard threatened coercion. Those who are urging this surrender of American rights will have to meet their antagonists in the open field of fair and free discussion, and deal with the question upon its merits.

I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. The Senator has spoken of Mr. Taft endeavoring to create this sentiment. I want to call his attention and the attention of the Senate to the fact that the chairman of the Democratic national committee, accompanied by the Secretary to the President, is now touring the country under the somewhat—well, let me not characterize it—under the claim of calling together the State committees for the purpose of consulting with reference to the party welfare, but that in each instance the business transacted is the discussion of the league of nations; and the effort is made, and I think generally successfully, to have an official ratification by the Democratic State committees of the league of nations, thus seeking to commit the Democratic Party to this league, and to do that at a time when the terms of the league itself are not yet submitted to the American people; and this distinguished chairman has gone further, and in substance has asserted that he is the representative of the President in this business.

So that if the country is to be committed, or if the Democratic Party is to be committed, to a league of nations which is intertwined with the treaty so that they are inseparable, and if the treaty of peace also contains clauses which have not yet been made public, which are in fact agreements with reference to the future government of the world, it seems to me that before public opinion is formed and forced in this way at least the public might have the evidence in the case laid before it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield for just a moment in connection with the remarks just made by the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator has criticized quite severely some people who are trying to create sentiment in favor of this league. If his criticism is justified, I should like to ask him whether his criticism would not apply with equal force to those who have been making speeches over the country against the league of nations?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I shall answer that with very great pleasure, with the consent of the Senator whose time I am taking.

There was submitted to the Senate, or rather there has been submitted to the country—yes, submitted to the Senate—a document said to constitute the agreement of the league of nations. It was sent here, it was said, for discussion. We proceeded to discuss it, and the country proceeded to discuss it. Subsequently it was amended. In that amended form the country proceeded to discuss it. The point I am making is that it is now said that there are in the treaty of peace certain provisions and conditions which modify and which affect the league of nations, so called, in the most radical way; and, without that being submitted to the country, without that being submitted to the Senate, and in advance of it, the Secretary to the President—who, of course, goes out as his spokesman, and who has professed to speak for him—and the chairman of the Democratic National Committee have been trying to commit the Democratic organization to this document, when the complete document is not before us.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, not only have we, as I say, the ex-President and the able, faithful chairman of the Democratic National Committee presenting arguments to the country why this treaty and league should be accepted, but all kinds of arguments are being presented to us from our considerate friends abroad. We are not quite free to settle this matter among ourselves, but day by day and week after week there appear in some of the leading papers of the country, if not all of them, an argument presented by our friends across the sea telling the American people how if they falter they will disappoint the world and chaos will come if they do not accept a league of nations to guarantee the integrity of the British Empire.

I read what appeared yesterday. This is from Lord Robert Cecil. The deep-seated and profound solicitude of this family for the welfare of this country is hereditary. It was his famous father who in the midst of our Civil War and when free institutions needed friends declared, "The people of the South are the natural allies of England; the North, on the other hand, keeps an opposition shop." A high standard, but not an unfamiliar one. Could he have had his way our Union would have been torn in twain and the cause of free institutions put back a thousand years. Knowing, therefore, something of the standards and ideals of this family in dealing with the cause of this country, let us appreciate Lord Cecil's anxiety for our morals and his conception of our obligations.

I read:

> I see it suggested in some places that the United States should not accept membership in the league of nations because it might involve some sacrifice of national sovereignty. It would be foolish to deny that if nations are to make any organizations for peace each of them must be content to modify in some degree, however slight, its liberty of action. That is the inevitable result of cooperation, and I do not wish to underrate the sacrifice involved; but, after all, nothing is worth doing in this world that can be done without a sacrifice, and if any real change in the present international status is to take place it can only be because the nations of the world are so convinced of the evils of war that they are ready to risk something to prevent its occurrence in the future.

Yes, Mr. President; involving some sacrifice, some surrender of sovereignty! May I ask what sacrifice the country of which this gentleman is so prominent a citizen will make when it enters this league of nations? What possible sacrifice has the British Government made by reason of its joining the league?

We heard a great deal in this country before we went over to Versailles about the freedom of the seas. You have not heard anything about it since. Great Britain notified the courteous gentlemen from the other countries that the question of the freedom of the seas was not a matter which came within the jurisdiction of the Versailles conference. Why? That left to Great Britain her dominancy of the sea, which, with her additional power secured by reason of this war, enables her to dominate the world inside the league or outside the league. Her supreme navy and her dominancy of the sea is her foreign policy, and to it all other nations must bow. That which was essential to her independence and her sovereignty and her power was excluded from the consideration of the Versailles conference at the first sitting.

England, when this treaty is signed, will control one-fourth of the inhabited globe and dominate one-third of its entire population. Her guns are trained across every strategic path of the sea. She has her forts and her fortified harbors and her coaling stations and her islands in every part of the inhabitable globe. With her supreme navy and the seas within her control, she is in complete domination of the league of nations from the very first hour that it is organized.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. Just a minute and I will yield to the Senator.

Now, I ask, what has England sacrificed? By virtue of this war she will acquire territory directly or indirectly almost as large as the United States. She has acquired people over whom she will exercise control to the number of about 33,000,000. She has not surrendered one iota of her sovereignty or her power as an independent nation, as I shall show in a few minutes, by virtue of her voting power in the league. On the other hand, Mr. President, the moment we enter this league we change our entire policy of a century and a half. That which has been regarded as our safety and our security, which has enabled us to strengthen and to grow through this century and a half, the policy of Washington, is surrendered. The minute we enter the league we not only surrender the policy of Washington, but we surrender the policy established by Monroe. Those policies which have distinguished us through all these years and enabled us to acquire the commanding position which we now hold among the nations of the world, which enabled us to enter this war in the full panoply of power, and practically to determine the cause of civilization, are to be surrendered. I ask any candid man what does England surrender in compensation for this? What great national policy does she forego? What tradition does she reject? What right, privilege, or prestige does she sacrifice?

"Ah," Lord Robert Cecil says, "some sacrifice has to be made."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. Just a moment. Not only has England retained her policy but she has acquired an additional advantage. Under and inside of this league of nations, covered by it, is the same old balance of power—a combination or an alliance of Great Britain and France and the United States, so that Great Britain not only has her old balance of power with the United States to take the place of Russia, but she has, in addition to that, the league of nations, which she absolutely controls by her votes, to guarantee the territorial integrity of one-fourth of the inhabitable globe, and to hold in constant subjection one-third of the inhabitants of the earth. If the league works, very well, she controls it; if the league breaks down, very well, she has her balance of power with America as her ally.

I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I was present in the Senate here on the 26th of May, when the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] made a very ferocious attack upon the league of nations, and I think the Senator from Idaho listened to him. The burden of that attack was that this league of nations was to be dominated by some 17 small nations of color; and I did not hear the Senator from Idaho dissent from that claim at that time. I should like the Senator from Idaho now to state whether he agrees with the Senator from Missouri, his colleague in these attacks, that this league is to be dominated by these 17 small nations of color, or is it to be dominated by Great Britain?

Mr. BORAH. It will be dominated by Great Britain when Great Britain is interested, for Great Britain dominates the 17 small nations.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Oh, that is the idea? I am glad to have some reconciliation effected, because I was distressed over the thought that this league of nations would otherwise have two masters.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I have observed the distress of the Senator for several days; it seems verging on despair.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. At an earlier date we were told that it was to be dominated by the kings and potentates of Europe and Asia, and then it got to be Great Britain, and finally it got to be these petty nations that the Senator from Missouri classified. Now I understand that the Senator from Idaho goes back to the old claim that it is to be dominated by the British Empire.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield to me?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. REED. Nobody is so dense as a man who purposely closes his ears and shuts up his mind. What I said was perfectly plain, and has been once explained to the Senator from Nebraska, and explained in language so simple that I am sure he understood it; but, so that it may appear in the RECORD again at this time, I will restate it, with the courtesy of the Senator.

We heard for months a great deal about a league of nations. We read through the press excerpts of what it was claimed was to go into this league. In the month of November or December—I have forgotten which—I made a speech in opposition to this league of nations in progress of formation, and I started with the assumption that such a league, if it had force, would necessarily embrace the principal nations of Europe, and I said that if it did embrace the principal nations of Europe there would be a certain number of kingdoms represented and there would be certain Asiatic powers. I assumed then that this league would be what the President had said it must be, a league embracing the principal nations of the world; and I showed that if it did embrace the principal nations of the world there would be only two or three republics and a large number of kingdoms, with the exception of the governments that were in process of formation, the character of which we could not yet tell.

That was my speech, that the Senator has referred to, in which I said that kings would dominate. They would have dominated in that kind of a league. They would have dominated if the league had been formed as the President said he was going to form one, embracing all the principal nations of the world.

Later we obtained a copy of the league of nations, which gave us the information that there were five nations—France, Japan, Italy, Great Britain, and the United States—which were to constitute the members, and certain other nations named in a secret protocol, the names of the nations being kept from us.

I discussed that question, and I assumed at that time that the backward nations, the half-civilized nations, would not come into the league, and I discussed the question from that standpoint. Finally we were given the list of these nations, and to my astonishment, and I think to the astonishment of every man, we found Liberia, and Haiti and Hedjaz, and Honduras, and Nicaragua, and Siam, and India, and other half-civilized or retrograde nations placed in the league with the power each to cast a vote in the league the equal of the vote of the United States or the equal of the vote of any other nation. I discussed that, and called attention to the fact that the nations of dark skin were in the majority, and that on any race question they would be very likely to vote together and vote for the dark-skinned proposition. I also called attention to the fact that what had been previously denied—denied by my friend and denied by others—that Great Britain would have five votes in the league had been disclosed now was six votes, and that Great Britain had a preponderating influence in the league because of those six votes.

The Senator can call those contradictory statements if he wants to, but they are absolutely consistent. The only change is that we have been more and more finding out the iniquities of this monstrous document.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I want to make this observation: The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] has detailed to us the difficulty he had in arriving at a basis for his discussion of the league of nations. It just occurred to me that it might have been advisable for him to wait until he got the league of nations before he began the discussion; and I should like to suggest, with reference to the treaty of peace, that it might be a good thing for Senators to withhold their discussion until they know what it is.

Mr. REED. Exactly.

Mr. BORAH. Let me answer that by saying this: It would have been better for the Senator from Missouri to have joined the League to Enforce Peace, and then one of the contributors to that league, who seems to be in possession of the document at this time, could have informed him of what the contents were. There seems to be a conduit between the League to Enforce Peace and those who possess the information with reference to the contents of this treaty, and I hope that when the Senator begins his investigation he will call first some of the most prominent members of the League to Enforce Peace.

Now, I want to call attention to how another sacrifice has been made by Great Britain.

We first have the council, composed of five great powers, all of whom, except the United States, are interlinked with secret treaties—secret treaties which Mr. Balfour has been candid enough to say would not be abrogated, notwithstanding the league of nations—secret treaties between Japan and Great Britain, and Italy and Great Britain, and we are to have one between France and Great Britain, so we are advised. But, Mr. President, we go from the council to the assembly, and we see something perfectly fascinating in its audacity. It really is a stroke of genius, such as no other nation, in my judgment, ever had the genius to suggest, and no other nation except the United States has had the inverted genius to accept.

The members of this league are, first, the United States of America; second, Great Britain. That ought to have ended the proposition. The United States has one vote, Great Britain one vote.

Now, tell me, Senators, who still have some regard for this country and who do not regret that your ancestors came here, upon what possible theory would you proceed further in foreign affairs in reference to foreign nations than to give Great Britain and the United States the same number of votes? But, they say, naming the British Empire—which includes Canada—then Canada, Australia, South Africa, New Zealand, India. Is there any possible reason why India or New Zealand should have a vote in that assembly and not the State of Minnesota? Are not New Zealand and India just as completely controlled in foreign affairs by the foreign office of Great Britain as Minnesota is in our foreign affairs by the United States? Is there any difference between giving India, New Zealand, and Australia a vote and giving it to New Mexico or Ohio or even the new State of Idaho? Upon what possible theory? It arises out of the supreme desire of the English nation to show that it is sacrificing something in this grand scheme of cooperation. Six votes to our one in the assembly, and that assembly, do not forget, is a matter of tremendous moment under this new covenant.

Both in the council and in the assembly, wherever a majority vote is sufficient, Europe and Asia will completely dominate every situation. The whole thing will be completely in their hands. We will be under the voting power of foreigners. In all cases where unanimous vote is required the situation, in many respects, will be worse. While it is true that in some instances we could check affirmative action, so could any nation of Europe check affirmative action on our part. If we as a nation or people should feel under the necessity of urging affirmative action as essential to peace or to our own protection, one nation could veto anything we might desire to do. If we wanted to move, for instance, to enforce the Monroe doctrine, one nation, Japan or New Zealand, could veto our action. If we desired to prevent colonization of the Japanese immigration upon the Western Continent, one nation could veto that right. In other words, this great Republic must bow in shameless subserviency to foreign powers and depend for all time in the future as to its policies upon what foreign nations will deem wise and proper.

So, Mr. President, I challenge any man upon this floor or, if my weak voice can be heard in the House of Parliament, I ask any Englishman to state where sacrifice has been made upon the part of the British Government in entering into this league of nations. It is in a position to dominate and control and direct its policies just the same as it to-day directs and controls the policies of the British Empire; and never for a single moment did it lose sight of that proposition, from the first step in the writing of the league until it was completed.

Just a word, Mr. President, with reference to another matter, and I will conclude. A good deal has been said in the last 10 days with reference to this being a party question. Unfortunately, I presume, I hold a little different opinion about this than most of my colleagues on this side of the Chamber. Therefore I do not assume to speak for anyone but myself.

The able Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] said the other day in his address that he regretted very much a tendency upon this side of the Chamber to make this a partisan question, and that, while they were desirous of holding it out of party politics upon that side, there was a disposition here to force it into party politics. My friend from Arkansas had not lately visited the Isle of Patmos. He should have sought a later revelation.

Why, at the very time he was speaking here upon the floor of the Senate the chairman of the Democratic committee in Chicago was making it a party issue and was so declaring to the entire country, if the Associated Press dispatch be a correct statement of what he said and was so declaring. He declred he welcomed it as a party issue, and then proceeded to put the party brand upon it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. In just a moment. If you will read the Associated Press dispatch from Chicago in the Washington Post of May 29, you will see I am correct. I have not seen it denied. In other words, he pointed to many achievements of the Democratic Party, and, of course, pointed to the record of Mr. Wilson, which was proper, and then pointed to the league of nations as the greatest issue of the party and the greatest achievement of all time. A party issue! The second night before the President left for Europe he called his party organization in conference. Mr. Cummings hastened from the White House to the first public rostrum, and in a public speech announced that the Democratic Party was supporting the league and that those who were opposed to it were opposing it for party reasons. By this declaration by the chairman of the party made a few hours after consultation with the President, this league was made a party question, so far as the Democratic Party is concerned.

During the recess of Congress I had the pleasure of visiting some 11 States of the Union in the discussion of this matter. I crossed the path of the able chairman several times. There was no place where he visited and no council which he called in which it was not left unmistakably within the knowledge of the public that the Democratic Party as a party is behind the league of nations. It was everywhere understood that support of the league is a test of party loyalty. There is not an informed man in Washington who does not know that to be true.

It has been a party issue, Mr. President, ever since the President of the United States called his conference, and Mr. Cummings now is traveling over the country organizing in every part of the country, and one of the principal arguments in favor of the Democratic Party, as he puts it, is the covenant of the league of nations.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I do not know that my recollection of the press reports of the Chicago meeting is any better than that of the Senator from Idaho, but if my recollection is correct, the chairman of the Democratic committee took the position that the league of nations should be ratified—that it should not be made a party issue.

Mr. BORAH. No, Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. But that if any other party wanted to force it as a party issue, he was ready to take up the fight. I would like to concur in that suggestion. If there is any party that wants to make it a party issue, the Democrats of this country, in my judgment, will welcome the issue.

Mr. BORAH. There is no use for the Senator from New Mexico to occupy my time with that proposition. The Senator from New Mexico knows infinitely better than the Senator from Idaho that it is a party issue in the Democratic Party now and has been ever since the covenant was first announced. There is not a Democrat in the country who does not know that his party as a party is supporting it.

I noticed the other day there was a nonpartisan dinner in New York in favor of the league of nations. The gentleman who presided at that dinner was a distinguished Democratic judge, and the main speaker was the nonpartisan chairman of the Democratic Party, Mr. Cummings, and the other speaker was that gentleman whom we all know is nonpartisan in all his actions, Mr. McAdoo.

If you will read the report of his speech in the New York papers you will have no doubt about the fact that while Mr. McAdoo always desires to be nonpartisan, he is so obsessed with the idea of the league of nations and that it will be so helpful to the Democratic Party that he was forced to admit that it was the greatest achievement of the party of which he is a member.

Mr. President, there is only one objection which I make to that, and that is it takes so much credit from our friend Mr. Taft. I do not think it is fair to deprive that distinguished gentleman of his proportion of the glory. Is it true, Mr. President, that they pay a vast amount of deference to Mr. Taft? The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] went so far the other day as to say that since Mr. Taft began to advocate the league of nations he had redeemed himself before the American people. Mr. Taft will doubtless realize that he was once in a fallen state and that redemption came by his supporting a league of nations, which league of nations Mr. Cummings tells us is a Democratic achievement.

Mr. President, how could you prevent its becoming a party issue. Let us test the question first by mere party tactics or expediency and then let us test it by a higher standard. Let us suppose the league is defeated. It will necessarily be defeated by Republican votes. Will the Democratic Party then abandon the fight; will it not in 1920 then point to its defeat, denounce the Republican Party for defeating it, and then go to the country declaring that a great plan for world peace had been frustrated by the Republican Party? And will the Republican Party indorse the declaration of the Democrats and admit its mistake? If it does not, then will it not be an issue to fight out in the campaign? It is simply impossible to keep this out of the campaign in some way in 1920. It is not an ordinary treaty, interest in which will die out when ratified or defeated. It is a matter of tremendous political moment, one which has aroused the people deeply, and one upon which they will ultimately be heard.

Suppose, on the other hand, the league is ratified. The Democratic Party, as its distinguished chairman and Mr. McAdoo are already claiming, will point to it as the great achievement of the party. Even if we should support it as Republicans we will be given no credit. You will recall how faithfully we supported the war. But 10 days before the election the President made the war and all questions growing out of the war a party issue. He appealed directly to the people to elect a Democratic Congress. Whether we vote for or against the league the Democratic Party is already claiming it and will claim it is a party issue. I trust we are not without the wisdom which comes from experience after the last six years.

But, Mr. President, let us test this upon a higher plane. There is a deeper and profounder reason why it must be a party issue. It should not be made a party issue for mere party advantage. I agree to that. I agree, further, that no man should support or oppose it because his party tells him to do so, but this is a question upon which the American people are widely separated and irreconcilably divided. Those who are in favor of it will so express themselves and those who are opposed to it will express their opposition. How can they do so except through party action? Under our form of government the people can only speak effectively through political organizations called political parties. There are hundreds and thousands and millions of people in this country who will want to elect a President and a Congress in 1920 opposed to the policy of this country meddling in European affairs. If by our act here we commit this country to such a policy no power can prevent the issue being settled by a popular vote in 1920. You can not disfranchise a people by the political parties in power joining upon a certain issue. You can monopolize almost anything in this country. But you can not monopolize the right of the people to organize a political party. And the only possible way that the masses can effectuate their purposes is to act through political parties and organizations.

I have been in 11 States of the Union since Congress closed and I entertain no doubt at all that the great mass of the people are against any principle which will take their sons to Europe to do police service or to protect European boundaries. I have no doubt they are unalterably opposed to this thing of entering into the broils and turmoils of Europe. Do you suppose these people will consent to be deprived of their votes in this manner? If the Democratic Party indorses and the Republican Party indorses or remains silent, do you think they will yield up their loyalty to their country for loyalty to their party? If you do, you are doomed to disillusionment. I am making no threats; I am stating a fact. On this great question the people are ahead of their leaders. Their hearts are sounder and their minds clearer.

I expect to see the Republican Party true to its traditions, loyal to its teachings for half a century, loyal to the precepts which brought it into existence, declare in favor of remaining aloof from European alliances and in favor of Europe remaining out of American affairs. I expect to see it declare in favor of the untrammeled sovereignty and independence of this Republic. I expect to see it declare that no power except the power of this Government, through the processes of government, shall ever have the right to commit this country to war, either directly or indirectly. I expect to see it declare in favor of bringing the boys out of Europe and keeping them out of Europe unless our own Republic shall be threatened, and if it is threatened we will determine that and not some foreign council. But it is just as certain to my mind as anything in the future can be that if the two old parties should favor a contrary policy some other means will be found through and by means of which the people will express and effectuate their views.

Why, Senators, shall we say that the question of how much tariff shall be levied is a party issue but whether we shall entangle ourselves in European affairs is not a party issue? Shall we say that the question of who secured woman suffrage is a stupendous party issue but the question of whether or not we shall hold intact the Monroe doctrine is no concern of a party? Shall we say that the question of economy is a party issue but the question of whether our Government shall remain free and independent as it was organized is of no concern to our party? Reflect for a moment what a miserable coward you are making of the party of which you are members. Shall we say that the amount of taxes which you shall pay is a party issue but whether our sons shall accept a call of war in defense of foreign boundaries is not a party issue? I repeat, we can not play the game upon so low a plane.

It is true that this may lead to a realignment. That might be a blessing to our country. A false issue has too long divided the South and the North. Let the Mason and Dixon line disappear before the burning issues of the salvation of our common country. The North and South may have different views over domestic questions. But in loyalty to our institutions and devotion to our independence geography does not divide our people. Let us stop finessing. Let men line up. Let those who believe that the American people should continue independent and free to control their own affairs according to their own wisdom and judgment stand upon one side and those who believe that we should transfer some of our most vital powers to a supergovernment controlled by foreigners stand upon the other. Let those who continue to adhere to the policy of Washington and Jefferson and Jackson and Lincoln stand upon one side and those who would surrender our traditions, our teachings, and our policies to the interpretation, construction, and enforcement of European alliances stand upon the other. Yes, indeed, there will be party division.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, before the Senate adjourns I want to do justice to Mr. Polk, of the State Department, and I desire to do it in the presence of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. Earlier in the day the Senator from Massachusetts said:

> I only know they—
> Meaning copies of the treaty—
> are here in this country and, on the authority of the State Department, that they are in the hands of the financial interests. That is not my statement. Now, Mr. President, that is all I could suggest to any committee.
> Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator state who in the State Department made that statement, and to whom it was made?
> Mr. LODGE. Mr. Frank Polk made it.
> Mr. HITCHCOCK. To whom?
> Mr. LODGE. He made it to the press, and it was printed in the press that evening.

I have taken the trouble to ascertain where it was printed, and so far as I am able to ascertain there was no publication anywhere concerning a statement by Mr. Polk, except in the Washington Star. I will read that portion of it which seems to refer to this matter. The article was written by Mr. Oliver Owen Kuhn. It does not purport to give a quotation from Mr. Polk, but is an allegation by Mr. Kuhn. It states:

> It is admitted by the State Department that separate sections of the treaty, notably the financial and economic clauses, have fallen into hands of others than the department, but the department says it is not apprised of the reported fact that still other interests, notably the New York group of international financiers, have the document in full.
> Other than State Department copies of the document, the only complete text that has been received in Washington, so far as known by the department, is that received by the Japanese Embassy, which copy, the department has been assured, was forwarded on to Tokio.
> Investigation of just how the treaty fell into the hands of the New York financiers could be made, but the department here fails to indicate that it will take any steps in this direction. It is certain, however, that the treaty has not been transmitted to outside interests in America other than by mail or by person. Senator LODGE charges that the treaty came from attachés of the American commission to negotiate peace. The department in Washington declares that it is so far removed from the scene of negotiations that it can not affirm or deny.

Mr. President, that is rather a different statement from that which the Senator from Massachusetts averred. I took occasion immediately after his statement to call up Mr. Polk over the telephone, and he declared positively that he had not made the statement attributed to him by the Senator from Massachusetts, and that the only thing he had said was, referring to the statement of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] on the floor of the Senate, that it might be true, but he had no means of knowing whether it was true or not. I say this in justice to Mr. Polk.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the statement in the Star to which the Senator from Nebraska refers and of which he has read a portion says:

> This may be said to summarize the State Department's answer to the charges made by both Mr. LODGE, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, and his party cohort, Mr. BORAH.

I do not exactly know what "a party cohort" is.

Mr. President, on the day on which the first discussion about the presence of the treaty in this country arose, after the adjournment, as I was going to my office, I was met by a reporter of the Associated Press, who stopped me and said, "the State Department says that what you saw were fragments or extracts of the treaty in the hands of some New York business firm." I asked, "What did I say in the Senate?" He replied, "that you had seen the whole treaty." I said, "I am not in the habit of deliberately lying in public or private; I did see the whole treaty." The inquiry from this reporter who had just come from the State Department annoyed me a good deal, and I called up Mr. Polk on the telephone then and there. He said the reporter had misunderstood him; that, of course, he had not intended to question any statement I had made; and that all he had said was that he thought what had been referred to might be portions of the treaty relating to financial matters which had fallen into the hands of New York bankers or business men, whoever they were. That was the statement on which I acted.

I certainly meant to do no injustice to Mr. Polk, of whom I have the highest opinion, but he told me himself that he had made the statement of the character to which I have referred to the reporter.

I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 23 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, June 6, 1919, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 5, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father in heaven, we come to Thee with all the accumulated faith of the past, assured by the faith resident in our souls, seeking wisdom, strength, and courage from the source of all that is reliable.

We only know a little. Thou art infinite. Inspire us to the right and hold our course onward and upward, that out of all the confused conditions which surround us in the physical, intellectual, moral, and spiritual life we may fulfill the highest and best conditions. Through Him who taught us by word and example how to live together in peace and harmony. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. MCCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, the roll call in yesterday's RECORD shows that I was absent. I desire to say that I accompanied Gov. Robinson, of Oklahoma, his staff, and members of the Oklahoma delegation in Congress to New York for the purpose of welcoming home the Oklahoma soldiers of the Thirty-sixth Division. I also wish to say that if I had been present, I would have voted for the Agricultural bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's statement is out of order.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] asks leave of absence for three days on account of illness.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request will be granted.

There was no objection.

EMPLOYEES IN THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution and move to discharge the Committee on Expenditures in the Agricultural Department from further consideration of House resolution 66, and that it be called up for immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves that the Committee on Expenditures in the Agricultural Department be discharged from further consideration of resolution 66, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 66.

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, requested to promptly report to the House of Representatives at the earliest date practicable the following facts:

(1) The names of all Government employees in the various branches of the Department of Agriculture who are employed by any person, firm, or corporation, the name of such employer, the hours of service given to such employer, and the amount of compensation received by such employee per month for such outside service.

(2) The names of all employees whose spouse (wife or husband), father, mother, sister or sisters, or brother or brothers are in the employ of the Government, their names, department of service, hours of service, and amount of compensation per month, respectively, received by each and all of said relatives.

(3) The amount of annual income, if any, over and above the salary received by the Government employees in said department.

To direct the attention of said department more fully to the particular information requested, reference is made to the form of questionnaire in H. J. Res. 5.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I understand that such a motion is not debatable, and I therefore move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order on the motion to discharge the committee. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas to discharge the committee.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were 71 ayes and 5 noes.

So the motion to discharge the committee was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And that motion is debatable?

The SPEAKER. That question is debatable.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I presume the purpose of the gentleman is to ascertain whether there are employed in the Department of Agriculture persons who hold dual positions?

Mr. BLANTON. That is my purpose. I understand that there are, and in every other department of the Government, existing for years.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In the second paragraph the resolution provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall submit the names of all employees, and so forth, in the employ of the Government. How could the Secretary of Agriculture make a report as to all employees of the Government?

Mr. BLANTON. Any employees of the Government in his department.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I submit that there should be an amendment, because the Secretary of Agriculture would have no general jurisdiction such as is indicated here.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is mistaken about that. For instance, the question is as to the report of the names of all the employees in his department who have relatives in other departments of the Government. That is the purpose of section 2. It does not relate entirely to employees in the Agricultural Department.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am afraid the gentleman's resolution will defeat itself if it passes in this form. He should say "in the Department of Agriculture." If he would strike out "Government" and insert "Department of Agriculture," he would cover the situation. I question whether the resolution might not go so far as to relieve the Secretary of Agriculture from making any report at all.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on line 11, after the word "employees," there be inserted the words "in the Department of Agriculture."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves to amend by inserting after the word "employees," in line 11, the words "in the Department of Agriculture."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. Has the gentleman any idea as to what the expense of this will be?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; it will not put the Government to the expense of more than $150 for printing a certain questionnaire, which I will give to each one of these departments, and in fact have already sent them out to some of them; that is, if my questionnaire is used.

Mr. LITTLE. Will not some clerks have to be employed in the matter?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no. As far as that is concerned, I take it that most of these questionnaires will be delivered to the joint congressional commission which now has the matter under investigation. Anyway each department now has sufficient clerks to handle it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Since there will be no opportunity for amendment, I suggest these things to the gentleman: I think the word "promptly" is superfluous in line 2, because the resolution provides further on that the report shall be made at the earliest date possible. Then, I think the word "also" should be added at the end of line 6—various branches of the Department of Agriculture who are also employed by any person, firm, or corporation.

Mr. BLANTON. I think the word "promptly" should remain there, because the earliest date practicable to some people means 6 months or 12 months or 18 months, and we ought to give the department to understand that we want these reports just as soon as they may be had.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I withdraw the suggestion as to that. It is a matter of tautology only. I think the word "also" should be inserted at the end of line 6—

the names of all Government employees in the various branches of the Department of Agriculture who are also employed—

And so forth.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by inserting the word "also" after the word "are," at the end of line 6, page 1.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 6, at the end of the line insert the word "also."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under section 2 of this resolution the Secretary of Agriculture is required to report all those employees in his department who have any relatives employed in his or in other departments. The gentleman knows that there are no records in the Department of Agriculture showing that fact, and the only way that the Secretary of Agriculture can obtain that information is to call before him every employee of the department and ask that employee whether he or she has relatives in any other department of the Government.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no. If the gentleman will read section 3, or rather the end of the resolution, he will see that a proper method is pointed out, suggested to every one of the heads of these departments, whereby they may easily ascertain everything that we ask of them.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is House joint resolution No. 5 the one introduced by the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. What information does that convey to the Department of Agriculture that would enable the head of that department to answer this question?

Mr. BLANTON. If they will submit that form of questionnaire proposed by me in House joint resolution No. 5, which can be done very easily, to each employee in the department, within 24 hours that department can have the answers to every question asked.

Mr. BARKLEY. Section 3 of the resolution provides that the Secretary of Agriculture must report not only these other things that have been mentioned, but he must carry on a census among the employees of the Department of Agriculture to find out how much income they have over and above their salaries in the department.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no. If he will submit my proposed questionnaire to them, which they can answer in 24 hours, he can have all of this information at his finger ends ready to give it to Congress.

Mr. BARKLEY. What valuable purpose does the gentleman expect to serve in having Congress provided with the amount of income of each employee of the Department of Agriculture over and above his salary?

Mr. BLANTON. I am very glad the gentleman has asked me that, and I will explain it so that he can easily understand it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will ask the gentleman to make it very plain.

Mr. BLANTON. I stated on the floor of the House the other day that down in the Bureau of Mines, as chief chemist of that department, Mr. Charles L. Parsons was paid by the Government $4,800 a year, and in that same department Mr. Parsons, although an employee of the Government, although he was expected to give the seven hours a day, from 9 a. m. until 5 p. m., to this Government, although this Government was paying him for the brain that he is supposed to use for the Government in those seven hours of work a day, has had housed in that department as an officer of a private corporation the American Chemical Society, with its corps of clerks in there, and which had no connection with this Government—a corps of clerks and employees which are not connected with the Government in any way whatever, he receiving an extra salary of $3,500 from this corporation. And last year from 13,500 members of that private corporation he collected in a department of this Government $137,000, that went into the coffers of this institution; that this institution has been getting its rent free from the Government; that it has been getting its janitor service free; that it has been getting its ice water and electric lights and fans free; and that the only time Mr. Parsons has to give to the private corporation is the time that was supposed to have been given to this Government, from 9 a. m. until 5 p. m., because no employee of this private corporation could remain in that building after 5 o'clock p. m.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Not yet. I want to fully answer the gentleman, so that he will understand it. [Applause on Republican side.]

Mr. BARKLEY. I think I clearly understand as to that one man. The question I desire to ask is this: Admitting that the information with reference to this employee would be of value to the Congress, under the terms of the gentleman's resolution the Secretary of Agriculture is required to report whether any employee in his department has a house in Washington, we will say, or somewhere else, which rents for so much a month, and that that is a part of his income over and above his salary.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes it does.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman must let me answer him. A few weeks ago an employee of this Government, a Mr. Gallup, who had been in the employ of the Government for years as a clerk, died. I am reliably informed that his administrator reports that that clerk left an estate of about $187,000 of District securities, money loaned in this District on first-mortgage liens.

He further reported that this clerk in the department left $34,000 of securities in his hands, as good as Government bonds, that could be taken down here to a bank and cashed any day. When clerks are coming before this Congress like they will be doing in a few days, clamoring for an increase of bonus, when Congress has already increased their bonus first to $120, when Congress, on further demand and further insistence, has increased their bonus to $240, when we could not give our good soldiers who have come back from France and Flanders but a little $60 bonus; when, as I say, they will be coming in here in a few days asking us to give them more bonus, when, if this resolution is answered properly—and I pointed out the proper way for it to be answered—it will be shown to this Congress that some of these clerks at least have more money than almost any other financial institution in this District; that they have piled it up year after year. Some of them have money loaned to banks, I understand. They are going to come here and ask us to raise their bonus. Some of them may need a bonus, some of them may need an increase of salary, but why not give it to the ones needing it and not make it a blanket raise; do not make it a blanket raise to the inefficient as well as the efficient; do not give it to the particular clerks down here in the Finance Division of the War Department who, when they were asked to work two or three hours' extra time more speedily to mail out this $60 bonus to our deserving soldier boys, struck against the Government and walked out and said, "To hell with the soldiers' bonuses; we will not work over the time prescribed by Congress, seven hours."

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BARKLEY. I would like to state that the gentleman has not made it very plain why every employee of the United States should be put through a "third-degree" operation to find if they have some income above their salaries.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I have made it plain to every person in this House except my good friend from Kentucky. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. The gentleman overestimates his clarity of statement.

Mr. GARRETT. I note the gentleman has three matters of inquiry. One of them refers to the question of their employment besides Government employment.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. I see no objection to that. The other is to get the names of relatives of those who are employed in other departments. I do not see any particular harm about that, but I want to ask the gentleman from Texas if he does not think he is going too far when he undertakes to ascertain and have reported to this House the income other than the income that is derived from their employment. The gentleman here would have reported the income derived from investments. In other words, he is delving into the private affairs of these people in a way that does not seem to me the Congress is justified in doing.

Mr. BLANTON. Just a moment.

Mr. KITCHIN. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. BLANTON. Let me first answer the two gentlemen, the one from Kentucky and the one from Tennessee. I assumed that inquiry was a proper one by answering it. It is a proper one. What right have we to look into the private income of individuals employed by this Government? We have just this right: If they were demanding merely a salary, that would be all right, but it is not merely a salary they demand, but they come in here each term of Congress and each session of Congress and each piece of session and demand in addition to the salary an extra bonus paid to every one of them in a blanket raise.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. BLANTON. Just a moment. If these people are getting salaries that will not pay expenses, if these people are getting salaries that will not pay house rent and grocery bills and dry goods bills and telephone bills and all of the incidental expenses that come to a family and a household, then they have got the right to ask for a blanket bonus of $360, which they are going to do in a few days, but if there is a clerk like Mr. Gallup, who has got $187,000 loaned out in District securities, I would ask if you are not concerned in knowing that fact when you grant a man in that financial situation a $360 bonus when you sat here and reduced the bonus to your soldier boys down to a little measly $60.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest this to the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Texas. The gentleman's third provision is:

The amount of annual income, if any, over and above the salary received by the Government employees in said department.

Probably we would have no right to pass that anyway. The policy of the Government in reference to the collection of taxes on incomes forbids anybody in the Internal Revenue Bureau or the Treasury Department from divulging the amount of the income of any person who has to make a return or information found on the return. It would be contravening both the policy and the statute of the Government to direct the Secretary of Agriculture or even the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to ascertain and make public such income by a simple House resolution. It would require a joint resolution of the two Houses to be signed by the President, which would be practically repealing that portion of the law.

I think the gentleman from Texas, in view of that, should be willing to strike out section 3. It serves no useful purpose which the gentleman has in mind.

I agree with the gentleman from Texas, and also as expressed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], that the first and second paragraphs or sections are all right, and that there is no objection to them, but if I were the gentleman I would strike out section 3.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina, of course, knows more about the rules of the House and the law than I do. I certainly admit that, but I want to call the gentleman's attention to the rulings under Rule XXII, under which I have called up this resolution. He will find that back for 100 years this House has ruled that it has the right, through resolutions, to call on any department of Government at any time for any kind of information that exists in that department that will aid the membership of the House in passing upon questions which may come before it for consideration.

Mr. KITCHIN. But if there is a law against it——

Mr. BLANTON. If there is a law against it. But if it is a ruling——

Mr. KITCHIN. It is no ruling. It is the law. If the Secretary of Agriculture desired to find out what the exact return is in the Bureau of Internal Revenue, he could go there, but when the Secretary of Agriculture goes there to find out the commissioner would say, "You can not get that."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, the law referred to by the gentleman from North Carolina merely relates to the Internal Revenue Department giving out information to the public. It has nothing in the world to do with the question of the House of Representatives calling on the department of Government for information that exists in that department.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the better judgment of the gentleman from North Carolina.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] propounds a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARD. I want to know when is the proper time to offer an amendment to strike out.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas has the floor. That can be done when he yields the floor.

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the better judgment of the older men in Congress on this question, and I move that section 3 be stricken from this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] moves that section 3 be stricken from the resolution.

Mr. GARD. A parliamentary inquiry. Does the gentleman move that or ask unanimous consent that the amendment be modified?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves it. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, under the same section of the rule I move that the committee be discharged from further consideration of House resolution No. 65.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves that the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Labor be discharged from further consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 65.

Resolved, That the Secretary of Labor be, and he is hereby, requested to promptly report to the House of Representatives at the earliest date practicable the following facts:

(1) The names of all Government employees in the various branches of the Labor Department who are employed by any person, firm, or corporation, the name of such employer, the hours of service given to such employer, and the amount of compensation received by such employee per month for such outside service.

(2) The names of all employees whose spouse (wife or husband), father, mother, sister or sisters, or brother or brothers, are in the employ of the Government, their names, department of service, hours of service, and amount of compensation per month respectively received by each and all of said relatives.

(3) The amount of annual income, if any, over and above their Government salary received by the Government employees in said department.

Attention is directed to the form of questionnaire in House joint resolution 5, as one calculated to elicit the information sought.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment. I move, Mr. Speaker, first, that the vote by which the former resolution was agreed to be reconsidered and that motion laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is too late. This motion is now pending. The question is on discharging the committee, as moved by the gentleman.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, now I move that the vote by which the former resolution was passed be reconsidered and that the motion be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will wait until we dispose of this.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the same amendments which were made to the preceding resolution be considered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that section 3 of House resolution No. 65 be stricken out.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will modify his unanimous-consent request.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the same amendment——

The SPEAKER. The Chair put the unanimous consent that the gentleman asks, that section 3 be stricken out.

Mr. BLANTON. There were some other amendments besides the one to section 3.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will submit the amendments and have them reported by the Clerk.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the following amendment, that——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. You do not require the amendment to section 1. That is all right in this instance.

Mr. BLANTON. I move that on line 10, after the word "employees," there be added "in the Department of Labor."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, namely, that section 3 be stricken out, with the understanding, however, that section 3 embraces only the three lines 1, 2, and 3.

Mr. GARRETT. That other ought to go out.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out lines 1, 2, and 3 on page 2.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking out, in addition to that, lines 4, 5, and 6.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not yield the floor.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman loses the floor when he offers an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike it all out.

Mr. GARD. There is not any motion.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BLANTON moves to strike out all of section 3, from lines 1 to 6, on page 2, inclusive.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BLANTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

On motion of Mr. BLANTON, a motion to reconsider also the vote by which resolution No. 66 was agreed to was laid on the table.

EMPLOYEES IN THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department be discharged from further consideration of House resolution No. 67.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves that the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department be discharged from the further consideration of House resolution No. 67, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 67.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, requested to promptly report to the House of Representatives at the earliest date practicable the following facts:

(1) The names of all Government employees in the various branches of the Interior Department who are employed by any person, firm, or corporation, the name of such employer, the hours of service given to such employer, and the amount of compensation received by such employee per month for such outside service.

(2) The names of all employees whose spouse (wife or husband), father, mother, sister or sisters, or brother or brothers, are in the employ of the Government, their names, department of service, hours of service, and amount of compensation per month respectively received by each and all of said relatives.

(3) The amount of annual income, if any, over and above their Government salary, received by the Government employees in said department.

Attention is directed to the form of questionnaire in H. J. Res. 5 as one calculated to elicit the information sought.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to discharge the committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. On line 11, after the word "employees," insert the words "in the Department of the Interior."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Amend, page 1, line 11, by inserting, after the word "employees," the words "in the Department of the Interior."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will yield in a moment. Now, Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment: To strike out all of section 3, lines 1 to 6, on page 2, inclusive.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers a further amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Amend, page 2, by striking out all of lines 1 to 6, inclusive.

Mr. BLANTON. Now I yield to my colleague from Texas.

Mr. BLACK. I want to know what useful purpose the gentleman expects to accomplish by requiring the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Labor, and the Secretary of Agriculture to find out how many brothers a man may have in the service, or how many sisters he may have? In what way would that affect the compensation or the merits of it?

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I think I can answer the gentleman to his entire satisfaction.

Mr. BLACK. Or the substance of his employment.

Mr. BLANTON. Since I introduced a resolution here the other day to appoint an auditor to audit the accounts and expenditures in the United States Employment Service I understand that there has been dismissed from that service within the last few days quite a score of employees on big salaries, including the sister of the director of that department, who last July carried a book in her pocket which authorized her to go to any railroad station in the United States and sign up a slip and call for transportation. She used that book in New York on the 4th day of last July to get transportation and Pullman service for three different people from New York to Atlantic City, and on the 7th day of July transportation and Pullman service for herself from Atlantic City back to New York. That is a practice that I want to break up in this Government. [Applause on the Republican side.] And I want to say that in breaking it up I am just as loyal a Democrat as there is on the floor of this House. [Applause.]

I want to say further, Mr. Speaker, that this system at which I am aiming these resolutions right now is not a Democratic system. It is a vicious system, as I said the other day, which we Democrats inherited from our good brothers on the Republican side six years ago. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Has that answered the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BLACK. That is not to my mind a satisfactory answer, to require the heads of these departments to find out how many brothers and sisters and mothers and fathers an employee may have that are employed by the Government. It seems to me, if the gentleman wants to find out whether we have any useless employees in the Government service, he is not going about it in the right way. I do not think the second paragraph of your resolution will serve any useful purpose.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Densmore has the right to employ his sister. Other members or officials of that Labor Department have the right to employ their wives, if they can give just as good service as anybody else. But when they get to riding around over this country on Government transportation, if you please, from Washington to the California coast, and from New York to Atlantic City, and to the various other watering places of this country in the summer months, I want to know it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman answer this question?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. BLACK. Will the answers to these inquiries that you propose to propound disclose any information of that sort?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; they will.

Mr. BLACK. In what way?

Mr. BLANTON. Because I have had good auditors promise me that when these departments call upon them they are going to give the evidence, and they are not afraid to do it. [Applause on Republican side.]

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. BLANTON. Gladly.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman is doubtless aware of the fact that there was created in the last Congress, and appointed in part by the Speaker, a joint congressional committee for the investigation of the salaries in the District of Columbia?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I am aware of that. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARD. What purpose not embraced within the purview of the employment of such a committee as that is contained in the gentleman's request for information from these departments?

Mr. BLANTON. It is to bring out evidence that is covered by no part of the questionnaire prepared by this joint congressional committee. One member of that committee has made speech after speech in Washington, at banquets and meetings of the employees of this Government, saying, "Don't be afraid of us, boys; we are not going to hurt you, but we are going to help you." [Laughter on Republican side.] I have tried my best to get that joint congressional committee to prepare a questionnaire that will elicit the information that I want to know, as one new Member of Congress, when I pass upon the reclassification of salaries.

Mr. GARD. Would it not be better for the gentleman to save the condemnation until this joint legislative committee can make its report?

Mr. BLANTON. I am saving it. If you just knew all I have got in my pocket you would think I am saving it. [Laughter.] Does the gentleman want to ask me any further questions? [Laughter.]

Mr. GARD. It is not a matter of saving it. It is a matter of saving your condemnation until you see what this committee appointed for this purpose is going to do.

Mr. BLANTON. My good friend, who has occupied the bench, well knows that a judge upon the bench does not pass judgment until the culprit comes before him in the court, and then he passes his condemnation.

Mr. GARD. Whom does the gentleman call the culprit, the joint legislative committee or the clerk in the District of Columbia?

Mr. BLANTON. I say it with due deliberation that when this House appoints a joint congressional committee to bring us evidence that we are to use in passing upon the reclassification of salaries, when that joint congressional committee are spending thousands of dollars of the people's money in doing it, they ought to bring us information that is worth something.

Mr. GARD. Possibly they will. How does the gentleman know they are not going to do that?

Mr. BLANTON. They have not asked a question of a man or woman or child in this District that would elicit the information whether or not employees are working for private concerns or private individuals or private corporations, and giving more of their time on the outside than they are giving to this Government.

Mr. GARD. That is a difference of opinion between those who compose this joint legislative committee and the gentleman; but in all good faith to this committee, which the gentleman voted for, the House members of which themselves distinguished former Members of this House, were appointed by the honored former Speaker of this House, ought we not in all fairness to wait in our condemnation at least until the evidence is before us and not go off upon any assumption or wild ideas that something is going to happen that may not happen at all? In other words, I want to voice my confidence in this joint congressional committee until I know they have abused that confidence. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the statement of the gentleman from Ohio is a fair and judicial one. All I am trying to do by these resolutions is to bring before this Congress evidence that will not be elicited by the questionnaires which have already been prepared by the joint congressional committee, and which have already been answered by every one of these employees of this Government, which evidence is now being compiled into a voluminous record that will probably cost thousands of dollars to print and put on our desks and into the pages of which many of us will never look——

Mr. GARD. I presume the gentleman from Texas will look into it.

Mr. BLANTON. I will look into it, I promise you, but I want to obtain the evidence that they fail to obtain. Their evidence is all in. So far as they are concerned, the case is closed, and I want to bring additional evidence here, because, fortunately, my good colleagues, you and I are the ones who are to pass upon their report and upon the reclassification of salaries. This joint congressional committee is merely a creature of this House. It is merely a servant of this House, to help gather information here for our guidance. If they do not prepare to bring all the evidence we want, we have the right to take steps to obtain the balance for ourselves. I do not know whether my good friend from Ohio [Mr. GARD] would be interested in this additional evidence or not, but I promise you I will be interested in it.

Mr. GARD. I shall be quite as much interested as the gentleman is.

Mr. BLANTON. If he inspects it with that clear, judicial mind of his, when he comes to make up his conclusions he will be glad that a new Member helped him to get this information.

Mr. GARD. The difference between the gentleman and myself is that I am not explosively premature. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Well, there is something in that. I might tell my good friend a joke on myself in that connection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EMERSON. Tell the joke.

Mr. BLANTON. I was going down to one of the departments not long ago with Senator SHEPPARD, who, in my judgment, is one of the greatest men who legislate in this Capitol to-day.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Turn around, so we can hear you.

Mr. BLANTON. I am talking to my good Democratic friends now. There happened to be a tennis racket in the automobile, and I said to Senator SHEPPARD, "That is one of the greatest games that we have in this country to-day." He said, "Why?" I said, "It teaches you the three great essentials in life." He said, "What are they?" I said, "It teaches you, first, to see quickly and to see correctly, and then it teaches you, second, to think quickly and think correctly, and, thirdly, it teaches you to act quickly and act correctly." The Senator said, "Oh, golf has got it skinned a city block. Golf teaches you the great essential." I said, "What is that, Senator?" He said, "It teaches you how to act deliberately." And that is the joke on me in connection with the statement made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD]. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARD. I commend to the gentleman from Texas the teachings of that ancient and honorable Scotch game. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think the gentleman from Texas has permitted himself to be slightly misled probably by the statement of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] with reference to the "congressional committee." I know of no committee of that kind which performs the work that has been spoken of. The committee that corresponds the nearest to that is one which was indeed authorized by Congress, but one appointed by the President and not a joint congressional committee.

Mr. BLANTON. It is a joint congressional commission, and I want to say that the members of it are my friends, and I consider them so, and I would not say a word to even hurt the feelings of one of them. Two of them have been very kind to me. One of them came to my office and discussed the matter with me. One of them wrote me. The gentleman from Missouri came to my office and discussed it quite at length with me, but could not promise that he could do anything for me in getting my proposed questionnaire submitted. I want to say I have perfect confidence in the great Democratic leader on this side of the House, Mr. CHAMP CLARK. I consider him one of the great men of this country, and I am willing to follow him in his splendid leadership here. I am not casting any aspersions on his appointees, but he is human, the same as everybody else. If he was not human he would not be sitting in this bunch of fellows now. [Laughter and applause.] Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BLANTON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

EMPLOYEES IN THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to discharge the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department from further consideration of House resolution 68.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 68.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, requested to promptly report to the House of Representatives at the earliest date practicable the following facts:

(1) The names of all Government employees in the various branches of the Navy Department who are employed by any person, firm, or corporation, the name of such employer, the hours of service given to such employer, and the amount of compensation received by such employee per month for such outside service.

(2) The names of all employees whose spouse (wife or husband), father, mother, sister or sisters, or brother or brothers, are in the employ of the Government, their names, department of service, hours of service, and amount of compensation per month respectively received by each and all of said relatives.

(3) The amount of annual income, if any, over and above their Government salary, received by the Government employees in said department.

Attention is directed to the form of questionnaire in H. J. Res. 5 as one calculated to elicit the information sought.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to discharge the committee.

The motion to discharge the committee was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment:

On page 1, line 11, after the word "employees," insert the words "in the Navy Department."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 11, after the word "employees," insert the words "in the Navy Department."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, strike out all of section 3, including the lines 1 to 6.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following substitute for the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out section 3 and insert in lieu thereof:

"SEC. 3. That the Clerk of this House do report to the House what Members have their sons or their relatives as clerks, and the ages and accomplishments of said relatives."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I am willing to accept that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The substitute was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the amendment as amended by the substitute.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BLANTON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

EMPLOYEES IN THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice be discharged from further consideration of House resolution 69.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 69.

Resolved, That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, requested to promptly report to the House of Representatives at the earliest date practicable the following facts:

(1) The names of all Government employees in the various branches of the Department of Justice who are employed by any person, firm, or corporation, the name of such employer, the hours of service given to such employer, and the amount of compensation received by such employee per month for such outside service.

(2) The names of all employees whose spouse (wife or husband), father, mother, sister or sisters, or brother or brothers, are in the employ of the Government, their names, department of service, hours of service, and amount of compensation per month, respectively, received by each and all of said relatives.

(3) The amount of annual income, if any, over and above their Government salary, received by the Government employees in said department.

Attention is directed to the form of questionnaire in H. J. Res. 5 as one calculated to elicit the information sought.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas to discharge the committee.

The motion to discharge the committee was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina who offered a substitute amendment a few moments ago, I want to state to that good gentleman that I do not know who is his secretary.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, what is before the House.

The SPEAKER. The resolution to discharge the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice and adopt the resolution.

Mr. BLANTON. I move the previous question on the motion to discharge the committee.

The SPEAKER. That has been agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to say to the gentleman from South Carolina that I do not know who occupies the position of his secretary, but I want him to know, and I want every other man in the House to know, that the man who sits in my office as my secretary and draws $2,000 from this Government came here from Texas in order to accept the position with me in Washington; that he gave up a position of general superintendent of one of the biggest firms in Galveston, Tex.—Clarke & Courts—known from one side of Texas to the other. He gave up a position that paid him $2,400. He had under him over 100 men that he supervised; and that is the kind of talent I am giving to the people of my district on a salary of $2,000 a year as one of the employees of my office.

Mr. STEVENSON. I introduced the resolution in order that all the righteousness might come out at one time. If that disturbs the gentleman from Texas, I regret it, but what I would like to know is how Thomas L. Blanton, jr., occupies the position on the clerks' roll as clerk to THOMAS L. BLANTON, of Texas, as he did last year, and also if he did not have a son on the roll as a page. The gentleman says he does not know who my secretary is, and he says that his secretary gave up a $2,400 position. I will say to the gentleman that my secretary is Eugene Hutchinson, of Rock Hill, S. C., a man 35 years old, whom I have paid $2,400 ever since he has been here. He is a good clerk, and the gentleman will not find in any investigation that I have been dividing the salary with him either.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I was sure of that when he offered the amendment.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I will not yield further now.

Mr. STEVENSON. I did not think so.

Mr. BLANTON. Because we have appropriation bills to consider. Oh, I yield, if the gentleman has anything that he wants to get rid of.

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman stated that he was sure of that when I offered the amendment. I would like to know if the gentleman is merely playing with the House and asking questions by means of resolutions and also asking questions of Members merely for the purpose of hearing himself talk? I am becoming impressed that that is what he is doing. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, if I am playing with the House, I want the gentleman to know that the House is sitting here willing to be played with.

Mr. STEVENSON. The House is suffering a good deal.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman asked me why there appeared upon the roll the name of my son as my secretary. Evidently the gentleman has not been attending the sessions of this House. Evidently the gentleman does not read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, because it was stated upon the floor of this House during the last Congress, when that question was raised by my economic friend from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], and it was put into the RECORD by affidavits, sworn to before a notary public, that the name of my son was placed on that roll in order to control the $2,000 salary, so that I could provide an efficient office force; that from time to time I had had as many as three and four different employees in my office; and I want to state for the benefit of my distinguished friend from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] that ever since this Congress adjourned, when lots of you good friends of mine were off on your vacations, deserved as they were, because we had been working very hard, I spent from 12 to 16 hours in my office almost every day and night since the adjournment of Congress. I have had a day shift and a night shift. [Applause.] And I have paid as high as $100 a month out of my pocket for clerk hire.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I decline to yield, because I want to get through here, so that we may go on with the appropriation bills.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BLANTON. I decline to yield. I move the previous question on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. I will not.

Mr. STEVENSON. What is the name of the gentleman's secretary that he says he has now?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed and to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, have the amendments been incorporated in this resolution? If not, I would like to offer them myself.

The SPEAKER. They have not been.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, that has been overlooked. I ask unanimous consent to consider these amendments.

The SPEAKER. It is too late to offer amendments except by unanimous consent.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the following amendment may be considered as a part of the resolution. On line 11, page 1, after the word "employees," add the words "in the Department of Justice."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that there may be incorporated the amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 11, after the word "employees," insert the words "in the Department of Justice."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that section 3 of the resolution be eliminated.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that section 3 of the resolution be eliminated. Is there objection?

There was no objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I now move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to and to lay that on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

EMPLOYEES IN THE POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Committee on Expenditures in the Post Office Department may be discharged from further consideration of House resolution 70.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves to discharge the Committee on Expenditures in the Post Office Department from further consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 70.

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, requested to promptly report to the House of Representatives at the earliest date practicable the following facts:

(1) The names of all Government employees in the Post Office Department who are employed by any person, firm, or corporation, the name of such employer, the hours of service given to such employer, and the amount of compensation received by such employee per month for such outside service.

(2) The names of all employees whose spouse (wife or husband), father, mother, sister or sisters, or brother or brothers, are in the employ of the Government, their names, department of service, hours of service, and amount of compensation per month respectively received by each and all of said relatives.

(3) The amount of annual income, if any, over and above the salary received by the Government employees in said department.

To direct the attention of said department more fully to the particular information requested, reference is made to the form of questionnaire in H. J. Res. 5.

The SPEAKER. The question is on discharging the committee from further consideration of the resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, on page 1, line 10, by inserting the words "in the Post Office Department" after the word "employees."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 10, after the word "employees," insert the words "in the Post Office Department."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, on page 2, by striking out section 3.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, strike out all of lines 1 to 6, inclusive.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, there was one question asked by my distinguished friend from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON], which inadvertently I did not answer. He is entitled to an answer. He asked me why it was that I had a son who was a page boy in the House of Representatives.

Mr. STEVENSON. Oh, no; I did not ask any such question.

Mr. BLANTON. What did the gentleman ask?

Mr. STEVENSON. I stated that the gentleman had a son who was a page in the House of Representatives last year. I did not ask any question. I also stated that he has a son whose name is now on the roll as his clerk. I did not ask the gentleman any question about it.

Mr. BLANTON. He has a right to have an answer to that inquiry. Under the old custom, the good old Republican custom, which has prevailed here in Washington back to a time when the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, the party in power has the distribution of certain patronage. When I reached here two years ago, a new man from west Texas, I was told that I had a position of page in the House of Representatives at my disposal.

I spoke to my people in my home town shortly afterwards, to a big audience of them, and I said: "People, I have at my disposal in Washington the position of page. It is considered by some men"—possibly by the gentleman from South Carolina—"as an insignificant position, but I consider it an honorable position. I would like for one of your west Texas boys to occupy it. You can not afford to send your boy up there; but if you can and want to do it, I will promise any man here if he will send his boy there I will appoint him page in the House of Representatives; but if you can not send your boy I will consider it an honor for my boy to sit in the House of Representatives at the knee of CHAMP CLARK, of Missouri."

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. And my people——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. In a minute I will yield. I will yield to my good friend——

Mr. BANKHEAD. It really would be in the nature of a parliamentary inquiry, but probably that would not be parliamentary. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Texas is not discussing the resolution.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, in the interest of a semblance of order I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas has the floor.

Mr. BLANTON. I have the floor, and I am going to get through in just about a minute. I told my people——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have a ruling.

The SPEAKER. The Chair really was not listening to the gentleman from Texas, he regrets to say. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Under those circumstances I will not insist on a ruling.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, although the distinguished Speaker was not listening to me, evidently I had the attention of the distinguished gentleman from Alabama. [Laughter.] I told my people that if they did not want me to have my son as a page or their son as a page, there would be enough Republican boys here to act as page, but I preferred to give it to a Democratic boy from west Texas——

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I do.

Mr. CARTER. Did I understand the gentleman to say earlier in his remarks that he told his people that they could not afford to send their boys here to Washington to take the place?

Mr. BLANTON. I said they could not afford to do it. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARTER. That is what I wanted to get in the RECORD.

Mr. BLANTON. I told them——

Mr. CARTER. That is prior to the time you told them you were going to appoint your son. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. The remark of my distinguished friend from Oklahoma is very facetious. It remains the fact I had the express permission of my people, and I want to say now if any good Republican friend of mine will give me his page patronage I will put my little son back here, because I am willing for him to associate with this splendid body of men, even though he does have to look into the countenance of my good friend from Alabama occasionally. [Laughter.] I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw that and offer an amendment. In line 10—no; the amendments have been agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution as amended.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Has the amendment been offered in line 11?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk reports to the Chair that the amendments have been offered and agreed to. The question is on the resolution as amended.

The question was taken, and the resolution as amended was agreed to.

On a motion of Mr. BLANTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

EMPLOYEES IN THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of House resolution 71.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a statement?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield, because we are wasting time. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. I think the gentleman ought to allow the House to have a statement from our committee about this.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not yield; debate is not in order.

Mr. BLANTON. I can not yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to discharge the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce from further consideration of resolution 71, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 71.

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and it is hereby, requested to promptly report to the House of Representatives at the earliest date practicable the following facts:

(1) The names of all Government employees of said department who are employed by any person, firm, or corporation, the name of such employer, the hours of service given to such employer, and the amount of compensation received by such employee per month for such outside service.

(2) The names of all employees whose spouse (wife or husband), father, mother, sister or sisters, or brother or brothers, are in the employ of the Government, their names, department of service, hours of service, and amount of compensation per month, respectively, received by each and all of said relatives.

(3) The amount of annual income, if any, over and above the salary received by the Government employees in said department.

To direct the attention of said department more fully to the particular information requested, reference is made to the form of questionnaire in H. J. Res. 5.

The SPEAKER. The question is on discharging the committee.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, in justice to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I want to say that this committee reported to me this morning that they would like to take this matter up and consider it later on and be willing to give me a hearing on it, but in view of the fact that this resolution is so simple that it can be easily understood by anyone by reading it the first time I do not consider that a hearing is necessary on it, and I would consider it a waste of time to have a hearing on it; and in view of the fact we are passing upon similar resolutions at this time, I do not care to hold this resolution up, and, therefore, I offer the following amendment:

In line 11, page 1, after the word "employees," insert "in the Interstate Commerce Commission."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 11, after the word "employees," insert the words "in the Interstate Commerce Commission."

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire just five minutes to discuss this matter in connection with the lecture which I received a few minutes ago, and lest I might be considered as not speaking strictly to the motion, I will ask permission to proceed either in or out of order for five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. I will agree to the gentleman proceeding in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] asks permission to speak for five minutes, not pertinent to the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I am going to speak anyway in reference to the statement which the gentleman made, in which he misconstrued my position about there being relatives embraced in the employees. The gentleman is calling upon the departments here to require employees to state what relatives they have in any of the departments. Now, those employees are mere clerks, the subject of executive appointment and subject to removal. They are under the power of the heads of the departments and have no power to name a relative that goes into some other department, and, therefore, if there is any blame attached to their relatives being in other departments it can not be laid upon the innocent clerk who is in a department and has a relative somewhere else.

The gentleman says that I seem to be rather inclined to look upon the office of page as insignificant. Oh, no; I do not. I was told that I had one to my credit, but when I tried to get the place I found the son of Mr. BLANTON and the son of everybody else as pages. I had not any son, and I never got the appointment of any page. The point I make is, if it is wrong for a clerk in a department to have a brother or son or an uncle or an aunt in another department or in that particular department, where they are appointed by a responsible head, it is wrong for a man who is connected with the Government and has the power to appoint a subordinate to name his near relative to perform that work. [Applause.] Therefore I asked for this information, and if the gentleman does not like it I can not help it.

I will state also, Mr. Speaker, that at the last session, when my friend was after the clerks up yonder and talking about relatives, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] brought up the question, and he admitted that he had a 14-year-old boy on the roll as his clerk. And he has got him there to-day, and he admitted he got part of the pay.

Mr. BLANTON. I did not admit anything of the kind, and it is not so.

Mr. STEVENSON. The following is from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 14, 1918, page 3507:

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, in the two minutes allotted me I desire to call the attention of the House to the inconsistency of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], who is decrying the very small raise provided by this amendment to the employees of this Government. Mr. BLANTON is being fairly well paid for his services at $7,500 a year. In addition to that he is receiving, as I am informed, more than $700 mileage per session; also $2,000 a year for a son who is a clerk in his office. * * *

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman would not want to make a misstatement.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. What is your clerk's name?

Mr. BLANTON. My son is a clerk, but my son gets very little of that money. Mrs. R. L. Arceneaux is one of my clerks in my office, at $1,200 a year, and from time to time I have had various other employees.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Does not the gentleman think it comes in bad faith for a Member of Congress——

Mr. STEVENSON. I say that from a Member of Congress who by implication reflects on every employee of the Government who has a relative in any other department, it comes with bad grace to employ their own relatives to places subject to their appointment and designation where they may draw money from Uncle Sam.

Now, my friend said that he asked his people from west Texas if they wanted to send a page or if he should put in his own son. I say, whom did he ask? There are a great many people in that district, which is 600 miles long. Did he talk by newspaper advertisement? Did he address a letter to each constituent who has a son, or did he say to one or two if they would not send their sons he would put his son in?

Mr. CARTER. I just wanted to say that I understood the gentleman from Texas to state that he called all of the people in his district in mass meeting and submitted this momentous question to them, and they told him they would not send their boys, and he then asked to send his son.

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] comes here and by implication reflects upon the name of every clerk in the department, because, forsooth, they have a relative of some kind in some other department. I say, Mr. Speaker, it is unworthy of this Congress to make any such implication and then run away from the fact that some of their own clerks are their sons and especially while in the name of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is standing the name of Thomas L. Blanton, jr., on the record of the Clerk of the House down here as his clerk, and, unless I am mistaken, he is only 15 years old.

Mr. BARKLEY. I desire to discuss the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. I understood that the Chair recognized me.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

Mr. BARKLEY. Gentlemen of the House, I sincerely hope that this resolution will not be adopted. On yesterday the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which this resolution was referred seven days ago, took official action to consider it and to invite Mr. BLANTON to come before it and testify with reference to it. Ever since this resolution was introduced and referred to our committee we have been holding hearings every day on the return of the telegraph and telephone wires of this country to their private owners. We have had no opportunity to consider this resolution, and at this particular time this resolution, above all those which have been brought in here, ought to be considered carefully.

Now, the Interstate Commerce Commission is not a political body. All their employees are under the civil service. They do not even control the appointment of their own clerks, except in making selections from the certified list furnished by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. That committee, by the action of the House just taken, has already been discharged, and the gentleman from Kentucky is, therefore, speaking out of order.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am speaking now, Mr. Speaker, on the motion for the adoption of this resolution, and I submit that is not out of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not out of order.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is not a body in the United States that is now busier than the Interstate Commerce Commission, as everybody in this House knows, and if you pass this resolution it will require that commission to appoint additional clerks to investigate, not only the employees in Washington but every employee of the Interstate Commerce Commission everywhere else in the United States, to find out whether they have any relatives, not alone in the employ of the Interstate Commerce Commission, but also in every other branch of the United States Government; and of all resolutions that ought not to be adopted at this time without full consideration of a committee, this one is the most unnecessary and foolish, placing a burden on the Interstate Commerce Commission. Therefore I hope this resolution will not be adopted. [Applause and cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, fortunately there is in the little room yonder evidence of every employee of this House in writing. Whatever clerks I have are set down in writing in a printed book in that little room.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I am speaking on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman is in order.

Mr. BLANTON. I am not going to take up the time of the House on trivial matters. But, Mr. Speaker, I do want to say this, in answer to the gentleman, that I have heard from the time I was a small boy that when you put a coal of fire upon a terrapin's back you are going to get some action. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I decline to yield.

Mr. STEVENSON. All right. I will answer the gentleman later.

Mr. BLANTON. And I expected, Mr. Speaker, when I brought these resolutions in here, in order to get evidence before this House, that personal attacks would be made upon me by Members, but more especially from the other side of the House than this side. [Laughter.]

Mr. KNUTSON. You have been disappointed——

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I am a little disappointed. My coal of fire seems to be burning more Democrats than Republicans. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw that, Mr. Speaker, and offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. An amendment is pending. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 1, line 11, after the word "employees," insert the words "in the Interstate Commerce Commission."

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a word in justice to the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and its members. This resolution, which was sent to the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, was brought up yesterday afternoon by its chairman [Mr. ESCH]. That committee, under the chairmanship of Mr. ESCH, has been as busy as it could be without holding night sessions. We go there at 10 o'clock in the morning and stay there until the House meets, and take a recess and get back at 2 o'clock, and stay there as long as there is anything to do, which is as late as 5 o'clock almost every day.

Now, it has been utterly impossible to consider all that is before the committee, things of the very highest importance, as expeditiously as they ought to be considered and yet justify the name of "consideration." Mr. ESCH brought this matter up before the committee yesterday afternoon, and kindly and courteously, I am satisfied—because that is the kind of a man he is—wrote Mr. BLANTON and asked him to come before the committee and explain the merits of the resolution and explain what he wanted and what facts he had that would justify the committee in making a favorable report on this resolution; and now, before it was possible for the committee to act, the gentleman from Texas moves to discharge the committee, apparently with the idea that it is willfully refusing to do its duty. The rule provides that all these resolutions shall be officially referred to committees, and if this committee is to be discharged from the consideration of this resolution at this time what was the use of referring it to the committee? I have respect for the committee, and I know it is the honest intention and purpose of the committee to hear Mr. BLANTON fully and also hear anybody else who has anything to say with reference to the resolution, and to report it, with or without amendment.

Now, this is the only one of the resolutions that I know anything about. The committee voted unanimously to treat Mr. BLANTON with all courtesy, and yet he comes in here and says the resolution is so simple that it is unnecessary for him to be heard by our committee. It seems to me the House is treating the matter too much in a spirit of levity and fun. What is the use in the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee trying to hear evidence on the resolution, as it ought to be heard, if the House is going to arbitrarily discharge the committee when it had absolutely no time in which to consider it?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out section 3.

Mr MONDELL. No reflection is involved to the effect that any committee of the House has not endeavored to take action. Under the rules the resolution is privileged after seven days. The committee could have acted without hearings if desired. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has the right to call his resolution up, and it is not necessarily a reflection on the committee when he does so.

Mr. SIMS. I admit that he is within his parliamentary rights. I did not mean that he was personally doing anything wrong. But what do we know about the merits of this resolution? There may be justification for this resolution, but I do think that the House ought not to discharge the committee from the consideration of the resolution when the committee is doing everything it can to consider it in a proper way. I think this kind of action will get us nowhere, and bring confusion and troubles to the House.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I should like to suggest also that the committee took occasion to inquire of the Interstate Commerce Commission what it would cost to get this information that this resolution calls for, and that we have had no opportunity to get a reply from them.

Mr. SIMS. Certainly. We are trying to investigate it on its merits, and to treat the House as it ought to be treated, and to help the gentleman, as far as we can, to ascertain whether there is anything in it justifying the adoption of such a resolution. I think this resolution ought to be voted down, not on the ground that there may not be merit in it, but on the ground that we do not know whether there is or not, that it is a dragnet which may run the Government and the commission into an expenditure of many thousands of dollars, and tie up this commission, by investigating facts as to who has kinfolks in that department or who is receiving some compensation on the outside.

Mr. REAVIS. The resolution calls for kinfolk in any Government department.

Mr. SIMS. That is all right, but nobody can tell how much expense it is going to involve, and before reporting this resolution we were trying to find out about how much expense there will be in getting the replies to this particular resolution according to its terms. It seems to me we ought to have time to do it, because this resolution is not a war emergency or any other kind of an emergency measure. While the gentleman is thoroughly within his parliamentary rights, I think the House ought not to accept the responsibility of acting on this kind of a matter without any information whatever when information is available and can be secured that will be a real guidance for the action of the Members of the House.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. I move that section 3, on page 2, be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. There is an amendment already pending, the amendment in line 11, page 1. The question will first be taken on that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. I move that, on page 2, section 3 be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, strike out all of lines 1 to 6, inclusive.

Mr. BLANTON. I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The amendment must first be voted upon.

Mr. BLANTON. All right.

Mr. STEVENSON. I desire to discuss this amendment for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina——

Mr. MONDELL. Did not the gentleman from Texas move the previous question?

The SPEAKER. He withdrew it.

Mr. BLANTON. No; I did not withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman move the previous question?

Mr. BLANTON. I do.

The SPEAKER. The Chair misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. STEVENSON. The stenographic report will show that the gentleman moved the previous question on the adoption of the resolution. That question is not before the House yet, and I do not think it is proper to shut off discussion here in an arbitrary way.

Mr. BLANTON. I have no disposition to shut the gentleman off.

Mr. STEVENSON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am going to close all I have to say about the little lectures I have received from the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. He closed with a very witty remark awhile ago that "when you put a coal on a terrapin's back you always see him move." Now, Mr. Speaker, he evidently referred to me. [Laughter.] Now, I have not voted against his resolution. I am the man who brought the coal in here, and this is the terrapin on whose back it got. [Indicating Mr. BLANTON]. The measure was passed, and up to that time the temperature of the gentleman was about the same as that of the ice water in this House, and in two or three minutes it was as hot as the branch water that we get over in the House Office Building, and he began to reply to me after he had accepted the amendment, after it had been adopted, and after we had passed another resolution. It struck him that that thing was beginning to burn him a little. It took about the right length of time for the coal to begin to heat through the shell of a terrapin, and he is the terrapin, and he is the one that got burned. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. STEVENSON. Wait a minute, Mr. Speaker. As this thing goes along, history grows. The gentleman is apparently denouncing clerks for having kinsfolk in the service of the Government, and since we discussed the fact that at the last session the gentleman was the father of a page in this House, and that he was and still is the father of a clerk in the shape of a 14-year-old boy, it comes out that, bless your soul, he had a clerk in the post office at the same time. Why, Mr. Speaker, he was getting to be a monopoly. He was violating the Sherman Act, and he ought to have been dissolved by an order of the Supreme Court. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, in final reply to the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina, I want to say that if there are any pernicious practices carried on in the House of Representatives I want the people of South Carolina to determine who is most responsible, their Representative who has been here for years and years or a new man from Texas who has been here only one term.

Mr. STEVENSON. If you want to submit that to the people of South Carolina, they will give you an answer very quickly, but I am not going to call a meeting to determine whether I shall have a page in the House or not. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on my amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to strike out section 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The question being taken on ordering the previous question, on a division (demanded by Mr. SIMS and Mr. BARKLEY) there were—ayes 112, noes 2.

Accordingly the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Division, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, upon that question I demand the yeas and nays. Then maybe they will quit monkeying with it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused, seven Members, not a sufficient number, seconding the demand.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 106, noes 55.

Accordingly the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BLANTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

EMPLOYEES OF THE UNITED STATES RAILROAD ADMINISTRATION.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of House resolution 72.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 72.

Resolved, That the Director General of the United States Railroad Administration be, and he is hereby, requested to promptly report to the House of Representatives at the earliest date practicable the following facts:

(1) The names of all Government employees in the various branches of the United States Railroad Administration who are employed by any person, firm, or corporation, the name of such employer, the hours of service given to such employer, and the amount of compensation received by such employee per month for such outside service.

(2) The names of all employees whose spouse (wife or husband), father, mother, sister or sisters, or brother or brothers, are in the employ of the Government, their names, department of service, hours of service, and amount of compensation per month, respectively, received by each and all of said relatives.

(3) The amount of annual income, if any, over and above their Government salary received by the Government employees in said department.

Attention is directed to the form of questionnaire in H. J. Res. 5 as one calculated to illicit the information sought.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. There is no debate on the motion. The question is on the motion to discharge the committee.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 73, noes 49.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 11, after the word "employees," insert "in the official offices of the United States Railroad Administration."

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. What does the gentleman mean by "official offices"?

Mr. BLANTON. As distinguished from traffic employees.

Mr. SIMS. They have got "official offices" all over the United States, with officers that used to be in charge of the railroad as managed by private corporations. Every letterhead announces that it is the United States Railroad Administration. There will be an immense amount of trouble and expense incurred under such a resolution as this.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, strike out section 3.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the passage of the resolution as amended.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point that no quorum is present, and evidently there is no quorum here.

Mr. SIMS. Was the question being taken on the previous question or on the passage of the resolution?

Mr. BLANTON. Let me say to the gentleman——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the Chair having announced that there is no quorum here, are not gentlemen out of order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri is correct.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas made the point of no quorum and the call of the House follows automatically.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, the Chair had declared the motion for the previous question carried and started to announce that the question was on the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman is mistaken. The Chair said that the previous question was carried——

Mr. WINGO. And the Chair had started to make the statement that the question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman from Texas had risen in time to make the point of no quorum and that that was in order. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the previous question will say "aye" and those opposed will answer "no."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 311, nays 8, answered "present" 3, not voting 107, as follows:

Mr. STEVENSON with Mr. VENABLE.
Mr. TEMPLE with Mr. STEAGALL.
Mr. VOIGT with Mr. WISE.
Mr. TILSON with Mr. SULLIVAN.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, I have a general pair with Mr. MCFADDEN. I voted yea. I desire to withdraw that and answer "present."

The name of Mr. DEWALT was called, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to prefer a request for unanimous consent. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT], the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS], and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] have convinced me that this Railroad Administration resolution should have a hearing before their committee. Having been convinced by them on that point, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to withdraw the resolution from the consideration of the House and that the motion whereby the committee was discharged from further consideration be vacated, so that the resolution may be sent to that committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that all proceedings had up to this time on the resolution be vacated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EMPLOYEES IN THE CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to discharge the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service from further consideration of H. Res. 73, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 73.

Resolved, That the Civil Service Commission be, and it is hereby, requested to promptly report to the House of Representatives at the earliest date practicable the following facts:

(1) The names of all Government employees of said department who are employed by any person, firm, or corporation, the name of such employer, the hours of service given to such employer, and the amount of compensation received by such employee per month for such outside service.

(2) The names of all employees whose spouse (wife or husband), father, mother, sister or sisters, brother or brothers, are in the employ of the Government, their names, department of service, hours of service, and amount of compensation per month, respectively, received by each and all of said relatives.

(3) The amount of annual income, if any, over and above the salary received by the Government employees in said department.

To direct the attention of said department more fully to the particular information requested, reference is made to the form of questionnaire in H. J. Res. 5.

The SPEAKER. The question is on discharging the committee from further consideration of the resolution.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RUCKER. I desire to discuss the resolution.

The SPEAKER. This is a motion to discharge the committee. No debate is in order under the rules. The question is on discharging the committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, on page 1, line 11, by inserting after the word "employees" the words "in the Civil Service Commission."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, after the word "employees," by inserting the words "in the Civil Service Commission."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I think I owe it to my good friend the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON], and to the rest of my colleagues, to take enough time to read to you the following statement:

WASHINGTON, D. C.

I, Mrs. C. S. Benton, upon oath state: I am secretary to Congressman BLANTON, in whose employ I have been for two years. Until my marriage to Maj. C. S. Benton, on March 12, 1919, my name was Mrs. Ruby Louis Arceneaux. Prior to March 1, 1919, I have worked quite a great deal at night in various Government departments, working from three to five hours per night, making from $25 to $30 a week for such night work, though I made as much as $9 one night. While in the index card section of the War Risk Bureau, in the Elks' Hall on H Street NW., under Mr. Lawrence Gilnagh as chief, I received a check for $79.79 for two weeks, working those two weeks, however, from 5 p. m. to 11.30 p. m. I also worked at 119 D Street, in the old Southern Building, in various sections of the War Risk Bureau. I know a number of Government employees who do such extra work at night in order to take advantage of the good compensation paid.

(Signed) Mrs. C. S. BENTON.

Sworn to and subscribed before me, the undersigned authority, on this the 26th day of March, A. D. 1919.

W. W. PICKERING,
Notary Public, District of Columbia.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I can not yield, because I do not want to waste any further time. I move the previous question on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RUCKER) there were—ayes 92, noes 41.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, on page 2, by striking out all of section 3, and upon that I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, strike out all of lines 1 to 6, inclusive.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the previous question on the amendment.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I want to oppose the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, is there no way by which a Member of the House can be heard except the gentleman from Texas to oppose this amendment or any of them?

The SPEAKER. Any Member can be heard if the previous question is not ordered, but the previous question is not debatable. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for not to exceed five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. CRAMTON. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would like to inquire of the Speaker whether or not it is the policy to be pursued in this House that a man should try on half a dozen different occasions to oppose a resolution but can not get recognition?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, that is not a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BLANTON. Speaker CLARK decided that in the closing hours of the last Congress.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I submit that it is a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman makes a motion to amend his resolution. We demand recognition to oppose the resolution, but the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] to move the previous question and gives no other Member an opportunity to get recognition to oppose the resolution.

Mr. WALSH. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend. The Chair will state the rule. As Members are well aware, the rule is that a Member in charge of a bill or resolution is always entitled to recognition to move the previous question. If the House adopts the previous question, of course, no one else is allowed to debate it; and the Chair is following the universal practice to always recognize the gentleman in charge of a bill to move the previous question.

Mr. BLANTON. And, Mr. Speaker, I asked recognition for that purpose.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CRISP. I would like to call the attention of the Speaker to this proposition; I am not familiar with the conditions here. The Speaker stated the proposition exactly, except where the previous question is ordered on a motion where there has been no debate there are 20 minutes' debate on each side.

The SPEAKER. But complaint has been made that the gentleman from Texas had debated the question.

Mr. CRISP. Of course, the Chair is absolutely correct, then——

Mr. BLANTON. And I was asking for recognition.

The SPEAKER. Exactly; and the Chair feels compelled to recognize the gentleman in charge of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. No one is entitled to speak. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CARTER. Debate can be had on this resolution, can it not, if the gentleman from Texas will not insist on the previous question?

The SPEAKER. It could have been, but it is too late now.

Mr. CARTER. I mean when the motion was made.

The SPEAKER. The House has ordered the previous question.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLACK. I think the Chair stated in error when he says we had adopted the previous question on this particular resolution, because we have not.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk so informs the Chair.

Mr. BLACK. I think the Members will agree we have not.

Mr. WALSH. It was adopted.

The SPEAKER. The House has ordered the previous question. The question is on the adoption of the resolution as amended.

The question was taken, and the resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RUCKER. Does the Chair think it will do me any good for me to ask for a division?

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

On motion of Mr. BLANTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

EMPLOYEES IN THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department be discharged from further consideration of House resolution 74, and upon that I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves that the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department be discharged from further consideration of the resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 74.

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested to promptly report to the House of Representatives at the earliest date practicable the following facts:

(1) The names of all Government employees in the various branches of the War Department who are employed by any person, firm, or corporation, the name of such employer, the hours of service given to such employer, and the amount of compensation received by such employee per month for such outside service.

(2) The names of all employees whose spouse (wife or husband), father, mother, sister or sisters, or brother or brothers are in the employ of the Government, their names, department of service, hours of service, and amount of compensation per month respectively received by each and all of said relatives.

(3) The amount of annual income, if any, over and above their Government salary, received by the Government employees in said department.

Attention is directed to the form of questionnaire in House joint resolution 5 as one calculated to elicit the information sought.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. No debate is in order.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT. On yesterday the House passed a resolution providing for a special committee, and in that resolution there was conferred upon that committee to be appointed all the jurisdiction which under the general rules of the House belongs to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department. Now, my inquiry is, Is this resolution, in view of the action taken by the House yesterday, now privileged, or could it be without being before that new committee, upon which these functions have been conferred by action of the House, for seven days?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not recall the exact language, but the Chair's recollection is that the special committee was given the powers of the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department. The Chair's recollection of the language would be that it did not supplant the Committee on Expenditures but that it gave them the same jurisdiction, and if the gentleman wishes to look up the matter, can he refer to it——

Mr. GARRETT. I think I can find it here in the RECORD. The question, I will say to the Chair, I think is somewhat important to be considered at this time. The language is on page 640 of the RECORD. The resolution will be found there.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the impression that does not mean to supersede the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department. It simply confers on that new committee such additional powers. The Chair would rule that the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department was still in existence.

Mr. GARRETT. The thought that was in my mind, and I am only submitting this because——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT. Because of its possible importance in other matters. I think it probable that the committee was superseded. Certainly its character was to some extent changed; if not its jurisdiction, certainly its personnel. The resolution which was passed, of course, does not say where the personnel of that committee is to come from. That is within the discretion of the Speaker. Of course, it seems to be generally understood that gentlemen who are now members of the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department will become members of this special committee, but that is a matter with the Chair wholly. Now, there is in fact created here a new special committee, and upon that committee there is conferred all of the powers, all of the authority, and all of the jurisdiction that has up until now been exercised by this standing committee of the House.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARRETT. I will.

Mr. TOWNER. Does not the gentleman think that the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, after having acquired jurisdiction, could not have it taken away from them by the subsequent appointment of a committee, even if it included the jurisdiction of the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department?

Mr. GARRETT. Well, no; I do not think so. I think if, by the action of the House, the character of a committee is changed and the jurisdiction of it is changed—I mean changed to another committee—if that, in fact, has been done, if this resolution be construed to mean that, the reasoning of the gentleman from Iowa would not apply.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think the Chair is entirely correct in his view that the appointment of the select committee in no wise affected the status or the jurisdiction of the existing committee. Two committees exist; but whether that be true or not can not affect the matter now before the House. This resolution was properly referred to the regular standing committee, and the motion is to discharge that committee. Therefore it matters not what the effect of the later action of the House relative to the appointment of a new select committee may be. A motion to discharge the committee to which this resolution was referred, and properly referred, is in order.

Mr. GARRETT. Provided it was before the committee seven days, which this has been; and, I insist, provided further, that the jurisdiction has not been taken away from that standing committee by action of the House within the seven days.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman would not suggest there was anything in the resolution adopted by the House that took from the regular standing committee its jurisdiction. But whether that be true or not, this resolution was referred to that committee, and if it is now the desire of the House to have that committee discharged for any purpose, either for the purpose of passing the resolution or re-referring it, this motion is in order.

Mr. GARRETT. If the Chair will bear with me just a moment, here is where I think important questions may arise in the future. Will this special committee have all the jurisdiction that under the general rules of the House is conferred upon the Committee on Expenditures? For instance, upon matters other than the investigation which this committee is to make, upon whatever resolutions or bills will be referred to this committee, will they go to the seven Members who constitute the present standing committee of the House, and will the jurisdiction of matters other than this investigation be confined to those seven members, or will that whole committee of 15 have the jurisdiction which heretofore has been exercised by the standing committee?

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. . Will not this be the situation, that matters referred by the Speaker to the select committee will come under the jurisdiction of the select committee, but, on the other hand, a reference to the standing committee would bring the matter under the jurisdiction of the standing committee? I doubt nòt that the Speaker will have that in mind when matters are referred by him.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the question of order raised by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] can readily be settled. The resolution of yesterday requires the Speaker to appoint a committee which, among other things, shall have the powers of the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department. The Chair has not yet appointed such a committee, and therefore it seems to the Chair it is impossible to say that now, before the appointment of such a committee, the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department has been abolished. Therefore it seems clear that a motion to discharge the committee is in order. After the new committee is appointed the Chair will give consideration to the point raised by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I understand the motion to discharge the committee has already been adopted.

The SPEAKER. The motion to discharge the committee has not yet been put. The question is on discharging the committee.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, without further yielding the floor, I wish to say that I never have believed in gagging anybody, and I think I owe it to the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] to yield to him to be heard in opposition to this resolution. Therefore I yield such time as he may want, otherwise reserving the floor. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. RUCKER. Ten minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] embarrassed me somewhat when he offered to yield me time. I told him frankly I did not want to accept time from him because I was opposed to his resolution. And he embarrasses me in the speech he just made, in which he disclaims a purpose to gag the membership of the House. The gentleman flatters himself—he can not gag the House except for a brief season, and he can only do that with the aid of Republican Members. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He makes the Republican side act very much like a jumping-jack, and the performance is very ridiculous in the eyes of the world.

What is the proposition? To discharge a committee. What committee? A committee appointed by the present Speaker of this House—a Republican committee—not divided exactly as badly as the one the Chair is going to appoint, not 2 to 1, but to all practical purposes it is just as bad.

Mr. FLOOD. It is 2 to 5.

Mr. RUCKER. That is worse than the other. The effort is to discharge a Republican committee of the House from the consideration of a resolution regularly referred to that committee by a Republican Speaker, and yet you Republicans, when a division is demanded, in order to secure time and opportunity to debate the pending resolution, every one of you stands up here at the behests of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] as if you were proud of your new leadership. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Every one of you votes to do what? To discharge your own committee, appointed by your own Speaker, and to discharge it without debate or consideration. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Oh, gentlemen, your conduct is flimsy and hypocritical. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is playing into your hands, and you think you will gain some political advantage. Nobody objects to the inquiry proposed, but we do object to this spectacular performance put on the stage by the gentleman from Texas, which can result in no good but which will require the useless expenditure of a large sum of money. You Republicans have demonstrated that you will vote to help any turbulent Democrat do a turbulent and foolish thing. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

What is it? Why, the State Department, the War Department, the Interior Department, the Post Office Department, and every other department of the Government, in order to satisfy the inquiries, the inquisitiveness and curiosity of the gentleman from Texas, must investigate, tell the world how many of those antiquated people down there in the Treasury Department or in the Interior Department or in the War Department how many of those old superannuated ladies and gentlemen have nieces or nephews or cousins or uncles or aunts in these or some other department of the Government. How are you going to get it? Get it from the files? The Lord knows the Government has not room enough in its archives to hold all the files that have been piling up since this abominable practice of civil service—and I want it understood that I mean what I say—since this fraudulent device called civil service was fostered upon the people, and hence you will have to get the information by personal inquiry, if you get it at all. There are some 110,000 or 115,000 clerks in the various departments in Washington.

And the gentleman from Texas asks that a personal inquiry be presented to each and every clerk to ascertain whether he has a brother or a sister or an aunt or a cousin or a stepfather or a stepsister or a stepmother or a stepbrother or some one else of a remote degree of relationship to him somewhere in the Government service; after you get that information what are you going to do about it? The worst condition that can possibly be revealed will not provoke a worse criticism or one more embarrassing and humiliating than the admissions which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has made in this debate. [Applause.]

Oh, you gentlemen talk about economy. You are the most valiant set of economists the world has ever known. You are rabid in your enthusiastic desire for economy. We had an exhibition of Republican economy yesterday and have had for several days while the Agricultural appropriation bill—one of the greatest bills ever considered by this House—was under consideration, when the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] and other good Republicans, exemplars of governmental economy, stood up here and howled and whooped and stormed about the reckless extravagance that had been practiced in the framing of the Agricultural appropriation bill, and denounced the bill. [Laughter.]

That distinguished and flowery orator and statesman from the State of Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], who seldom ever addresses the House, said the bill was the offspring of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER]. Well, if the gentleman from South Carolina is the sire of that bill and the Republican membership is its dam, I am somewhat suspicious of it, although it looks good to me. [Laughter.] But what about the Agricultural appropriation bill? You Republicans confess that you reported the bill of the gentleman from South Carolina bodily, with only two or three amendments, and what are the amendments? Some great change in policy? No. Following the lead of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], as you ought to do if you want to serve your country at all, following the course he has established for you to pursue during the brief term of Republican control in the House, you adopted his bill literally, and the only change you reformers and economists made in its was to increase the amounts appropriated in two or three paragraphs, and yet you have the nerve to talk about economy. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes, with pleasure.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman complain about that?

Mr. RUCKER. No.

Mr. MADDEN. If he does, we will fix it on the next bill so that he can not complain.

Mr. RUCKER. I am making no complaint—I am not in the least surprised, but I am discussing insincerity, and I do not care whether it applies to Illinois or to Texas; if you were sincere, how comes it that every one of you Republicans voted for the Agricultural appropriation bill which so many of you denounced in debate? Your delay of it cost the Government of the United States nearly the amount the bill carries. [Laughter.] I am speaking extravagantly on that perhaps, but a man is liable to become extravagant when he looks into the faces of these distinguished men and great economists on the Republican side of the House and reflects that we must endure them for two long years. [Laughter.] I well remember on my first entry into this House at this session what awe and wonder came over me when I looked over that side of the House and saw all those strange people and missed so many familiar faces of good men on this side. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, personally I like those gentlemen over there very well as individuals, but I object to the number of them. [Laughter.] I would have more confidence in the wisdom of our legislation and be happier if we could subtract about 50 from the Republican side of the House. [Laughter.] The trouble is you have too much power to do wrong, and you exercise it too frequently. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman has referred to a bill. What bill had he reference to?

Mr. RUCKER. The Lever bill, the Agricultural appropriation bill, that you took over from him.

Mr. HAUGEN. Let me say to the gentleman, for his information, that the bill as it passed the House carried nearly $5,000,000 less than the amount carried by it when reported by the Democratic Senate.

Mr. RUCKER. Oh, no good man will hold the House responsible for the action of the Senate. Do not tell me about what the Senate did! How much will the Senate add to the Lever bill, which you accepted and approved and asked the House to adopt last week? [Laughter.]

Gentlemen, I hope the time will come when men everywhere and of every political party will have the courage of their convictions and learn that even yet consistency is a jewel. You Republicans vote to discharge all these committees, and they are of your own creation. Why? What does it mean? Another $100,000 in all probability will be expended in order to ascertain how many cousins and brothers-in-law and sisters-in-law and husbands and wives and uncles and aunts are employed in the Treasury Department, and when you get it what will you do with it? What earthly value will the information be to Congress or to the country? The law permits at least two of a family to hold civil-service positions.

The gentleman from Texas says the joint legislative committee that was recently appointed, Mr. Speaker, by your predecessor, under a law passed by Congress, will not make a report, or if it makes a report there will be nothing in it. Oh, the gentleman's wisdom is perhaps extensive, he is the embodiment of much that is good and all that is bad in Texas [laughter], and he seriously fears the committee may not report everything demanded by his peculiar tastes and notions, his conception of ethics in public affairs, and his ideas of administrating governmental functions.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RUCKER. I have not the time. The gentleman from Texas will demand the previous question within the hour.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Just a question.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. RUCKER. Oh, Mr. Speaker!

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, how much time would the gentleman like?

Mr. RUCKER. Ten minutes more.

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman 10 minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for 10 minutes more.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Now, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Does the gentleman think that the gentleman from Texas does not have the conviction of his own opinions?

Mr. RUCKER. "Does he not have the conviction of his own opinions?" [Laughter.] The gentleman propounds a conundrum, and I am not good at solving conundrums, therefore I can not answer it. I would respectfully refer the gentleman from Nebraska to my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], who perhaps can answer him. I confess I can not answer the inquiry submitted, and as my time is short I hope I will not be interrupted with requests to solve any more Chinese puzzles. [Laughter.]

The gentleman says that the joint committee appointed by the Speaker, composed of three distinguished ex-Members of the House, will not perform its duty. I do not know exactly what accusation the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] made against that commission, because I was not in the room, but I understand he paid his respects to that commission this morning, and that the burden of his song was that that great joint committee—composed of men who certainly are his equals in intellectual attainments, in fidelity to duty, and in integrity of character—had failed or refused to accept and adopt his peculiar method of preparing a questionnaire. Oh, he tells the House, and told it yesterday and the day before, that he had appealed to that commission to insert in the questionnaire a certain question designed to secure information as to what other employments, if any, Government clerks are engaged in, and the commission refused to do it. The gentleman charged that, as I am informed.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman admits my statement is true, and I charge that a half truth is often worse than a falsehood, because it generally suppresses and conceals facts which ought to be stated in order that the exact truth may be known.

The gentleman knows that the letters he wrote to members of that commission were written three days after every questionnaire had been printed, and that his letter reached the commission on the same day that those printed questionnaires were actually placed in the hands of more than 100,000 clerks in the employ of the Government.

Mr. BLANTON. No; I do not know anything of the kind.

Mr. RUCKER. Well, then, I will tell you something else that you do not know. "There are more things in Heaven and earth, Horatio, than are dreamt of in your philosophy." [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Sure.

Mr. RUCKER. Let me say to you that the poet correctly described the conduct of some people—I am not going to point out any particular man on that side or this—when he wrote:

> With smooth dissimulation, skilled to grace
> A devil's purpose with an angel's face.

And then another great author dealing with the same sort of a man says:

> And thus I clothe my naked villany
> With old odd ends stolen out of holy writ,
> And seem a saint when most I play the devil.

If that fits anybody here let him wear it. It seems to me so unjustifiable and absurd for one claiming to be a Democrat to raise all this fury and commotion here for the amusement and gratification of the majority party. No one of them would aid or encourage the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] if he did not hope to derive some political advantage from this unseemly and unwise performance.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. For just one question.

Mr. RUCKER. Yes; I gladly yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Did the gentleman expect anybody on that side would weed out of this Government any graft or corruption? It has to come from a Democrat if it is to be done at all.

Mr. RUCKER. I think you are right in that, but they are helping you and I am afraid you do not know what the devil you are doing. Whatever you are trying to do they are all helping you, every mother's son of them. [Laughter.] And as every one of the Republican Members is opposed, according to your own testimony, to any exposure of graft, I think they must be after something else, and you do not seem to know it. You are making political capital for them, and they have sense enough to know it, though you do not seem to know it. I repeat that the vicious tirades of the gentleman from Texas against that commission are unbecoming and unwarranted. Those gentlemen deserve no criticism at the hands of Members of the House. They are performing a great duty, and if this House permits them to finish the work which they are doing they will make a report that will at least be gratifying to Congress and to a hundred million people in this Nation, whether the gentleman from Texas is satisfied or not. Let me tell you it is a big task. There are over 110,000 employees in the Government service under the jurisdiction of that committee. The work can not be done in a minute; but I have reason to believe that conditions have been discovered, and will ultimately be revealed, which will surprise this House and excite deep interest throughout the country. And let me tell you in confidence you gentlemen on the Republican side are responsible for that condition.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we had some discussion here a day or so ago about—what do you call that roller thing?

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Steam roller.

Mr. RUCKER. Of course, you gentlemen on the Republican side know what it is because you are familiar with it. If ever I want to get a correct definition or name of any of these modern engines in politics which make men lose their manhood and their individuality, I always go over to the Republican side and there get accurate information, because you know what these things are. But we have heard something about that, and now the steam roller is to do something here that the gentleman from Texas advocates. If the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], recognized as a leader and as one in authority, or if the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the chosen leader of our side of this House, offers a proposition here, you gentlemen become agitated and call for quorums and for divisions and roll calls and raise thunder about it; but when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] asks you to engage in a piece of folly which he hopes will embarrass somebody in administration circles and enable him to return to Congress then you Republicans all vote for it.

Now, I refer again to the steam-roller business which in a few moments will be resorted to. A dozen Democrats have sought to get the floor and, under the rules of the House as construed—and I assume correctly construed by the Speaker—nobody can be heard unless by the grace of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] we are permitted to take the floor. See how ungracious a position it puts me in. I have permission to speak here this evening, not by right of my membership in this House, not because the sovereign people of the greatest Democratic district in America sent me here [laughter]—do not laugh at that for it is true—but because the gentleman allows me to speak. Yes; I am indebted to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] and must doff my hat to him for the poor privilege of standing here and indulging in these desultory remarks.

Mr. HARDY. They will vote for the previous question, and then you do not have any rights.

Mr. RUCKER. Oh, yes; they will vote for the previous question and deny Members an opportunity to speak. They do not want to hear the pending resolution discussed.

Mr. Speaker, I discover my time is up. I thank the gentleman from Texas for the privilege of occupying the floor a few moments.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that on page 1, in the first line of the second section, after the word "employees," the words "in the War Department" be inserted; and also the following amendment, that, on page 2, section 3 be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not offer two amendments at the same time.

Mr. BLANTON. I thought maybe there would be no objection to it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 1, line 5, after the word "employees" insert "in the War Department."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out section 3, on page 2.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 2, strike out section 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. GARNER. And on that, Mr. Speaker, I call for the yeas and nays. I want to know who it is that wants to spend this hundred thousand dollars or more on these resolutions.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 181, nays 109, answered "present" 1 not voting 138, as follows:

Mr. STRONG with Mr. SMITHWICK.

Mr. TREADWAY with Mr. WHALEY.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania with Mr. RIORDAN.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I wish to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the House and listening when his name should have been called?

Mr. KING. On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, instead of being present and listening, I was at my office working.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not qualify.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, I can not qualify, but I want to know if I can answer "present."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, I have a general pair with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. MCFADDEN. I voted "no," and I wish to withraw that vote and answer "present."

The name of Mr. DEWALT was called, and he answered "Present," as above recorded.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. BLANTON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

EMPLOYEES IN THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department be discharged from further consideration of House resolution 75, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 75.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to promptly report to the House of Representatives, at the earliest date practicable, the following facts:

(1) The names of all Government employees in the various branches of the Treasury Department who are employed by any person, firm, or corporation, the name of such employer, the hours of service given to such employer, and the amount of compensation received by such employee per month for such outside service.

(2) The names of all employees whose spouse (wife or husband), father, mother, sister or sisters, or brother or brothers are in the employ of the Government, their names, department of service, hours of service, and amount of compensation per month, respectively, received by each and all of said relatives.

(3) The amount of annual income, if any, over and above their Government salary, received by the Government employees in said department.

Attention is directed to the form of questionnaire in H. J. Res. 5 as one calculated to elicit the information sought.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas to discharge the committee from further consideration of the resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend on page 1, line 11, by inserting after the word "employees" the words "in the Treasury Department," and on page 2 by striking out section 3.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BLANTON: Page 1, line 11, after the word "employees" insert "in the Treasury Department," and, on page 2, strike out section 3.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I think this amendment is a good one and needs no further argument. Therefore I move the previous question on the amendment.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLACK. Is it not in order to divide this amendment and offer a substitute for it?

The SPEAKER. It is in order to separate the amendment. It is in order to offer a substitute unless the previous question is ordered.

Mr. BLANTON. I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would be in order to offer a substitute unless the previous question is ordered.

Mr. BLACK. I have a substitute that I want to offer.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas has moved the previous question.

The SPEAKER. But parliamentary inquiries are being made.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it the gentleman has offered one amendment to line 11 and on that has moved the previous question.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands it the gentleman offered one amendment, which embraced two sections, and on that amendment the previous question is demanded.

Mr. WINGO. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order on the amendment.

The SPEAKER. What is the point of order?

Mr. WINGO. It goes to two different sections in one amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows of no rule that forbids that.

Mr. WINGO. Considering one section at a time or considering the whole thing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will excuse the Chair, but perhaps he did not understand.

Mr. WINGO. I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. Oh, certainly; any gentleman can ask for a division of the amendment.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I want to propound this parliamentary inquiry: Do I not have the right to offer a substitute to the first part of his amendment?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right unless the previous question is ordered.

Mr. BLACK. I offer that substitute.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, may I interrupt the Chair?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. Does the Chair hold that if the previous question is ordered on the resolution and amendments a substitute for the amendment can not be offered?

The SPEAKER. Yes; the Chair would hold that. The question is on ordering the previous question.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division on the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks for a division on the previous question.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 79, noes 71.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. RUCKER. For a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Louisiana make the point of order that there is no quorum present?

Mr. ASWELL. I withdraw it for a moment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. RUCKER. I respectfully ask if it will be in order to move to remove the gentleman from Wyoming and put the gentleman from Texas in as a majority leader.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that is a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, the gentleman would make a good one.

Mr. RUCKER. I think there is where he ought to be; he ought to be on that side.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution as amended.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I want to offer a motion to recommit.

Mr. BLANTON. Recommit where?

Mr. BLACK. To the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department. I offer the following motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will first state that the question was taken and the previous question was ordered.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. I make the point of order that the committee being discharged from the consideration of the resolution the motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think the point of order holds.

Mr. BLACK. I make the motion to recommit, and the motion is to recommit the bill to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, with instructions to strike out section 2 of the bill, and report forthwith.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers the motion to recommit, which the Clerk will report. The Chair neglected to ask the gentleman if he is opposed to the resolution?

Mr. BLACK. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BLACK moves to recommit the resolution to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, with instructions to strike out section 2 of the resolution, and report forthwith.

Mr. BLACK. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to discuss the question.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, no; the previous question has been ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not the floor; the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. BLACK. Not on the motion to recommit.

Mr. GARNER. No; the previous question has not been ordered on this motion to recommit; it is on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct, but the Chair's recollection is that the previous question is not necessary on a motion to recommit except to prevent amendment and that debate is not permissible.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I can cite the Chair to an instance——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be glad to have the gentleman do so.

Mr. GARRETT. In which a motion to recommit was made and there was debate, at least I think I can.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is perfectly willing——

Mr. GARRETT. No; the matter my friend here has in mind is not that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the previous question prevents debate. The object of the previous question on a motion to recommit is to prevent amendments. The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. RUCKER. Is it in order to ask unanimous consent to give the gentleman from Texas five minutes to discuss it? I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. I object to that; ordinarily I would not object.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the Chair was in doubt.

The question was again taken; and there were—ayes 70, noes 103.

Mr. BLACK. On that I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Clearly there is no quorum present. The Sergeant at Arms will summon absent Members, the Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. MAPES. Is it too late to make the point of order that a motion to recommit on a simple resolution is not in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is too late, the vote having been taken.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 116, nays 162, answered "present" 2, not voting 149, as follows:

So the motion to recommit was rejected:

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. BROWNING with Mr. EAGLE.

Mr. COOPER with Mr. GANDY.

Mr. FESS with Mr. HEFLIN.

Mr. FREAR with Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina.

Mr. MERRITT with Mr. LAZARO.

Mr. WARD with Mr. RUBEY.

Mr. KRAUS with Mr. SEARS.

Mr. HAUGEN with Mr. LEVER.

For balance of day:

Mr. LANGLEY with Mr. LEE of Georgia.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, I voted "yea," but I have a general pair with Mr. MCFADDEN, and I now desire to withdraw the vote of "yea" and answer "present."

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the passage of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has already been ordered. The question now is on the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of House resolution 76, and upon that I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 76.

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce be, and he is hereby, requested to promptly report to the House of Representatives at the earliest date practicable the following facts:

(1) The names of all Government employees in the various branches of the Commerce Department who are employed by any person, firm, or corporation, the name of such employer, the hours of service given to such employer, and the amount of compensation received by such employee per month for such outside service.

(2) The names of all employees whose spouse (wife or husband), father, mother, sister or sisters, or brother or brothers are in the employ of the Government, their names, department of service, hours of service, and amount of compensation per month, respectively, received by each and all of said relatives.

(3) The amount of annual income, if any, over and above their Government salary received by the Government employees in said department.

Attention is directed to the form of questionnaire in H. J. Res. 5 as one calculated to elicit the information sought.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend. The committee has not been discharged. The question is on the motion to discharge the committee.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know what became of the amendments to the last resolution. They were never voted on. The resolution has not been passed with the amendments? Are they embodied in the resolution?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks they were voted on and passed.

Mr. WINGO. I asked for a division on that, and the gentleman moved the previous question. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] came in with a motion to recommit, and I have sat patiently waiting for a vote on that, because I wanted a separate vote on each of the two amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman is mistaken. The motion was agreed to before the motion to recommit was put.

Mr. BLANTON. That was the case, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is aware that a separation was not made. The gentleman asked the Chair if they could be separated, and the Chair said they could, but no request was made at the proper time.

Mr. WINGO. I think the Chair will find that the reporter's notes will show the question was never put on the amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman may be right.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment:

Page 1, line 11, after the word "employees" insert "Department of Commerce," and on page 2, strike out all of section 3.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BLANTON: Page 1, line 11, after the word "employees" insert "Department of Commerce," and on page 2 strike out all of section 3.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I think these are good amendments. I do not know that any good would be derived from argument, and I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the amendments.

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution as amended.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of no quorum, and the Chair will count. [The Speaker proceeded to count.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, to save time, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not do that while the Chair is counting to ascertain whether or not there is a quorum present. [After counting.] One hundred and ninety-eight gentlemen are present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 185, nays 89, answered "present" 1, not voting 154, as follows:

So the resolution was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. ESCH with Mr. WEBB.

Mr. FOCHT with Mr. AYRES.

Mr. HAMILTON with Mr. CLEARY.

Mr. KING with Mr. DRANE.

Mr. PLATT with Mr. FITZGERALD.

Mr. SNYDER with Mr. THOMAS.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, I voted "nay," but I have a general pair with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. MCFADDEN, and I now wish to change my vote to "present."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. DEWALT, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced, as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote whereby the House resolution was passed, and move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BLANTON. I move that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to reconsider?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. What becomes of the gentleman's motion?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's motion is pending. Does the gentleman make it as a motion, or does he ask unanimous consent?

Mr. WINGO. He made it as a motion.

The SPEAKER. I thought he made it as a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. BLANTON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves to lay the motion on the table.

Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, where an objection is made, he can not make the double motion. Has he made a motion to reconsider?

The SPEAKER. He has made the motion to reconsider, and then the motion to lay that on the table.

Mr. WINGO. Can he make both at the same time where there is objection?

The SPEAKER. He did not make them at the same time. He made one subsequent to the other.

Mr. WINGO. I am not sure; I am asking for information.

The SPEAKER. The motion is not debatable. The motion is to lay the other motion on the table. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

EMPLOYEES UNDER THE UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries be discharged from the further consideration of House resolution 77.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves that the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries be discharged from further consideration of House resolution 77, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 77.

Resolved, That the United States Shipping Board be, and it is hereby, requested to promptly report to the House of Representatives at the earliest date practicable the following facts——

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, enough has been read of the resolution to make it apparent that it is not a privileged resolution, and hence the motion to discharge the committee is not a privileged motion; and inasmuch as we have wasted nearly the whole day with this Democratic filibuster, with appropriation bills pending, I make a point of order against the motion, the point of order being that only resolutions addressed to the President and the heads of the executive departments have privilege.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. And I am quoting from the House Manual in section 836. If the Speaker desires anything more in connection with that, I will call his attention to——

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not desire any further suggestions on that line unless somebody desires to be heard against it.

Mr. BLANTON. I admit that the point is well taken.

Mr. ASWELL. The gentleman refers to "a Democratic filibuster." I would like to ask who is supporting the filibuster?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will answer that question by saying that it is entirely a Democratic performance.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to prefer a unanimous-consent request. I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks on the matters that came up to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks already made. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 4226, being the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 4226, the District of Columbia appropriation bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] will please take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H R. 4226, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, with Mr. TOWNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of H. R. 4226, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose last evening there was an amendment pending, offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD], to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$10,000," in line 12, page 9. The question is on that amendment.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, for motor vehicles, $30,700. All of said motor vehicles and all other motor vehicles provided for in this act and all horse-drawn carriages and buggies owned by the District of Columbia shall be used only for purposes directly pertaining to the public services of said District, and shall be under the direction and control of the commissioners, who may from time to time alter or change the assignment for use thereof or direct the joint or interchangeable use of any of the same by officials and employees of the District: Provided, That no automobile shall be acquired hereunder, by purchase or exchange, at a cost, including the value of a vehicle exchanged, exceeding $1,500 for one seating four or more persons and $1,200 for one seating less than four persons.

Mr. WALSH Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee the reason for the increase in the limit of cost of these vehicles that can be purchased under this exchange procedure. Last year they were limited to $900 and $700. Now the limit has been increased to $1,500 and $1,200.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I believe the reason is that, although that limit was fixed in the old bill, they had to come to the deficiency committee to get an increase of this amount, and the increase is really now in the law under the deficiency bill.

Mr. WALSH. They could not get suitable vehicles under the smaller limitation?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Absolutely not.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think the gentleman will find there is a good reason for every one of these increases.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase and maintenance, hire of livery, of means of transportation for the coroner's office and the morgue, jurors' fees, witness fees, removal of deceased persons, making autopsies, ice, disinfectants, telephone service, and other necessary supplies for the morgue, and the necessary expenses of holding inquests, including stenographic services in taking testimony, and photographing unidentified bodies, $5,000.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. A signal honor has been conferred to-day upon one of the Members of this House, and I feel that not only the Member himself but the membership of the House are honored, and that the Members should have the opportunity of expressing their approval. Gen. Petain, the great French general, has sent from the French front to Gen. Kuhn, of the Seventy-ninth Division, the decoration of the Croix de Guerre, to be conferred upon our colleague, ROYAL JOHNSON, of South Dakota. [Applause.] Gen. Kuhn has conferred that decoration upon our colleague to-day. I feel it is something that we ought to be proud of. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For enforcement of game and fish laws, to be expended under the direction of the commissioners, $100.

Mr. GARD. I move to strike out the last word of this very inconsequential item for the purpose of asking about the game laws in the District of Columbia. What are the game laws in the District of Columbia? Do they apply to wild game or to the games that flourish in the haunts of peace? Does this apply to the police force, or is there a game and fish protective association or anything like that in the District of Columbia?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I really can not inform the gentleman of all the details as to how they expend this money. I do not think they expend the whole $100. In case some Member of Congress should get on a rampage and go out and hunt wild geese or ducks or chickens, he might be subject to the provisions of the game laws of the District.

Mr. GARD. Does the gentleman mean that there is any laxity of enforcement of the game laws of the District of Columbia, which accounts for this small appropriation? I have made the inquiry in good faith, because I did not know there was any necessity, in this District of 10 miles square, for any very elaborate system of game laws; but after hearing the gentleman's suggestion about chickens I realize that I may be in error. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I am informed that there is some wild game flying over, which occasionally alights out here on the Anacostia Flats, ducks and things of that kind.

Mr. GARD. Ducks?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes; and if anybody shoots them and they fail to inform the authorities—the gentleman will notice that the amount here is pretty large—$100. We have spent out of that some $42.

Mr. GARD. The amount was so inconsequential that I wondered whether there were any game laws at all in the District of Columbia.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. If the gentleman will yield, I notice on the House Calendar there is a bill (H. R. 1199) to prohibit the purchase, sale, or possession for the purpose of sale of certain wild birds in the District of Columbia. That was introduced, I think, by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM]. I am sorry the gentleman is not a member of the deficiency committee, for if this bill goes into effect, as it will, we might have to have a deficiency of $25 or $50.

Mr. GARD. That is to take care of the wild birds.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes; these wild birds alight on the flats of Anacostia. We are going to make a park at Anacostia some day, and we want to prevent the wild birds from encroaching on it.

Mr. GARD. One hundred dollars is sufficient, the gentleman thinks, to maintain the sanctity of the game laws of the District of Columbia, and no more?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes; it was considered sufficient by the subcommittee, after extensive hearings, a few years ago. I think the fact is that a few years ago they had $200, but it was cut down.

Mr. VARE. This sum has been in the bill year after year, has it not?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

For carrying out the provisions of the act approved March 1, 1899, entitled "An act to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to remove dangerous or unsafe buildings and parts thereof, and for other purposes," to pay members of the board of survey provided for therein, other than the inspector of buildings, at a compensation of not to exceed $10 for each survey, and to pay the cost of making safe or removing such buildings upon the refusal or neglect of the owners so to do, the unexpended balance of the appropriation made for this purpose for the fiscal year 1913 is reappropriated for the fiscal year 1920.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the committee how much will be available under this paragraph and how it happens that the appropriation made for 1913 is still unexpended.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The record shows that the balance available July 1, 1918, will be $1,753.81. That amount is now available, or nearly all of it.

Mr. WALSH. What was the original appropriation?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I can not tell, but it was not a very large sum. That amount is available, and the commissioners think it is all that will be necessary during the coming year.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase of metal identification number tags for horse-drawn vehicles used for business purposes and motor vehicles in the District of Columbia, $15,000.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] if this sum, $15,000, is a misprint. The item, I notice, is increased from $1,500 last year to $15,000 this year.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think the gentleman is mistaken. I think we had $10,000 in this item last year.

Mr. MAPES. I have the act before me, and it contains $1,500.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Then that is probably a misprint. I think the item was $10,000 last year. There was quite a deficiency, which has been taken care of in the deficiency appropriation bill. The license has been changed recently here so that an increase is occasioned by that.

Mr. MAPES. The langauge is the same. What is this money used for?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Chiefly, and I think wholly, for the purchase of tags that are sold to the owners of automobiles. The number of automobiles is increasing very rapidly, and I think they changed the style of the tag so that they are a little more expensive, but it was deemed advisable.

Mr. MAPES. They have not increased ten times in the last year.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, if my colleague will permit, I might suggest that under a former system an automobile license was permanent, whereas now it is annual. Each year every automobile must acquire a new license tag, whereas before only the new machines were compelled to buy them.

Mr. MAPES. Has that increased the expense from $1,500 to $15,000?

Mr. CRAMTON. It immensely increases the number of tags that must be furnished. Before it was a permanent license, and a man might use one license for five years if he did not get a new car. Now every automobile in the District must have a new license each year.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, in the current law the amount is $10,000, and I am reading now from the official record.

Mr. MAPES. I have the act before me for the year ending June 30, 1918, and in that year it was $1,500.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is the year before.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Michigan yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I would like some information in respect to the rights of a Congressman residing temporarily in the Capital. What is our privilege as an automobile owner? How many tags must we have?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. The owner of an automobile registered in another State does not have to take out a license in the District. The tag of that State is recognized in the District of Columbia, except as to automobiles in the very friendly and interesting State of Maryland. There is a state of war as to automobile tags existing between the State of Maryland and the District of Columbia, and because the State of Maryland will not recognize in Maryland a District tag, the District does not recognize a Maryland tag. Otherwise the tag of any State is recognized as good in the District of Columbia.

Mr. FESS. So that an Ohio tag is recognized in the District?

Mr. CRAMTON. I may say that I drive an old car under a Michigan tag, and I drive it in the District under that tag.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I wish to inform the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] that recently—within the last year or two—they have required a double tag, one on the fore part of the machine and one on the rear. That is one occasion for the additional expense. That question was asked of Mr. Brownlow by Mr. SISSON, the former chairman of this committee, and Mr. Brownlow said that the extra tag was an extra burden of $5,000, but that it was worth that for purposes of making identification more practical. That is why they increased it $5,000 from the appropriation of $10,000 before.

Mr. FESS. How long could an Ohio man temporarily residing here and having his automobile in the District use it on one tag?

Mr. CRAMTON. One year.

Mr. FESS. My concern is to know whether as a driver there is more than one tag necessary in order to be a law-abiding citizen.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I could not answer that question.

Mr. FESS. I think the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] has answered that.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of answering further the question asked by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Even with regard to the State of Maryland, I will state to the gentleman that the State of Maryland readily recognizes the State number on any Member's car, no matter from what State he comes. For instance, I have upon my Texas car, upon which I pay a Texas license, and which has been here in the city of Washington for nearly three years, my Texas number on the front and on the rear. I can go all over the State of Maryland, and they readily recognize it. I can go in Virginia or New York or New Jersey or any other State, and there is a certain reciprocity existing between our home States and the District of Columbia and other States, such as passes the car of a Member; they readily recognize your State number, and it is absolutely unnecessary for any Member of Congress to pay the District license tax if he pays a license tax each year in his own State; and therefore I pay my license tax in my own State every year.

Mr. GARD. But it is not a matter of recognizing a man as a Member of Congress, is it?

Mr. BLANTON. No; it applies——

Mr. GARD. If I am a resident of Texas and I come along with my automobile with my Texas license, I am recognized in every State in the Union wherever I may go.

Mr. BLANTON. With this distinction, that Maryland will not recognize the license tax of any car from any State that does not in turn recognize the license tax of Maryland. It is a matter or reciprocity. That is the distinction, and the State of Texas recognizes a Maryland license tax.

Mr. VARE. In other words, Maryland is in favor of reciprocity.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; and every other State does that.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is a little more than that. The District desires to reciprocate with the State of Maryland, but Maryland will not reciprocate with the District, although Maryland does with every other State.

Mr. BLANTON. I am not talking about any petty strife that may exist between the District and Maryland, but I am talking about what exists between other States and Maryland.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I do.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The gentleman says the State of Maryland will recognize these licenses. Suppose a Member of Congress resides in Maryland during the sessions of Congress. Does the gentleman think he can continue to use the license from his State and not take a license from Maryland, if he remains there over 90 days, say?

Mr. BLANTON. I think a Member of Congress from the State of Maryland ought to pay the license tax in the State of Maryland, and that license tax ought to take him anywhere in the United States where there is a reciprocity existing between the States.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Usually the reciprocity is something of this kind, that the license from an outside State, we will say from Maryland, in—take the case of my State, say Illinois—is good for three months where one comes into the State to reside. Now, the question is where a Member of Congress comes here and resides in the District or in the State of Maryland and resides there three months, is it not compulsory on him to take out a license in the District or in the State of Maryland?

Mr. BLANTON. I think not, where he is taxed for a State license and keeps it up each year. I have had my same car here for nearly three years.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I have taken the chances on it myself.

Mr. FOSTER. I have had this experience recently. I went down and they told me that an Ohio license was good only for one year. Do I understand the gentleman from Texas has been using a license for three years——

Mr. BLANTON. No. I have paid my Texas license every year. I keep the same number and repay my license annually in Texas.

Mr. FOSTER. An Ohio license is good for one year, and they tax $2.50 for a chauffeur's license for the city.

Mr. BLANTON. My annual license tax in Texas costs about $15, something like that, if I remember correctly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Plumbing Inspection Division: To reimburse three assistant inspectors of plumbing for provision and maintenance by themselves of three motorcycles, for use in their official inspections in the District of Columbia, $15 per month each, $540.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman what is the necessity of retaining the language in lines 3, 4, and 5, on page 18? I understand the elevator inspectors went out the other day on the point of order.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will inform the gentleman that they are doing the work just the same, whether that new language is in there or not. That language is for the purpose of requiring the parties to pay inspection fees to the inspector, but now since that was stricken out on the point of order it is paid just the same, but we pay it instead of the elevators that are inspected.

Mr. GARD. They are doing the work of inspection?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. They have to do so. They are obliged to do so under the law.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Northwest: For paving with concrete Taylor Street, Rock Creek Church Road to New Hampshire Avenue, 30 feet wide, $19,000.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of being afforded some information by the chairman of the committee. I am desirous of knowing the plan followed in the District of Columbia for the improvement and repair of streets. I will state in the very beginning of what I have to say that I favor the very best possible streets, as well as all other public utilities in the city of Washington, but what I am interested in is knowing the legal method of awarding contracts. Or do they do it themselves?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. They award contracts for such work.

Mr. GARD. I notice these different appropriations all come out very nicely—say at $10,000 and $19,000. Is the appropriation made before the contract is awarded?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. These are the appropriations made, and we expect to build these streets within the limit of cost by contract.

Mr. GARD. Suppose they make a contract, for instance, for the paving of Taylor Street, for which an appropriation of $19,000 is made, for $18,254?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The balance would go into the Treasury.

Mr. GARD. Is it ever known that anything went back?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Very much of it goes back, I will inform the gentleman.

Mr. GARD. Take the individual appropriations or the appropriations for the several streets, and are they entirely used, or is there any residuary fund?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Sometimes there is, as I tried to explain to the gentleman here in my opening statement. Heretofore this has been appropriated in a lump sum, and your subcommittee or committee thought it was not advisable. We thought it should be consolidated, and there should be specified on the face of the bill the streets to be improved and the amount to be expended therefor. They may have some little difficulty occasionally with this, but I hardly think they will. But I will say to the gentleman that if they contract for $49,000 and the work is performed for $40,000 the balance would go back into the Treasury.

Mr. GARD. How many so-called contractors are there operating in the District of Columbia?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I can not say; but I think the hearings will disclose that they have considerable competition, especially now. I was informed that a few years ago they did not have; that they had but very little competition; but now they say they have much of it.

Mr. GARD. Can the gentleman tell me whether there is any apportionment to contractors in the city of Washington by which one contractor gets part of the city and another contractor another part?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. There is nothing of the kind now. The lowest bidder gets the contract.

Mr. GARD. There is nothing of the kind now? Do you mean that there have been instances of that kind?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I used to think there had been years ago, but I do not wish the RECORD to say that I really knew anything of that kind. But I used to think probably there was. However, I am satisfied there is nothing of that kind now.

Mr. GARD. Are there more than two competing contractors for paving work in the District of Columbia?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. They are not limited to contractors living in the District of Columbia, but they get them from the outside also.

Mr. GARD. But they do not get them from the outside.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. They try to do so.

Mr. GARD. Do they get them?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I can not inform the gentleman as to that. They have done it, I understand, recently.

Mr. GARD. Can the gentleman inform me if he has any information about any particular street paved within the last year?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I have not that information now, because we had no new streets paved in the last year at all, as the commissioners did not recommend any paving, and the old standard bill contained nothing of that kind.

Mr. GARD. That was on account of the necessity of conserving materials during the war?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes. The cost of materials was great, the shortage of labor was serious, and the expense was simply enormous.

Mr. GARD. When are these contracts for repairing these streets to be advertised?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. As speedily as possible after this law is passed and the money becomes available, as I am informed. The commissioners and the committee are anxious now that we should go on now making what we call permanent improvements, new work, and so forth, both on the streets and schools, which we had to leave out the year before.

Mr. GARD. It is very desirable to do that.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is what we have been attempting to do. We have not been extravagant. We have only gone as far as we could reach.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman a question: Whether or not he has given consideration to the fact that unless there is a clause added to the bill it might to some extent fail to carry out his purpose? In other words, if in any one of these particular contracts the estimates of the contractor or the lowest bidder would exceed the amount the commissioners could not award the contract?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I do not think they could.

Mr. VARE. Now, then, if on another item they had a surplus of a thousand or more dollars, if given some latitude, they could award the contract where there had been a slight shortage without the commissioners coming back to Congress for additional authority. In other words, there ought to be a flexible clause added, so as not to handicap the commissioners.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I know. We do not desire to handicap them, but that might be called new legislation. We are anxious to avoid new legislation. We have a very active District Committee and they are seeking for new work, and we are very willing that they should go out and take up new work. I refer to the new chairman of the District Committee, Mr. MAPES.

Mr. VARE. There is only one period of the year when street paving can be properly done, when the climatic conditions are favorable, and if Congress would not be in session embarrassment might ensue in that regard.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will say to the gentleman that these new streets that we are proposing to improve here constitute what we call "new work." Their improvement is to be upon estimates just made, or made 10 days ago.

Mr. VARE. Are they estimates of the commissioners or are they estimates of street contractors backed up by bonds?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. They are estimates which are new, not a year or a year and a half old. When we prepared these items we did not have an official copy of the estimates before us but a copy. The official estimates did not really get into our hands until we had prepared this bill, and when we had prepared it we found them to be correct, so recent are the estimates.

Mr. VARE. If it is the purpose of the commissioners to do this work promptly, without delay, their estimates would in no wise confine a contractor to the precise sums specified in the bill. He has to finance the operation and he would send his engineers on the work and he will make his own inspection and he will back up his estimate by a bond. Now, if in any one of these cases his opinion would be that the cost would exceed the estimate of the engineer of the District, there would absolutely be no way of having that street paved without the District Commissioners coming back to Congress for additional legislation.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The gentleman may be right in that. I think possibly that is a good curb to have on them.

Mr. VARE. I might say, for the benefit of the committee, that I speak from experience. I have seen the same thing worked out. The estimate of an engineer who has no financial responsibility is one thing, while the estimate of a contractor, who must necessarily carry out the specifications, who must finance his operation, is another thing.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VARE. I do.

Mr. MAPES. I notice a little further along here, on page 22, this language following the items:

In all, $282,300, to be disbursed and accounted for as "Street improvements" and for that purpose shall constitute one fund.

I wonder if the gentleman can tell why that clause is placed there in that way? Would that cover a situation such as the gentleman from Pennsylvania points out?

Mr. VARE. I do not believe it would.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It is to a certain extent a matter of bookkeeping.

Mr. MAPES. Would it cover the condition that the gentleman points out?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The fund will be upon the books of the department down here as a sort of improvement fund.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to the bottom of page 19, line 24, in order to make a typographical correction.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to return to line 24, page 19, for the purpose of making a correction. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. In line 24, on page 19, the spelling of the word "Delaware" should be corrected. I move that the correction be made.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the clerk of the committee be authorized to correct any errors of spelling that may occur in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the clerk be authorized generally to correct the spelling throughout the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. ANDREWS].

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of calling attention to the remarks concerning unexpended balances and the lapsing of appropriations. There seems to have been an intimation that an unexpended balance might be available for further obligations within certain periods of time. Under an annual appropriation, as I understand it, the appropriation can be obligated under contracts or otherwise within the period of the year for which the appropriation is set apart and for no other time. Unless the contract is executed within the year for which the appropriation is made it can not be bound by any contract executed subsequent to that period. Any unexpended balance, however, in that appropriation will stand for a period of two years thereafter for the payment of any obligation legally incurred within the period of the year for which the appropriation was set apart. If, however, the total authorizations within that year do not equal the total amount of the appropriation, the unexpended balance of that appropriation will lapse into the general fund or into miscellaneous receipts at the end of the third year following. So that if any item unpaid at the end of that third year legally incurred within the first year should be presented for payment an account could be stated and sent to Congress for payment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Disposal of city refuse: To enable the commissioners to carry out the provisions of existing law governing the collection and disposal of garbage, dead animals, night soil, and miscellaneous refuse and ashes in the District of Columbia, including inspection and allowance to inspectors for maintenance of horses and vehicles or motor vehicles used in the performance of official duties, not to exceed $25 per month for each inspector for horse-drawn vehicles, $30 per month for automobiles, and $15 per month for motorcycles; fencing of public and private property designated by the commissioners as public dumps; and incidental expenses, $621,000: Provided, That any proceeds received from the disposal of city refuse or garbage shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the United States and the District of Columbia in equal parts: Provided further, That this appropriation shall not be available for collecting ashes or miscellaneous refuse from hotels, places of business, large apartment or boarding houses.

Mr. VARE. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee how the District Commissioners provide for the removal of ashes? Is it by contract or is it by the city employees?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. By contract. I think the gentleman is somewhat informed upon the situation of that as a contract. The matter has been satisfactorily adjusted and has gone into the deficiency bill, which is now in the Senate.

Mr. VARE. But the District is still having its ashes removed by contract?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The ashes are still removed by contract, yes; but the garbage is a little different proposition.

Mr. VARE. They are going to continue to have it done by contract?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The District bill gives the commissioners authority to remove the ashes themselves, or by contract—either way.

Mr. VARE. How much increase do they ask for the coming year over the past?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The last contract was for $78,000. The estimate this year, under the general head of disposal of city refuse, for the ashes part of it, was $100,000. They are getting it done now under a broken-down contract, so to speak, with very slight reimbursement, for a good deal less money than that, but it is impossible to do it next year for less than $100,000. They really do not think they can do it for $100,000. Maybe it will take $125,000, but they ask for only $100,000 now. I may state here that this total of $621,000 is composed of the following items:

Garbage	$455,130
Ashes	100,000
Miscellaneous refuse	35,400
Night soil	17,500
Dead animals	3,360
Inspection	9,110
Contingent expenses	500

I will say to the gentleman that that matter has been canvassed up and down, by this committee and the deficiency committees of both the House and Senate, and I do not believe that a further examination of three months could cut that down one dollar.

Mr. VARE. I have no thought of asking the committee to cut down the amount. I simply wanted to get the information for the benefit of the committee.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The experience they have had is going to be very beneficial to the city of Washington.

Mr. VARE. I will ask the gentleman if it is not the fact that notwithstanding the commissioners had a bond filed for the removal of the ashes last year by the contractor, they found it was necessary to have $20,000 in the last deficiency bill in order to partly reimburse him for his losses?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Only very slightly.

Mr. VARE. I say to partly reimburse him.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. They thought it was cheaper to do it in this way.

Mr. VARE. The District had to come to his assistance by making additional appropriations, notwithstanding that the contractor had filed a bond.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. VARE. And there was a reliable surety company on the bond, which the District could have held, and have compelled to finish the job.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It would have doubled, even trebled what the cost was, to enforce the bond.

Mr. VARE. I fully agree with the gentleman. I had no desire to ask the question with the thought in mind that it was possible to reduce the item.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, the hour is late and we have been struggling through a heated day; the attendance is not very great, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I am very sorry that we could not have read this bill for two or three hours to-day, because of the exigencies of the case, but I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 4226, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE WAR EXPENDITURES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following gentlemen members of the Special Committee to Investigate War Expenditures, under House resolution 78, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, Mr. HAMILTON, Mr. MCKENZIE, Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota, Mr. REAVIS, Mr. MAGEE, Mr. MCCULLOCH, Mr. BLAND of Indiana, Mr. JEFFERIS, Mr. MACGREGOR, Mr. FLOOD, Mr. GARRETT, Mr. DOREMUS, Mr. DONOVAN, and Mr. LEA of California.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas, indefinitely, on account of illness.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted—

To Mr. LEVER to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of J. W. Riser (H. R. 2470, 65th Cong.), no adverse report having been made thereon.

To Mr. ASHBROOK to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Henry N. Tippett (H. R. 1096), no adverse report having been made thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, June 6, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the chairman of the United States Geographic Board, submitting an estimate of appropriation required by the board for necessary printing, being for the fiscal year 1920 (H. Doc. No. 77), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CALENDAR OF MOTIONS TO DISCHARGE COMMITTEES—NOTICE.

Paragraph 4, Rule XXVII:

No. 1.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, June 6, 1919.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, every thought of Thy name is an ennobling thought. Meditation upon Thy name is the inspiration and uplift of the spirit of man. We begin our day's toil thinking upon Thee and seeking Thy guidance and Thy blessing, that we may pitch our life and our service upon a plane that is well pleasing in Thy sight and at the close of the day have the comfortable satisfaction that we have honored Thy name and advanced the interests of Thy people. We pray Thy guidance this day. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

ARTICLES OF WAR.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. At the request of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs I desire to submit a report in his absence. From that committee I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 1373) to amend the Articles of War, and I submit a report (No. 10) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

TREATY OF PEACE.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report favorably, without amendment, Senate resolution 64, submitted by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution submitted by Mr. HITCHCOCK on the 4th instant was read, as follows:

Whereas the Senator from Idaho, Mr. BORAH, has stated in the Senate that certain interests in the city of New York have secured copies of the peace treaty with Germany while the American people have been unable to secure one; and

Whereas the Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. LODGE, has stated in the Senate that he knows of four such copies of said treaty of peace with Germany now in New York and that the only place where it is not allowed to come is the United States Senate; and

Whereas the Senator from Idaho, Mr. BORAH, has stated that the interests now having possession of said copies of said treaty are peculiarly interested in the treaty: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be, and it hereby is, authorized and directed to investigate the matter with a view to ascertaining the facts, and particularly to ascertain and report to the Senate the names of the persons, corporations, or interests which have secured copies of said treaty and from whom they were secured and by what methods, and also to ascertain and report to the Senate in what manner and to what extent said interests are "particularly" interested in said treaty. For these purposes the Committee on Foreign Relations, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and it is, authorized to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with the same, the expenses thereof, including the cost of travel, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in the general excitement caused by the presentation of that resolution I think but very little attention was given to its form. I know I gave very little attention to it. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], whom I do not see in the Chamber at the moment, prepared a substitute, which is much better in form. I should like to have the resolution go over for the present, that the Senator from Minnesota may have an opportunity to present the amendment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understand it is the report of the committee which has just been read.

Mr. LODGE. It is open to amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me make a suggestion to the Senator.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Would the Senator object to its consideration to-day?

Mr. LODGE. I should like to have the resolution go over until there is an opportunity for the Senator from Minnesota to present his substitute, which he showed me yesterday and which I thought much better in form.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator object to the chairman of the committee who made the report asking unanimous consent that it be withdrawn? Then he can present the report later in the day with the amendment, if agreed to by the committee. Or does the Senator want to have the resolution go to the calendar?

Mr. LODGE. I want to have an opportunity to make an amendment in the form of the resolution, if necessary. On examination it seems to me to have been hastily drawn, and it ought to be in a different form. The Senator from Minnesota has one to offer. The resolution can be called up at any moment. There is no need to send it back to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses to approve the substitute.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply thought that course would be the easiest way out.

Mr. LODGE. The resolution is open to amendment, of course, before it goes to the Foreign Relations Committee. I understand there is a motion to send it to the Foreign Relations Committee, but I may be mistaken.

Mr. SMOOT. No; the request is for immediate consideration.

Mr. LODGE. Very well, then; I ask that it may go over.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought it would be very much better to have it go back to the committee and let them consider the suggested amendment, and adopt it if they saw proper, and report it out and ask unanimous consent for its consideration.

Mr. LODGE. I want to get the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota before the Senate. It relates to the form. It has nothing to do with the expenditure of money; it is simply the form.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

REPORTS OF THE COMMITTEE ON CONTINGENT EXPENSES.

Mr. CALDER, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, reported the following resolutions favorably without amendments, and they were considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

Resolution No. 17, submitted by Mr. JONES of Washington, May 20, 1919:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and it is hereby, directed to investigate and ascertain the facts relative to the suspension by the board of education of the District of Columbia of Miss Alice Wood, a teacher in the schools of the District, and report the same to the Senate, with its recommendations; and the committee, or any subcommittee conducting such investigation, is authorized to subpœna witnesses, send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and take all steps necessary to ascertain the facts, and to employ such stenographic help as may be necessary at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recess of the Senate in conducting such investigation.

Resolution No. 59, submitted by Mr. SPENCER on the 3d instant:

Resolved, That the Committee on Claims, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized, during the Sixty-sixth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer at a cost of not exceeding $1 per printed page to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expense thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

Resolution No. 61, submitted by Mr. NELSON on the 3d instant:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-sixth Congress to hold hearings, to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not to exceed $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee; to sit and act at such times and places as it may deem necessary during the sessions or recesses of the Senate, the expenses thereof, including the cost of travel and subsistence of the members of the committee or any subcommittee thereof incident to any hearings which may be held in places other than Washington, D. C., to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Resolution No. 62, submitted by Mr. PAGE on the 3d instant:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-sixth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. CALDER, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 73), and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized, during the Sixty-sixth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee; the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

EMPLOYMENT OF ASSISTANT CLERKS.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 49 for the employment of an assistant clerk to the Committee on Foreign Relations, I report it favorably, with an amendment, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendment was, in line 4, to strike out the words "until otherwise appropriated by law" and to insert "during the present session of the Sixty-sixth Congress," so as to read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be, and is hereby, authorized to employ an assistant clerk at the rate of $1,800 per annum, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate during the present session of the Sixty-sixth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CALDER. I report back favorably with amendments, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, Senate resolution 42, authorizing the Committee on Claims to employ an assistant clerk, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendments were, in line 3, to strike out "$2,500" and in lieu to insert "$2,200," and in line 5 to strike out "until otherwise provided for by law" and insert "during the present session of the Sixty-sixth Congress," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Claims of the United States Senate be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ an assistant clerk at the rate of $2,200 per annum, to be paid out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate during the present session of the Sixty-sixth Congress.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 49) authorizing the Joint Committee on the Library to provide for the restoration and completion of the historical frieze in the Rotunda of the Capitol; to the Committee on the Library.

REPEAL OF DAYLIGHT-SAVING LAW.

Mr. DIAL submitted an amendment proposing to repeal the so-called daylight-saving law, intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. MOSES submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,000,000 to carry out the purposes mentioned in section 3 of the act of March 1, 1911, to enable any State to cooperate with any other State or States or with the United States for the protection of watersheds of navigable streams, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McCUMBER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $676 to reimburse Benson County, N. Dak., for money actually paid by that county to the State of North Dakota for the care of three insane Indians, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for the investigation and improvement of cereals and methods of cereal protection from $432,505 to $532,505, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill, which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

PRECEDENTS OF THE SENATE.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 71), which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the Precedents and Decisions on Points of Order in the United States Senate, revised and indexed to and including the Sixty-fifth Congress, be printed in one volume as a Senate document, and that 1,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate.

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 72), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-sixth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Has any Senator a resolution coming over from a previous day?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The resolution reported by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate was up for consideration, and I understand the Senator from Massachusetts objected to the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. LODGE. I asked that it might go over, because I wish to have an amendment offered to it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator stated yesterday that he was ready for its consideration.

Mr. LODGE. I did, but I have come to the conclusion that the form of the resolution is very bad.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can the Senator now state what amendment he thinks should be made?

Mr. LODGE. I told the Senate that the Senator from Minnesota drafted one, which he showed me yesterday, and on examining it I think it is in a much better form.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I regret very much to notice that the enthusiasm of the Senator for this investigation is oozing out so prematurely.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator need not be disturbed. He will get all there is in the investigation. It is a perfectly silly thing, anyway.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The resolution was introduced day before yesterday——

Mr. LODGE. And held up by you for a day.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It was before the Senate all day yesterday and there was no intimation that it was not an effective resolution to produce the result. The statement was made that there would be a unanimous report, and now when it is brought in on the report the Senator objects to its consideration.

Mr. LODGE. I want to have an opportunity to amend it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. We are willing to have the Senator take the opportunity if he will do it, only we want to have present consideration.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. CURTIS. I call for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded. Is there further morning business?

Mr. BORAH. The resolution in reference to the peace delegates securing a hearing for the Irish representatives went over. Is it now on the table, or did it go to the calendar? My understanding was that it went over. Did it remain on the table?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. My recollection of the matter is that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] objected to the immediate consideration of the resolution and it went over under the rule for a day. It is now on the desk of the Vice President, under the rule, as a resolution coming over from a previous day, and the Senator from Idaho can call it up if he wishes to do so, as I understand it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is on the calendar. It was talked out yesterday until 2 o'clock.

Mr. BORAH. Not this resolution. This resolution was not talked on at all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has gone to the calendar.

Mr. BORAH. I do not think there will be any debate upon it, and I ask unanimous consent to call up the resolution for consideration.

Mr. CURTIS. If there is to be any debate whatever, I shall object. I do not think the resolution is as important as the appropriation bills. We must get the appropriation bills through. I am ready to call up the Indian appropriation bill. It is a privileged motion, and if the morning business is closed I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. BORAH. The morning business is not closed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	France	Knox	Overman
Beckham	Gay	La Follette	Page
Borah	Gronna	Lenroot	Penrose
Brandegee	Harris	Lodge	Phelan
Calder	Harrison	McCormick	Phipps
Capper	Hitchcock	McCumber	Pittman
Chamberlain	Johnson, Calif.	McKellar	Pomerene
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	McNary	Ransdell
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Moses	Sheppard
Dial	Kellogg	Nelson	Sherman
Dillingham	Kendrick	New	Simmons
Elkins	Kenyon	Newberry	Smith, Ariz.
Fall	King	Norris	Smith, S. C
Fletcher	Kirby	Nugent	Smoot
Spencer	Sutherland	Walsh, Mass	Watson
Stanley	Swanson	Walsh, Mont.	Williams
Sterling	Underwood	Warren

Mr. FLETCHER. My colleague, the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], is detained by illness.

Mr. KIRBY. I announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] on public business. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-seven Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. BORAH. I renew my request for unanimous consent to consider Senate resolution 48, Order of Business No. 7 on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate resolution No. 48, being No. 7 on the calendar. Is there any objection?

Mr. CURTIS. If I can have the assurance that there will be no debate on the resolution, I shall not object; otherwise, I shall object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair can not guarantee that there will be no debate.

Mr. CURTIS. Well, I object.

Mr. BORAH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution No. 48, being No. 7 on the calendar.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I move that we take up the Indian appropriation bill, which is a privileged motion.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I make the point of order that the motion is not amendable by a substitute.

The VICE PRESIDENT. We are getting nowhere. The motion of the Senator from Kansas is not in order during the morning hour and before 1 o'clock, until the conclusion of morning business.

Mr. SMOOT. Is morning business over, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; morning business is not yet disposed of.

Mr. BORAH. Then I will wait until it is disposed of, Mr. President.

TREATY OF PEACE.

Mr. KELLOGG. I offer an amendment to the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] to strike out all of the resolution down to and including the words "interested in said treaty," on page 2, line 4, and to insert what I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be read.

The SECRETARY. In the resolution of Mr. HITCHCOCK it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the words "interested in said treaty," on page 2, line 4, and in lieu thereof to insert:

Whereas it has been stated in the Senate that the proposed peace treaty, which has been delivered to Germany, is being sold upon the streets of Berlin and openly circulated in Germany and other countries; and

Whereas it is claimed that certain people or interests in the city of New York have also received from members of the American peace commission copies of said treaty: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Foreign Relations Committee be, and it hereby is, directed and authorized to investigate said charges and report to the Senate its findings, and if said charges are true, to ascertain in what manner and by whose authority copies of said peace treaty have been furnished private citizens and denied the Senate of the United States.

Mr. KELLOGG. I desire to say that I shall be very glad if the Senator from Nebraska will call up his resolution, accept that amendment, and have it passed at once.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution, providing it is debatable. I do not wish to be forced to vote in this way without an explanation as to the changes which are proposed. Otherwise I should like to wait until 1 o'clock.

Mr. CURTIS. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection. Is there further morning business?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have the assurance that if I renew my request for unanimous consent the objection will not be made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any further morning business? If there be none, morning business is closed.

REPRESENTATIVES OF IRELAND AT PARIS.

Mr. BORAH. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate resolution 48, being Calendar No. 7.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I had intimated to the Senator previously that I preferred that this matter should not come up by unanimous consent. I think it is ill-advised legislation. I can not consent to its coming up by unanimous consent. Let it come up in the regular way, and then I shall satisfy myself merely by voting against it.

Mr. BORAH. I understand that I am unable to make the motion to take it up before 1 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator can make the motion now.

Mr. BORAH. Then I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution 48, No. 7 on the calendar.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 48) urging the American peace commission to secure a hearing for the representatives of the Irish Republic.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. JONES of Washington. In connection with the resolution I simply ask to have printed in the RECORD a petition in behalf of the United Irish Societies of Seattle, Wash., for the passage of the resolution.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEATTLE, WASH., June 5, 1919.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I take pleasure in forwarding to you for presentation to the Senate the following petition:

Resolved, That the United Irish Societies of Seattle respectfully petition the Senate of the United States that the resolution presented by Hon. WILLIAM E. BORAH, requesting the American delegation at the peace conference to recommend to that body that a hearing be granted to the representatives of the Irish people chosen to plead for self-determination be adopted and forwarded to Versailles at the earliest practicable moment.

WM. O'MULCHAY, President.
J. O'CONNOR, Secretary.

With kind personal regards,

M. J. COSTELLO.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I offer an amendment to the resolution as proposed to be amended by the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the resolution as reported, it is proposed to add the following:

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States express its sympathy with the aspirations of the Irish people for a government of its own choice.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask for the reading of the resolution as reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 48) as proposed to be amended, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States earnestly requests the American peace commission at Versailles to endeavor to secure for Edward De Valera, Arthur Griffiths, and Count George Noble Plunkett a hearing before said peace conference in order that they may present the cause of Ireland.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in so far as I am permitted to do so, for myself I accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I wish to suggest, first, to the Senator from Idaho that I think the title of the resolution will require some amendment.

Mr. BORAH. That can be done later.

Mr. LODGE. That, of course, can be done later; but some amendment will be required to make the title conform to the resolution as amended by the committee.

Mr. President, I voted with great pleasure for the resolution as it was reported by the committee, because I have always felt that every man is entitled to his day in court, and every nation, on that principle, is entitled to its day before the peace conference. I have done what little I could—and it was very little—to try to get hearings for the Albanians, the Koreans, and some other people who wished to be heard, and I was very happy, therefore, to join in asking for a hearing for the representatives of Ireland.

My colleague [Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts] has presented an amendment containing a general statement of sympathy of a character which I know appeals to all of the American people. We have always as a Nation desired that all people should go on peacefully under a government of their own choice.

When, however, Mr. President, the conference first met, ostensibly to make peace with Germany, I think everyone realized that the nations associated in the war against Germany had gathered at Paris in order to present to Germany a treaty for Germany to sign, putting an end to the war, and, if possible, putting an end to Germany's power for evil, and that it would be utterly impossible for those nations, acting together and in that way, to inquire into and interfere with each other's affairs.

I think that position was an entirely sound one, and it might have been used there to exclude even a resolution exciting such general sympathy in the United States as that offered by my colleague; but, Mr. President, that objection can no longer exist. The peace conference at Paris has passed far beyond their primary business of making peace with Germany and thereby bringing peace to the world. They have made omnipotence their province and have occupied the entire sphere of national and international relations the world over. More than that, they have deliberately entered upon the settlement of a question which is wholly ours—the Monroe doctrine.

In the first draft of the treaty which was presented to us the Monroe doctrine was left somewhere among the voices heard in the air and the visions that are seen by capable visionaries, and we were told that the doctrine was safe, because it had been extended to the whole world, which took away its entire meaning and all its characteristics. Now, however, there comes back a second draft with a direct statement in regard to the Monroe doctrine, putting it in a far worse position, in my judgment, than it was under the first draft, and that was bad enough.

Article 21 in the new draft reads as follows:

> Nothing in this covenant shall be deemed to affect the validity of international engagements, such as treaties of arbitration or regional understandings, like the Monroe doctrine, for securing the maintenance of peace.

The President, when he was presenting the treaty to the conference, simply said that article 21 was a new article—an accurate, if not an extensive, statement. The British delegates, however, put out an explanation of the new league as well as the President. They published a summary of the whole of the new covenant. Unfortunately, that explanation in its entirety has not come here; parts of it were sent, but we have never been favored with the whole of the British analysis. We have, however, had sent to us their explanation of article 21 relating to the Monroe doctrine, and this is what the British delegates declared their understanding of its terms to be; that is, this is the interpretation which their Government puts upon article 21. I now quote:

> Article 21 makes it clear that the covenant is not intended to abrogate or weaken any other agreements, so long as they are consistent with its own terms, into which members of the league may have entered or may hereafter enter for the assurance of peace. Such agreements would include special treaties for compulsory arbitration and military conventions that are genuinely defensive.
> The Monroe doctrine and similar understandings are put in the same category. They have shown themselves in history to be not instruments of national ambition, but guarantees of peace. The origin of the Monroe doctrine is well known. It was proclaimed in 1823 to prevent America from becoming a theater for intrigues of European absolutism. At first a principle of American foreign policy, it has become an international understanding, and it is not illegitimate for the people of the United States to say that the covenant should recognize that fact.
> In its essence it is consistent with the spirit of the covenant, and, indeed, the principles of the league, as expressed in article 10, represent the extension to the whole world of the principles of the doctrine—

Now—

> While, should any dispute as to the meaning of the latter ever arise between the American and European powers, the league is there to settle it.

Mr. President, in the first place, the Monroe doctrine is not an international engagement, and never has been. At the last Hague convention our delegates specifically reserved it. It never has been formally accepted and acknowledged by any nation. It is not a regional understanding. I do not know who invented that strange phrase, but it is not what the Monroe doctrine is. If you set up a sign on some property you hold and state on it that "trespassing and shooting are forbidden on this property under penalty of law," that is not a regional understanding; and the Monroe doctrine is not a regional understanding, and never was anything like it. The Monroe doctrine was our policy, and never anything else. Our fellow Republics to the south have sometimes attacked it and have sometimes run to it with great enthusiasm for shelter; but it is not their doctrine. It is ours, and it rested, in the first place, upon the broad principle of self-preservation. That is the bottom of the Monroe doctrine. It is all ours; and now it is carried into this league of nations. It is already interpreted by England, although it is wholly our affair, and it is to be determined in the future by the league of nations.

Mr. President, any question which arises in regard to the Monroe doctrine, in my judgment, should be decided by only one power, and that is the power that has declared, interpreted, and maintained it—the United States.

I do not mean at this moment to enter into any elaborate discussion of this point; but I bring it up because my colleague has offered an amendment, for which I shall vote, which might have been objected to in the past on the ground that those nations associated against Germany should not look into each other's affairs; but when it comes to those nations taking the Monroe doctrine, our doctrine, our policy, and foisting it on the league of nations, and then telling us that they are going to interpret it, I think they have carried their flight so far that if we choose to make a few suggestions about other matters it is quite legitimate and courteous to do it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I have an additional reason for supporting this resolution, which under ordinary conditions would not receive my support.

Under my interpretation of the proposed league of nations, if there arose at any time in the future a revolution in Ireland, the British Government, under the distinct terms of the proposed league itself, on its own motion, could take the matter before the league of nations. If this action were not taken by Great Britain any other country a member of the league could present the matter to the league of nations. To my mind, the language is perfectly clear. The language used in various sections of the different articles—not in one alone, but in others—is almost the identical language used in the Troppau protocol to the Holy Alliance, to which the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] so eloquently called attention a few days since in this body, under the terms of which Austria became the mandatory for the Holy Alliance and put down the rebellion in the Kingdom of Naples, and France became the mandatory for the Holy Alliance and put down the rebellion led by the Spanish Cortez in Spain. The Troppau protocol simply provided that should anything arise which might threaten the peace of the world the Holy Alliance should deal with it; and the Holy Alliance was more nearly a league of nations than is proposed by this document which the President has sent to the Senate, and—as suggested by a Senator, and I approve his suggestion—in better form.

Under the terms of the protocol adopted in Troppau, using exactly similar language to that which is insidiously inserted in various sections of this document known as the draft of the league of nations, which we have here, the Holy Alliance undertook to interfere on this hemisphere; and against the league of nations the only country that dared lift its voice was this country, which is now asked to head a similar league of nations.

Mr. President, I do not pretend at this time to discuss the legal meaning, the inevitable conclusion, which must be arrived at by anyone who understands the meaning of words, in considering this document which I have here before me containing a draft of the league of nations. The time is too short. I shall not trespass upon the time of the Senate. In my judgment, however—and I shall undertake to explain more fully at some later period—in the event that a revolution arose in Ireland, or in any other country, it would become the duty of the league of nations, upon the ground that the peace of the world might be threatened, to lend assistance to put down that revolution, exactly as France acted as mandatory and as Austria acted as mandatory for the Holy Alliance in 1822 and 1823.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, very briefly, I do not see any parallel between the Holy Alliance and the proposed league of nations, and therefore the Senator has expressed unnecessary apprehension that smaller nations in rebellion might be prevented by the league from carrying out their purpose. George Washington was called an illustrious rebel, and rebellion is the ultimate right of all peoples. I do not see in the league that there is any provision by which, acting in concert, rebellions would be put down. The only authority is article 10 of the proposed draft:

> The members of the league undertake to respect and preserve, as against external aggression—
> External aggression—
> the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the league. In case of any such aggression, or in case of any threat or danger of such aggression, the council shall advise upon the means by which this obligation shall be fulfilled.

I understand that in the deliberations of the congress in Paris this contention came up, and the words "external aggression" were put in in order to clarify the very question which the Senator from New Mexico has raised.

The Holy Alliance was organized not by free States but by autocratic States, and its avowed purpose was to put down the democratic movement in Europe at that time and to restore to the Spanish Crown its rebellious Provinces in South America. The league is organized for freedom; the league is organized by the great free countries of the world—because I will classify England, Italy, France, and the United States as the great free countries of the world—and those countries dominate the league, and, by the constitution of the league, shall remain in control. It is inconceivable, therefore, that the machinery of the league ever would be used to suppress internal revolution. That will be the duty of that nation that is more particularly interested in subjugating her rebellious subjects, if you please; and it is not the duty, either in the proposed draft or in international law or in ethics or in morals, of any nation, no matter how friendly, to assist a nation whose subjects are in rebellion to put down that rebellion. There is no authority contained under the draft of the league of nations to justify the statement made by the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. PHELAN. I yield.

Mr. McCORMICK. Will the Senator allow me to call his attention to the next to the last paragraph but one in article 3?

> The assembly may deal at its meetings with any matter within the sphere of action of the league or affecting the peace of the world.

It was to that paragraph, I think, that the Senator from New Mexico alluded.

Mr. FALL. Because almost similar language is used in the Troppau protocol of the constitution of the Holy Alliance.

Mr. PHELAN. The Senator from Illinois calls attention to the last paragraph but one of article 3:

> The assembly may deal at its meetings with any matter within the sphere of action of the league or affecting the peace of the world.

I contend that a rebellion in any State is not within the sphere of action of the league—that is the very point I made.

Mr. McCORMICK. I think the Senator has omitted a word toward the end of that penultimate paragraph, "or affecting the peace of the world."

Mr. PHELAN. I was just going to come to that—"or affecting the peace of the world." A rebellion in Ireland would possibly, in the judgment of the Senator, affect the peace of the world and justify the intervention of the league of nations. It is preposterous.

There was a disturbance in New Orleans, by which certain violent acts were practiced upon the helpless nationals of another country, and the United States had some difficulty, the Senator will recollect, in getting State action. I should like to ask him—and that is an extreme case—would the league of nations be justified in intervening, where the nationals of one country had received bad treatment in the United States, with a view of maintaining the peace of the world, or would it be a matter of negotiation and settlement between the two countries affected, as in that case, Italy and the United States?

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, the President of the United States is quoted as having addressed the representatives of the smaller powers in Europe to make it clear that under the league armed forces would intervene to protect the rights of racial minorities, whether in Ireland or in certain Southern States of the United States, I suppose, as well as in central or southern Europe.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a suggestion along that line?

Mr. PHELAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FALL. Answering the Senator's question, I say that clearly under the terms of the league, should the Italian Mafia murder citizens here in the United States, and a mob hang them, it would be the duty of the league itself, upon Italy notifying the council that negotiations for reparation had failed, to take up the matter and force the United States to abide by the decision of the council.

Now, Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me a moment, I should like to call his attention to another article.

One of the articles which I have reference to has been very clearly expounded by the Senator from Illinois. The Senator, of course, speaks as an international lawyer. He has referred to international law. He knows, of course, that should the belligerents of any party in Mexico or in Ireland be recognized by Germany or any country outside of the league, under international law a state of war would exist, the belligerency having been recognized; and, without belligerency having been recognized, if the revolution amounted to a sufficient disturbance to constitute war, then, under the strict terms of the constitution itself, it would become the duty of the league to take cognizance of it and to settle it.

Now, it is proposed, as I understand, to leave Germany out. It is very likely that Germany being left out, other neutral nations will remain out, exactly as they have now notified the Allies that they will remain out of a blockade of German ports in the event Germany does not sign. Notice has already been served by Norway and Sweden and Switzerland and Holland and Denmark, as I understand, that in the event the Germans refuse to sign they will not be parties to the proposed blockade of German ports.

I can see readily they would say, "If you leave Germany out of this league, if she is not invited to become and does not become a member of the league, immediately we, the neutral nations that have taken no part in this war, will continue to maintain our neutrality and refuse to enter the league." Upon the recognition of belligerency by any party war exists exactly as was the case in our Civil War. It was an international war and so declared by the Supreme Court of the United States and by all international authorities, although it was a revolution. Under those facts it becomes the duty of the league of nations to deal with exactly that condition under article 11 of the proposed constitution.

Any war or threat of war, whether immediately affecting any of the members of the league or not, is hereby declared a matter of concern to the whole league, and the league shall take any action that may be deemed wise and effectual to safeguard the peace of nations.

Mr. PHELAN (continuing the reading)—

In case any such emergency should arise the secretary general shall, on the request of any member of the league, forthwith summon a meeting of the council.

It is also declared to be the fundamental right of each member of the league to bring to the attention of the assembly or of the council any circumstances whatever affecting international relations which threatens to disturb either the peace or the good understandings between nations upon which peace depends.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon me, I wish he would emphasize that language. "Between nations," is the language.

Mr. PHELAN. The Senator from Mississippi desires that the language be emphasized, and I will repeat it:

It is also declared to be the fundamental right of each member of the league to bring to the attention of the assembly or of the council any circumstance whatever affecting international relations—

"International relations," I emphasize—which threatens to disturb either the peace or the good understanding between nations—

I emphasize "between nations"— upon which peace depends.

Mr. FALL. May I interrupt the Senator? He has emphasized the terms under the suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi. May I ask him for his own opinion as a lawyer? Does he not believe the emphasis upon the latter clause which he has just read shows that international relations were not referred to in the first clause?

Mr. PHELAN. I will repeat it.

Any war or threat of war, whether immediately affecting any of the members of the league or not—

Mr. FALL. Exactly. That does not refer to international relations.

Mr. PHELAN (reading)— is hereby declared a matter of concern to the whole league, and the league shall take any action that may be deemed wise and effectual to safeguard the peace of nations.

Mr. FALL. That is the point. If the Senator will allow me, the first clause does not refer to international relations and makes it the business of the league to consider any question of war. The second clause which the Senator is emphasizing does refer to international relations.

Mr. PHELAN. Civil society is a compact between individuals, but the league of nations is a compact between nations. Hence we must construe everything that appears here as being of an international character. It can not therefore be contended that a revolutionary party arising in one State, threatening the authority of the government of that State, should be a sufficient cause to call on the league to put down the revolution. This league of nations, as such, is not concerned in internecine or civil war. They are only concerned in a war between nations; and hence if there were a revolution in Ireland or in Mexico, it would be beyond the power of the league under this constitution to intervene without exceeding its authority.

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. PHELAN. I yield.

Mr. FALL. May I suggest to the Senator that we take the case of Cuba for instance. The President of the United States recommended intervention by the United States in the Cuban revolution because the revolution threatened the peace of this country, and the Congress of the United States declared war upon Spain upon the message of the President of the United States, one of the grounds of which was that the conditions existing in Cuba threatened the peace of this country, and therefore we were justified in intervening, and under international law the Senator knows we were justified in intervening.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator from California will pardon an interruption there, that same right would still remain.

Mr. FALL. I do not agree with the Senator. That is the difference between us.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It would be a right growing up outside of the covenant to keep the peace of the world. It would grow up out of the right of the United States in that case, or any other nation under similar circumstances. It is not a right coming under the league. It is a right existing outside of the league.

Mr. FALL. May I suggest that the Senator from Mississippi always closes a subject by asserting something dogmatically, with which others of course do not agree to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have asserted nothing dogmatically, because the President of the United States did assert this right when there was no league, and that very fact proves that the right existing outside of any league, it is not a right which depends upon the league.

Mr. FALL. The point I am attempting to make is that with the league the United States could no longer assert this right.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, in the case of Cuba Spanish atrocities drew the attention of the people of the United States to the conditions of a neighboring people, and war was precipitated by an emotional wave following the sinking of the Maine. I am not disposed to agree even with the President of the United States in his message, if it is correct as stated, that the internal or internecine war in Cuba in any way affected the peace of the United States or the peace of the world. The people probably should have been allowed to win their independence by the sword, as the Cuban revolutionists were in a fair way of doing, without the assistance of the United States. But the United States intervened, not under any compulsion but that of sentiment, and an alleged attack by Spain upon its warship, and there were a great many men in Congress who were very much opposed at that time to intervention.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. PHELAN. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to inquire of the Senator whether he is in favor of the pending resolution. I have not been able to deduce his position on it from the debate.

Mr. PHELAN. I see a certain unanimity in the Chamber, much to my surprise, in favor of the pending resolution, and that drives one to the necessity of discussing some other subject. I am discussing the subject that was raised by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. I do not believe, I wish to reiterate, that the league of nations will have any authority under the proposed draft to intervene where there is a revolution, because, in the case of Ireland, I am disposed to believe that it will now and again be in revolutionary state, and I would be loath to believe the league of nations, which I am disposed to favor, would assert its authority in denying people the privilege of fighting for their freedom.

I think my position is fortified by the application made by the Japanese Government to the conference in Paris for the recognition of free immigration and racial equality. The conference in Paris denied the request of the Japanese Government for such recognition. What does that signify? That by no construction can it be said that the league of nations would have the authority or the warrant, by the terms of the constitution or otherwise, to question the right of the United States to deny free immigration, which we grant to all other people, if you please, and to deny race equality to the orientals; and therefore it could not, as domestic policy, be construed as threatening the peace of the world.

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator yield just a moment?

Mr. PHELAN. I yield.

Mr. FALL. We disagree so fundamentally that I want to see just how badly I am wrong in my construction. I would like to ask the Senator what is his construction of article 14? I will state the case to the Senator as I understand it. He seems to think, as I gather, that the Japanese immigration question would not be a subject of consideration by the league of nations. That is putting it in a few words. Is that the contention of the Senator?

Mr. PHELAN. That is my contention.

Mr. FALL. Then what does the Senator believe to be the meaning of the provision of article 13, that—disputes as to the interpretation of a treaty, as to any question of international law, as to the existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of any international obligation, or as to the extent and nature of the reparation to be made for any such breach, are declared to be among those which are generally suitable for submission to arbitration.

Mr. PHELAN. To what article does the Senator refer?

Mr. FALL. It is in article 13. If the Senator will yield me his attention for a moment——

Mr. PHELAN. I am listening.

Mr. FALL. I may entirely misunderstand the contention of Japan and the questions between Japan and this country.

Under our immigration laws the citizens of other countries, except those definitely excluded, are granted equal privileges in this country. In the Japanese treaty, while the right of Japanese citizens to come here and become citizens of the United States or to acquire property or to attend public schools is not specifically set forth, there is the favored-nation clause, under the terms of which, as the Senator well knows, rights granted citizens of any other country under treaties dealing with the same subject would be extended to the Japanese. That, in short, is the claim that the Japanese Government has made with reference to the treatment of Japanese citizens in this country. It becomes directly a question of treaty right whether they are entitled to come in here with the privileges and immunities of citizens of other countries, guaranteed them under the favored-nation clause.

Mr. PHELAN. I do not desire to prolong the discussion. I should like to address myself to the Senate on the subject of the Japanese and their treaty rights on some other occasion. But as a general proposition of international law, the most-favored-nation clause would not apply whatever to the rights of naturalization and citizenship in the absence of specific provisions. Our treaty with Japan of 1911 was a treaty of commerce and navigation, and it gives Japan commercial privileges, the right to erect, for instance, a business house upon a city lot, not the ownership of agricultural lands which other nationals enjoy, and it has never been contended seriously in international law that where one nation is excluded by statute from the right of naturalization by reason of the color of the skin, that the favored-nation clause by itself would repeal the statute. I do not believe that has ever been contended.

Mr. FALL. It has been contended. However, I understood the Senator to say that the league of nations would have nothing to do with our immigration laws, not with our naturalization laws, but our immigration laws or treaties.

Mr. PHELAN. I still contend that the favored-nation clause as expressed in the Japanese treaty of 1911 gives no such right of free immigration, the Senate having modified it to cover that point, and there is a misunderstanding concerning the significance and scope of the favored-nation clause in this respect in the mind of the Senator. It does not convey to one nation all the rights to its nationals possessed by another nation. It is limited and confined to the subject matter of the treaty in which it is contained, and the Japanese treaty, by attached memoranda, protects us and removes possible misunderstanding.

Mr. FALL. Then, if there is such a misunderstanding of the situation and conflict of opinion under section 13, it is clearly the duty of the league of nations to settle it.

Mr. PHELAN. I do not desire to interfere with the consideration of the resolution which is now before the Senate and which interests me very much. I am in favor of the resolution, I will say in answer to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], and I trust that it shall prevail.

I may say for the information of certain Senators who have worried as to the propriety of the Senate of the United States passing a resolution of this kind, that from the very beginning of the Republic there are illustrious precedents, which I could cite if the question should arise, showing that it has been the policy of the Senate and of Congress in every way to encourage the people struggling for freedom to possess their freedom—and that is the spirit of the league of nations—and I will also inform the Senate that in correspondence with certain Englishmen of liberal mind they believe that any public opinion created by the American press or by the American Congress in favor of better treatment for Ireland will be welcomed by the present administration of Great Britain. It requires reinforcement. There is a disposition over there to permanently settle the Irish question, but the George administration is supported by a large body of Tories and reactionaries who are without sympathy in a matter of this kind, and Lloyd-George can not afford, having no party of his own, to alienate the support of any faction. I am credibly informed that the George administration would welcome the creation of a sound public opinion in America on this subject, and one of the ways of creating public opinion is for public bodies, from the humblest chamber of commerce to the Senate of the United States, to clearly express their sympathy and their sentiments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments of the committee will be reported.

The SECRETARY. The committee proposes to strike out all the paragraphs of the four whereases found on page 1 of the printed resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be agreed to, without objection.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 3, after the word "Versailles," insert the words "to endeavor."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be agreed to, without objection.

The SECRETARY. After the words "to secure," in the same line—line 3—strike out the words "if possible."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be agreed to, without objection.

The SECRETARY. In lines 3 and 4 strike out the words "the representatives chosen by the people of Ireland, to wit."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be agreed to, without objection.

The SECRETARY. In line 6, at the end of the line, strike out "said representatives" and insert "they."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be agreed to, without objection.

The SECRETARY. In lines 7, 8, and 9 strike out the words "and ask international recognition of the Government, republican in form, established by the people of Ireland."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be agreed to, without objection.

The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

Mr. BORAH. I ask for a yea-and-nay vote on the final passage of the resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when Mr. DILLINGHAM'S name was called). I desire to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. He is paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and vote "yea."

While on my feet I wish to announce that the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] is absent on account of illness and that he is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT].

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. As he is absent, I transfer that pair to the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and vote "yea."

Mr. McCORMICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON]. As he is absent, I transfer that pair to the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and vote "yea."

Mr. NEWBERRY (when Mr. TOWNSEND'S name was called). I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is still detained from the Chamber by serious illness. He is paired with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. If the senior Senator from Michigan were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], which I transfer to the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], and vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a standing pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. My pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] has already been announced, but I transfer that pair to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] and vote "yea."

Mr. CALDER (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY]. If he were present, he would vote as I have done on this question. Therefore I will let my vote stand.

Mr. HARRIS. My colleague, the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], is detained by illness.

Mr. KIRBY. I wish to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], is necessarily absent on important business. He is paired with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND].

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD];

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN];

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL]; and

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS].

The result was announced—yeas 60, nay 1, as follows:

TREATY OF PEACE.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator yield to me, in order that I may ask unanimous consent to bring up a resolution?

Mr. CURTIS. I will. I did not object to the consideration of the other resolution, and so I shall consent to the consideration of this one.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask unanimous consent that Senate resolution No. 64, submitted by me on the 4th instant, and which has been reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, directing the Committee on Foreign Relations to investigate whether copies of the peace treaty with Germany are in the city of New York, by whom and how they were obtained, and so forth, be taken up for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Chair lays the resolution before the Senate.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 64), as follows:

Whereas the Senator from Idaho, Mr. BORAH, has stated in the Senate that certain interests in the city of New York have secured copies of the peace treaty with Germany, while the American people have been unable to secure one; and

Whereas the Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. LODGE, has stated in the Senate that he knows of four such copies of said treaty of peace with Germany now in New York, and that the only place where it is not allowed to come is the United States Senate; and

Whereas the Senator from Idaho, Mr. BORAH, has stated that the interests now having possession of said copies of said treaty are peculiarly interested in the treaty: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be, and it hereby is, authorized and directed to investigate the matter with a view to ascertaining the facts, and particularly to ascertain and report to the Senate the names of the persons, corporations, or interests which have secured copies of said treaty and from whom they were secured and by what methods, and also to ascertain and report to the Senate in what manner and to what extent said interests are "particularly" interested in said treaty. For these purposes the Committee on Foreign Relations, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and it is, authorized to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with the same, the expenses thereof, including the cost of travel, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

Mr. KENYON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President: How many more resolutions of this character are there? Is this the last one? I am not objecting.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is the last one until 2 o'clock. Then another resolution comes up.

Mr. KENYON. Another resolution comes up at 2 o'clock?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Another one comes up at 2 o'clock.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. This is a resolution which we have all been told would go through by unanimous consent.

Mr. KENYON. I hope it may. There are some bills on the calendar which are of a great deal of importance, one particularly affecting the soldiers, and I have been waiting for the speakers to get through, so that we might take it up. I am raising no objection to the resolution, but I hope there will be speedy action on it.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] has an amendment pending to the resolution, and I think it would be proper that he should be here. I make the point that there is no quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	Lenroot	Ransdell
Beckham	France	Lodge	Reed
Borah	Gay	McCormick	Sheppard
Brandegee	Gronna	McKellar	Simmons
Calder	Harris	McNary	Smoot
Capper	Harrison	Nelson	Spencer
Chamberlain	Hitchcock	New	Sutherland
Culberson	Johnson, Calif.	Newberry	Walsh, Mass.
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Walsh, Mont.
Dial	Kellogg	Nugent	Watson
Dillingham	Kenyon	Page	Williams
Elkins	Knox	Phelan
Fall	La Follette	Phipps

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to announce, and let the announcement stand for the day, that my colleague [Mr. TRAMMELL] is absent on account of illness. He has a general pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT].

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] was absent yesterday and is absent to-day on important business at the Naval Academy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I renew my request for unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate resolution 64.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Unanimous consent has been given. The question is on the amendment heretofore offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG].

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, just a word on the amendment. I offered this amendment because I thought it was broader than the original resolution. I had a resolution ready to offer at the time the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] offered his resolution, but he was recognized first and offered his resolution, and I could not, of course, present mine at that time. His resolution simply recited that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] made statements relative to the delivery of the treaty to certain interests or persons in the city of New York and asks that the Committee on Foreign Relations be authorized to investigate the matter. The amendment which I have offered does not name the Senator from Idaho nor the Senator from Massachusetts. I have no doubt they have no objection to being named; they are fully capable of taking care of themselves; but they are not the only Senators who have charged, not only in the Senate but outside, that the treaty is in New York in the hands of private citizens and that it is being circulated publicly in Germany. I wish the whole subject to be investigated.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Is there any doubt that under the resolution offered by the Senator from Nebraska we can enter into the whole field of investigation? I understood when the resolution was read that, while the preamble recited the statements of the Senator from Massachusetts and myself, nevertheless the authority was sufficiently broad to cover the field.

Mr. KELLOGG. The resolution offered by the Senator from Nebraska simply recites the charge that the treaty has been furnished to certain people in this country. It does not purport to investigate its broadcast circulation in foreign countries.

Mr. BORAH. That it is being published in foreign countries I think is a conceded proposition. The only question which was in my mind when I made the statement was that the treaty was in this country, and I think that is practically conceded now; but how it got here, and so forth, is a question which we want investigated, and I understand that that can be done under the resolution offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. KELLOGG. Furthermore, I think we should know to what extent it is being published in foreign countries. I think we should know why it is given out in foreign countries and to certain citizens of this country and denied to the Senate.

There is one clause in the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska that I omitted that I should be very glad to add, and I ask to perfect my amendment by adding at the end thereof the following:

And also to ascertain to what extend said interests are "particularly" interested in said treaty.

I shall be glad to include that clause, and I intended it should be part of the resolution.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I am amazed at the position now taken by the Senator from Massachusetts. Yesterday he wanted immediate action.

Mr. LODGE. I want it now; and if the Senator will stop talking, we will pass this resolution.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yesterday, and day before yesterday, he was for this resolution—this identical resolution; the resolution which was introduced day before yesterday, which was printed, and which was before the Senate all day yesterday.

Mr. LODGE. Let me save the Senator's time. I will admit that I was inconsistent. I will admit that I thought that resolution would do. I think now this is a better one. I am perfectly willing to put in my name, and I know the Senator from Idaho will vote the same way, if it will please and soothe the Senator; but let us have a vote on it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; I propose to have a vote, and I propose to have it this afternoon; and I propose to have the country understand that the Senator who was so anxious to stand here upon the floor of the Senate and upon his own responsibility charge that copies of the peace treaty were in New York, in the hands of New York interests——

Mr. LODGE. I never said that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK (continuing). Is now anxious to have somebody else investigated, and somebody else's statement investigated.

Mr. LODGE. Not in the least.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] takes the proper position. He came in here upon his responsibility, and he made certain allegations. He is ready to go before an investigating committee and have his statements investigated. But the Senator from Massachusetts, after having this printed resolution before him all day yesterday; after having known exactly what its phraseology was; after having had all the experience of many years as a legislator, suddenly, during the night, has seen a new light, and he wants an investigation in some general terms of matters already admitted.

What do we care whether the printed copies are on sale in Germany or not? If they are on sale in Germany, that is a German matter. What we are interested in knowing is this: Are those copies in New York? Are they in the hands of interests in New York that have no legitimate right to their possession? Was the Senator from Massachusetts justified when he came in here and charged that they were in New York?

That is what we want to know, and my resolution provides for finding out. My resolution provides for finding out whether they are there. My resolution provides for finding out how they got there. My resolution provides for finding out who put them there. There is no possible reason for amending that resolution, except to escape the direct responsibility which the Senator from Massachusetts assumed when he brought this matter in here.

The Senator from Idaho is satisfied. He has made grave charges, and is ready to stand by them. He does not want his name eliminated. He does not want a resolution brought in here in vague terms.

Let me read some language from this resolution:

Whereas it has been stated in the Senate—

This is the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] at the request of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Whereas it has been stated in the Senate that the proposed peace treaty, which has been delivered to Germany, is being sold upon the streets of Berlin and openly circulated in Germany and other countries—

What do we care whether Germany is selling the peace treaty upon her streets or not? That is not the question. The question is the integrity of the American Government and officials of the American Government. Have our representatives in Paris permitted interests in New York to get possession of these copies of the peace treaty for their own selfish use? Did the Senator from Massachusetts see such a copy in New York, and spend an hour and a half in reading it?

Mr. LODGE. I have said so, and I decline to repeat it. Does the Senator question the truth of what I have said?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I say that the statement the Senator made upon the floor of the Senate is one which I have a right to ask to have investigated. If he objects to having it investigated, let him take the responsibility.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to its being investigated, and it shall be investigated. I have said it here, and what I say is the truth. Does the Senator deny it?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then why does the Senator ask for these amendments eliminating his name?

Mr. LODGE. When the Senator stops talking I will tell him.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I hope the Senator will wait until I get through.

We do not care anything about the first clause. It is not the subject in which the American people are interested. We want to know whether our representatives in Paris have allowed, through illegitimate means or any other means, business interests in New York to get possession of this treaty which belongs only to the Government.

Whereas it is claimed that certain people or interests in the city of New York have also received from members of the American Peace Commission copies of said treaty—

Who claims it?

Whereas it is claimed—

My resolution shows who claims it. My resolution shows that two Senators of the United States have claimed it and asserted it upon the floor. Why resort to vague terms? Why not be specific? There is nothing of any dignity to investigate except these two solemn charges, made upon their own responsibility by two Senators of the United States.

Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Foreign Relations Committee be, and it hereby is, directed and authorized to investigate said charges——

What charges? Not the charge of the Senator from Idaho; not the charge of the Senator from Massachusetts. Their names are eliminated. We ought to have another investigation, really, to find out what it is that has happened in 24 hours, what new light has burst upon the consciousness of certain Senators, that makes this resolution, which was so good yesterday, which they were so anxious to have immediately passed yesterday, out of date and out of order to-day.

Now, you can beat this resolution of mine; you can make that vague substitute if you please; but the American people and public opinion in the United States will not be satisfied with that procedure.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota yesterday showed me a form of resolution which I thought much better as a resolution for investigation than the loose, ill-drawn thing that had been presented to us. I am going to ask him to withdraw it, however. I have not delayed this resolution one minute. The Senator from Nebraska delayed it a whole day. He put it over to begin with.

Mr. President, let it pass as he introduced it. Nobody can object to anything that is asked there. I stated on the floor that I saw, and had in my hand and looked over for an hour and a half, a copy of the treaty; and I did. If anyone desires to deny that, he has his opportunity. I heard also of three other copies. They had nothing to do with any interest, so far as I knew, or any financial body of any kind; and if there has been bribery and corruption, which the Senator talks about, who was bribed? Who could have been bribed to give it up? Nobody but the agents of the administration in Paris. There has been no bribery or corruption about it. They have been sent over here and sent quite freely, in my opinion. I only know of the existence of four.

I hope this resolution will pass, and we will take it up and investigate it. I am going ask my friend the Senator from Minnesota to withdraw his amendment, which I think a much better one, so that it may stand and that the Senator from Nebraska may feel soothed about having the name of the Senator from Idaho and my name there, which, of course, is a matter of the most total indifference to me. I will take my chance with public opinion. I have taken it for a good many years; and I will ask the Senator from Minnesota to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. KELLOGG obtained the floor.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a moment?

Mr. KELLOGG. I will.

Mr. FALL. I had hoped that the Senator was going to congratulate the people of the United States upon discovering another mouthpiece who knew their sentiments so well as the Senator from Nebraska has announced that he does.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, well, that of course is a natural attribute of the part.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield while I make a statement in withdrawing this amendment?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. KELLOGG. I am perfectly willing to accommodate the Senator from Massachusetts and withdraw the amendment, but in doing so I should like to make a brief statement.

I think it will be of interest to the American people to know that a treaty denied to the Senate of the United States is being sold in bookstalls all over Europe.

Mr. MCCORMICK. Mr. President, the Associated Press has received a bulletin that the German Government has mailed copies of the treaty to the Members of the Senate and the Members of the House of Representatives.

Mr. KELLOGG. It is charged, not alone by the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Idaho but in the Associated Press, that this treaty is being published broadcast in Europe. It has not reached this country except through the channels apparently created by members of the peace commission. I want to ascertain why it is denied to the Senate and published abroad. Furthermore, when it becomes known that the Senate, which is entitled to know the contents of the peace treaty, has been ignored, while the text has been furnished individuals in this country and furnished broadcast in Europe, this fact will be deeply resented. I have not any doubt that the Senator realizes this, and he has tried to gloss the situation over by evincing great indignation toward the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Idaho because they have stated an undisputed fact in the Senate.

I do not understand why that statement should so arouse his indignation unless it is directed mainly against the men who have furnished the copies and denied them to the Senate. If the Senator thinks he can make political capital by that sort of talk to the people of this country, let him do so. I desire a full investigation. I prepared the resolution for introduction, but the Senator succeeded in presenting his resolution first. He did so because he thought he could make some political capital out of it. I am willing to withdraw this amendment and let the original resolution pass and have the subject fully investigated.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I say just a word before this resolution passes? We have 10 minutes yet.

It is my judgment that this entire matter could be investigated under either resolution. I have not, therefore, seen any necessity of offering an amendment. So far as I am concerned, I am deeply interested to know why it is, if I have been correctly informed, that certain interests in New York are and have been in possession of this document. My primary desire is to have the document. That is of the utmost concern to me. My second desire is to know why it is that certain interests in New York are so peculiarly interested in this matter as, through either honest or dishonest means, to secure this treaty in advance of the body which has to deal with it. I think before this debate closes, 60 days from now, whether this investigation goes on or not, I will demonstrate to the satisfaction of some people in this country why it is that certain interests in New York are so peculiarly active in this matter.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I want to make an inquiry. I will say by way of preliminary that I want this resolution passed, but I want to have it broad enough so that the evidence can be brought here as to the circulation of this instrument in Europe. That is a fact separate and independent from the question as to who made these charges or as to the particular interests in New York that may have obtained possession of copies.

If the thing I desire can be done under the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska, I am entirely content. There is, I notice, in the preamble this language which possibly will cover it, and if it will be so construed then I have nothing to ask. The language is this: It is found in the second "whereas":

And that the only place where it is not allowed to come is the United States.

If that would be construed in a broad enough way, of course, it would raise the question, Has it been circulated in other countries, and if so, to what extent?

I should like to ask the Senator who offered the resolution if he thinks the evidence could be introduced under that language?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. As a member of the committee, I shall favor placing that construction upon the resolution.

Mr. REED. I am content, then, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

The resolution was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2480) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be read for Senate amendments, the amendments of the Senate committee to be considered first.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the head of "Relieving distress, etc.," on page 6, line 16, after the word "sanatoria," to strike out "$375,000" and insert "$410,000," so as to read:

For the relief and care of destitute Indians not otherwise provided for, and for the prevention and treatment of tuberculosis, trachoma, smallpox, and other contagious and infectious diseases, including transportation of patients to and from hospitals and sanatoria, $410,000, of which $10,000 shall be used to care for old and indigent Indians in western Washington, and of which sum $25,000 shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 19, before the word "bridges," to insert "roads and," so as to read:

For construction, lease, purchase, repair, and improvement of school and agency buildings, including the purchase of necessary lands and the installation, repair, and improvement of heating, lighting, power, and sewerage and water systems in connection therewith, $335,000: Provided, That this appropriation shall be available for the payment of salaries and expenses of persons employed in the supervision of construction or repair work of roads and bridges and on school and agency buildings in the Indian Service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 20 on page 11.

TREATY OF PEACE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, Senate resolution No. 12.

The Senate resumed the consideration of Senate resolution 12, submitted by Mr. JOHNSON of California on the 20th of May, as follows:

Whereas the peace treaty has been completed and has been delivered to the representatives of Germany; and

Whereas a synopsis only of the treaty has been given publicity in the United States, and our people are entitled to know its full contents and to what, if any, engagements they may have been committed; and

Whereas it is reported in the press that the entire treaty has been cabled to the State Department and is now in the possession of the State Department: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, forthwith to transmit to the Senate the full text of the treaty of peace completed at the Paris conference and delivered to the representatives of Germany.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask the Senator from California if he will not agree to temporarily lay aside the resolution. I think we can pass the Indian appropriation bill in half an hour, or in an hour at the outside.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I regret exceedingly that I can not comply with the request of the Senator from Kansas, but I think we can pass the resolution within an hour.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it. The noes have it, and the motion is not agreed to. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2480) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill at line 21, on page 11.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the head of "Indian Service inspectors," on page 14, line 2, after the word "field," to insert "away from home or designated headquarters, $25,000," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of six Indian Service inspectors, exclusive of one chief inspector, at salaries not to exceed $2,500 per annum and actual traveling and incidental expenses, and not to exceed $3.50 per diem in lieu of subsistence when actually employed on duty in the field away from home or designated headquarters, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Miscellaneous," subhead "Suppressing Contagious Diseases Among Live Stock of Indians," on page 17, line 10, after the words "period of," to strike out "three years" and insert "one year," and in line 11, after the word "March," to strike out "1918" and insert "1919," so as to make the clause read:

That all of the provisions of an act entitled "An act for the relief of Indians occupying railroad lands in Arizona, New Mexico, or California," approved March 4, 1913 (37 Stat. L., p. 1007), as extended by the act approved April 11, 1916 (39 Stat. L., p. 48), be, and the same are hereby, extended for a period of one year from and after the 4th day of March, 1919.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, under the head of "Arizona and Nw Mexico," on page 21, line 21, after the words "amount of," to strike out "$42,500" and insert "$47,500," so as to make the clause read:

That the amount of $47,500 appropriated by the Indian appropriation act approved March 2, 1917 (39 Stat. L., p. 975), for the construction of two bridges over the Little Colorado and Canyon Diablo Rivers, near the Leupp Indian Agency, Ariz., is hereby reappropriated for the same purposes as provided in said act, reimbursable as provided in said act, and to remain a charge and lien upon the lands and funds of the Navajo Tribe of Indians until paid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 5, to insert:

For reimbursement of Yuma County, Ariz., for traveling and other expenses incurred by its county officers in the arrest, prosecution, and commitment of four Indian youths of the Colorado River Reservation to State institutions, $167.75, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 10, to insert:

The Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John Flanigan the sum of $300 for a team of horses lost and destroyed in a flood in 1914 while said horses were being used by the employees of the Indian Bureau in the survey of Indian land in Arizona.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 17, to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, and under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, to cause to be issued to The Gospel Missionary Union, which has been engaged in mission work among the Navajo Indians since 1896, a patent in fee for that particular tract of land on the Western Navajo Reservation in Arizona, not exceeding 160 acres in area, which it has continuously used and occupied for mission purposes from a date prior to the Executive order of January 8, 1900, withdrawing from sale and settlement the lands which now constitute the said reservation; said patent in fee to be issued on a legal description of the lands so used.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, under the head of "California," on page 25, line 4, after "$3,500," to strike out "in all, $27,500" and insert "for construction of employees' cottage recently destroyed by fire, $3,500; in all, $31,000," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 100 Indian pupils at the Fort Bidwell Indian school, Calif., including pay of superintendent, $24,000; for general repairs and improvements, $3,500; for construction of employees' cottage recently destroyed by fire, $3,500; in all, $31,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, under the head of "Kansas," on page 26, line 23, after "$15,000," to strike out "in all, $167,600," and insert "for water and fire-protection system, $20,000; in all, $187,600," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 6. For support and education of 750 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Haskell Institute, Lawrence, Kans., and for pay of superintendent, $152,600; for general repairs and improvements, $15,000; for water and fire-protection system, $20,000; in all, $187,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, under the head of "Minnesota," on page 32, after line 17, to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, at his discretion, the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the principal sum on deposit to the credit of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, arising under section 7 of the act of January 14, 1889, entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," and to use the same for the purpose of promoting civilization and self-support among the said Indians in manner and for purposes provided for in said act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, after line 3, to insert:

The Secretary of the Treasury is directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Chippewa Indians of the State of Minnesota, proceeds of the final judgment obtained in the Court of Claims against the United States in case No. 30447, entitled "The Mille Lac Band of Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota v. The United States," the following sums: To Wah-we-yea-cumig and Ain-dus-o-geshig, Mille Lac chiefs, each $5,000; to Mege-zee, a Mille Lac chief, $500; to the heirs of Go-gee, a Mille Lac chief, $500; to the heirs of Nay-gwa-nay-be-ke-wain-zee, a Mille Lac chief, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 9, under the head of "Mississippi," on page 33, line 23, after the words "Secretary of the Interior," to insert:

Provided, That any unexpended balance of said appropriation may be used for relief of distress of said Indians and paying the salary and expenses of one special agent, who shall be a physician, one farmer, and one field matron.

So as to make the clause read:

SEC. 9. That the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $75,000 for the full-blood Choctaw Indians of Mississippi in the Indian appropriation act of May 25, 1918, is hereby reappropriated for the same purposes for which originally appropriated and for aiding the common schools attended by the children of said Indians under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That any unexpended balance of said appropriation may be used for relief of distress of said Indians and paying the salary and expenses of one special agent, who shall be a physician, one farmer, and one field matron.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 10, under the head of "Montana," on page 36, line 12, after the words "Secretary of the Interior," to insert:

Provided, That not to exceed $25,000 of this amount shall be available for expenses incurred during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

So as to make the clause read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States the sum of $150,000 of any tribal funds on deposit to the credit of the Crow Indians in the State of Montana, and to expend the same for making necessary improvements to the irrigation systems in the Big Horn Valley on the Crow Reservation in Montana, said sum, or such part thereof as may be used for the purpose indicated, to be reimbursed to the tribe under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That not to exceed $25,000 of this amount shall be available for expenses incurred during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, after line 15, to strike out:

That so much of the Indian appropriation act of March 1, 1907 (34 Stat. L., 1015, 1035), as relates to the disposal of surplus unallotted lands within the Blackfeet Indian Reservation in Montana, is hereby repealed, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to make allotments under existing laws within the said reservation to any Indians of said Blackfeet Tribe not heretofore allotted, living six months after the approval of this act, and thereafter to prorate all unallotted and otherwise unreserved lands therein among the Indians who have been allotted or may be entitled to rights within said reservation: Provided, That of the lands so allotted 80 acres of each allotment shall be designated as a homestead by the allottee and be evidenced by a trust patent and shall remain inalienable until Congress shall otherwise direct: Provided further, That the Blackfeet tribal rolls shall close as of six months after the approval of this act and thereafter no additional names shall be added to said rolls: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to repeal the grants of land made by the act of March 1, 1907, to religious institutions and to the State of Montana for school purposes, nor repeal the authority of the Secretary of the Interior to dispose of any land within said reservation suitable for town-site purposes, as provided by that act: Provided, That the State of Montana in making indemnity school selections shall be confined to nonmineral and nonirrigable lands: Provided further, That the provisions of the act of March 1, 1907, which require a division of the funds received from the sale of the surplus lands immediately upon the date of approval of the allotments of land are hereby repealed: Provided, That the lands within said reservation, whether allotted, unallotted, reserved, set aside for town-site purposes, granted to the State of Montana for school purposes, or otherwise disposed of, shall be subject to all the laws of the United States prohibiting the introduction of intoxicants into the Indian country until otherwise provided by Congress: Provided, That the lands may be leased by the allottee for mineral purposes, under such rules and regulations and upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided further, That allotments herein provided for shall be made under such rules and regulations as the said Secretary may prescribe, and trust patents shall be issued therefor as provided by the aforesaid act of March 1, 1907, except as to the homestead hereinbefore mentioned.

And insert:

That so much of the Indian appropriation act of March 1, 1907 (34th Stats. L., pp. 1015, 1035), as relates to the disposal of surplus unallotted lands within the Blackfeet Indian Reservation in Montana, is hereby repealed, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to make allotments under existing laws within the said reservation to any Indians of said Blackfeet Tribe not heretofore allotted, living six months after the approval of this act, and thereafter to prorate all unallotted and otherwise unreserved lands therein among the Indians who have been allotted or may be entitled to rights within said reservation: Provided, That of the lands so allotted 80 acres of each allotment shall be designated as a homestead by the allottee and be evidenced by a trust patent and shall remain inalienable and nontaxable until Congress shall otherwise direct: Provided further, That the Blackfeet tribal rolls shall close six months after the approval of this act and thereafter no additional names shall be added to said rolls: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to repeal the grants of land made by the act of March 1, 1907, to religious institutions and to the State of Montana for school purposes, nor repeal the authority of the Secretary of the Interior to dispose of any land within said reservation suitable for town-site purposes, as provided by that act: Provided, That the State of Montana in making indemnity school selections shall be confined to nonmineral and nonirrigable lands: Provided further, That the provisions of the act of March 1, 1907, which require a division of the funds received from the sale of the surplus lands immediately upon the date of the approval of the allotments of land are hereby repealed: Provided, That the lands within said reservation, whether allotted, unallotted, reserved, set aside for town-site purposes, granted to the State of Montana for school purposes, or otherwise disposed of, shall be subject to all the laws of the United States prohibiting the introduction of intoxicants into the Indian country until otherwise provided by Congress: And provided further, That any and all minerals, including coal, oil, and gas, are hereby reserved for the benefit of the Blackfeet Tribe of Indians until Congress shall otherwise direct, and patents hereafter issued shall contain a reservation accordingly: Provided, That the lands containing said minerals may be leased under such rules and regulations and upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided further, That allotments herein provided for shall be made under such rules and regulations as the said Secretary may prescribe, and trust patents shall be issued therefor as provided by the aforesaid act of March 1, 1907, except as to the homestead hereinbefore mentioned.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, may I ask the chairman of the committee if these items are exactly the same as the provisions in the bill which was before the Senate at the last session and which did not pass?

Mr. CURTIS. There are two provisions added, one exempting from taxation the property allotted to the Indians, which was left out of the House provision and which should have been put in, and the other item added reserves the mineral lands to the Indian tribes until further determined by Congress.

Mr. GRONNA. It is not reserved in the name of the Government but reserved to the Indians?

Mr. CURTIS. To the Indians, because it belongs to the tribe.

Mr. GRONNA. I agree with the Senator. Those are the only two changes?

Mr. CURTIS. The only two changes.

Mr. GRONNA. I have no objection to the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 6, page 46.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, on page 46, at the end of the items for North Dakota, I ask that an item be inserted; I will say to the chairman of the committee that I think the matter was overlooked. It was not in the original estimate, but it is in the supplemental estimate, and it was incorporated into the bill of last year.

Mr. CURTIS. I asked unanimous consent that the committee amendments should be first considered, and that consent was granted.

Mr. GRONNA. This has the force of a committee amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. It is not a committee amendment; but if the Senator will wait until we get through with the reading of the bill, I will gladly go back and consider the Senator's amendment.

Mr. GRONNA. Then I ask that all the items for North Dakota may go over.

Mr. CURTIS. Rather than do that, I will consent to the consideration of the Senator's amendment at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent for the consideration of an amendment at this time. Is there objection? There being no objection, the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 46, after line 6, add the following:

That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $676, to reimburse Benson County, N. Dak., for money actually paid by said county to the State of North Dakota for care of three insane Indians—Mary Josephine Pejihutaskana, Alfred Littlewind, and Joseph Langer, in the North Dakota State Insane Asylum.

Mr. CURTIS. I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in section 17, under the head of "Oklahoma," on page 46, line 14, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$25,000" and insert "$30,000," so as to make the clause read:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, at his discretion, the sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the funds on deposit to the credit of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma, for the support of the agency and pay of employees maintained for their benefit.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 25, to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$40,000," so as to make the clause read:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, at his discretion, not to exceed the sum of $40,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the money on deposit to the credit of the Osage Tribe of Indians in Oklahoma, to be expended for the support, education, and systematic vocational instruction of Osage children: Provided, That the expenditure of said money shall include the renewal of the present contract with the St. Louis Mission Boarding School, except that there shall not be expended more than $300 for annual support and education of any one pupil.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, after line 8, to strike out:

That the Council of the Osage Indians in Oklahoma be authorized to elect or appoint a general tribal attorney to represent them in all legal matters affecting said tribe: Provided, The salary of said attorney, to be paid out of the tribal funds, shall not exceed $10,000 per year: And provided further, That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall be denied the right to approve or overrule the election of said attorney.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 1, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$30,000" and insert "$35,000," so as to make the clause read:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, at his discretion, not to exceed $35,000 of the funds on deposit to the credit of the Osage Tribe of Indians in Oklahoma and to pay out the same for necessary expenses in connection with oil and gas production on the Osage Reservation, including salaries of employees, rent of quarters for employees, traveling expenses, printing, telegraphing and telephoning, and purchase, repair, and operation of automobiles.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 18, under the subhead "Five Civilized Tribes," on page 51, line 1, after "$205,000," to insert "of which sum $20,000 shall be available for expenditures from April 1, 1919," so as to read:

For expenses of administration of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes, Oklahoma, and the compensation of employees, $205,000, of which sum $20,000 shall be available for expenditures from April 1, 1919.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 21, on page 51.

Mr. CURTIS. On page 51, line 3, the word "reports" should be report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that change will be made.

Mr. CURTIS. On page 51, line 15, the parentheses should be withdrawn from the word "hereafter."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that change will be made.

The next amendment was, on page 51, after line 21, to insert:

For payment of interest upon certain interest-bearing trust funds belonging to the Cherokee Nation, which funds arose from the judgment of the Court of Claims of May 18, 1905, in favor of said nation, and were paid into and retained in the Treasury of the United States, as follows, to wit: On the amount of the fund which arose from item 1 of said judgment as such amount was determined and paid to the Secretary of the Interior on July 2, 1906, to be by him credited to the principal of the Cherokee school fund, interest at 5 per cent per annum from July 2, 1906, to and including May 26, 1910; on the amount of the fund which arose from item 4 of said judgment, as such amount was determined and paid to the Secretary of the Interior on July 2, 1906, to be by him credited to the principal of the Cherokee national fund, interest at 5 per cent per annum from July 2, 1906, to and including May 26, 1910; on the original principal sum of item 4 of said judgment, interest at 5 per cent per annum from July 1, 1893, to July 1, 1903, and on the amount of the interest thus accruing interest at 4 per cent per annum from December 29, 1905, to May 14, 1906; and on the aggregate of the sums of the interest for the last two periods hereinabove mentioned, interest at 5 per cent per annum from July 2, 1906, to the date of the passage of this act; and the sum of $27,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay the interest above allowed, is hereby appropriated and authorized to be paid to the Cherokee Nation: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay the amount arising from item 4 of said judgment, with interest thereon as hereinabove provided for, to the agent appointed by the Cherokee Nation acting through its principal chief to receive the same, said payment to be made immediately upon the approval of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, after line 23, to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay out of the tribal funds of the Chickasaw Nation to Geo. D. Rodgers the sum of $367.30 as reimbursement for expenses incurred and paid by him from February 21, 1910, to April 21, 1910, inclusive, in connection with his services as tribal attorney for said Indian nation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, after line 5, to strike out:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Stuart, Lewis, Gordon & Rutherford, out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States belonging to the Creek Nation, the sum of $7,000, being in full settlement of the claim of the said Stuart, Lewis, Gordon & Rutherford against the said Creek Nation for legal services rendered the said Creek Nation employed by authority of an act of the national council of the Creek Nation, approved January 7, 1898, the said sum of $7,000 having been appropriated in payment of said services by an act of the national council of the Creek Nation approved October 18, 1900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 20, under the head of "South Dakota," on page 62, line 12, after the word "superintendent," to strike out "$80,750" and insert "$82,750, of which $2,000 shall be available for expenses necessarily incurred since May 1, 1919"; and in line 15, after the words "in all," to strike out "$90,750" and insert "$92,750," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 20. For support and education of 350 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Flandreau, S. Dak., and for pay of superintendent, $82,750, of which $2,000 shall be available for expenses necessarily incurred since May 1, 1919; for general repairs and improvements, $10,000; in all, $92,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 22, under the head of "Washington," on page 69, line 5, after "1916," to insert:

Provided further, That the funds hereby appropriated shall be available for the reimbursement of Indian and white landowners for improvements and crops destroyed by the Government in connection with the construction of irrigation canals and drains of this project.

So as to make the clause read:

For continuing construction and enlargement of the Wapato irrigation and drainage system, to make possible the utilization of the water supply provided by the act of August 1, 1914 (38 Stats. L., p. 604), for 40 acres of each Indian allotment under the Wapato irrigation project on the Yakima Indian Reservation, Wash., and such other water supply as may be available or obtainable for the irrigation of a total of 120,000 acres of allotted Indian lands on said reservation, $500,000: Provided, That the entire cost of said irrigation and drainage system shall be reimbursed to the United States under the conditions and terms of the act of May 18, 1916: Provided further, That the funds hereby appropriated shall be available for the reimbursement of Indian and white landowners for improvements and crops destroyed by the Government in connection with the construction of irrigation canals and drains of this project.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 23, under the head of "Wisconsin," on page 72, line 20, after the words "payment of," to strike out "$50" and insert "$40," and in line 25, after the word "Indians," to insert:

Provided further, That from the sums heretofore appropriated for said Pottawatomie Indians the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Erik O. Morstad, of Laona, Wis., who has lived with and cared for said Indians for many years, the sum of $5,000.

So as to make the clause read:

For the support and civilization of those portions of the Wisconsin Band of Pottawatomie Indians residing in the States of Wisconsin and Michigan, and to aid said Indians in establishing homes on the lands purchased for them under the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 30, 1913, $15,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, said sum to be reimbursed to the United States out of the appropriation, when made, of the principal due as the proportionate share of said Indians in annuities and moneys of the Pottawatomie Tribe in which they have not shared, as set forth in House Document No. 830, Sixtieth Congress, first session, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to make a per capita payment of $40 to said Indians out of said funds: Provided, That no further expenditures be authorized or made under appropriations heretofore enacted making provisions for the purchase of land and the clearing of same for said Pottawatomie Indians: Provided further, That from the sums heretofore appropriated for said Pottawatomie Indians the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Erik O. Morstad, of Laona, Wis., who has lived with and cared for said Indians for many years, the sum of $5,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I ask the chairman of the committee what this $5,000 is for?

Mr. CURTIS. It is for services rendered by this man in securing the payment of a very large claim these Indians had against the Government of the United States. The money was placed to the credit of the Indians and he was never paid. The payment is recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, by the Secretary of the Interior, and by the Senators from his State, who well know of his services. The committee have carefully considered the item a number of times. It comes out of the funds of these Indians, and this is about the last appropriation that will be made to this band of Indians.

Mr. McKELLAR. It does not state on its face it is for that kind of services. It says, "Who has lived with and cared for said Indians for many years." It is really for legal services.

Mr. CURTIS. He is not a lawyer. It was service of the kind mentioned and advice. This man helped to secure testimony, and the case was settled without ever having gone to the Court of Claims. It was settled in the department, and the department recommends payment to the man as having rendered this service and states it is well worth this sum allowed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is this in full for all services rendered?

Mr. CURTIS. In full for all services, and there is no money they can get outside of this appropriation.

Mr. OWEN. I will ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether any compensation was ever made to the estate of Belt?

Mr. CURTIS. The Belt estate was paid, and when the Belt estate was paid this item was left out for some reason.

The next amendment was, on page 73, after line 3, to insert:

That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000, to be expended under the supervision of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in the purchase of subsistence supplies in relieving cases of actual distress and suffering among those needy St. Croix Indians of Wisconsin whose cases are referred to in report of January 30, 1915, transmitted by the Secretary of the Interior to the House of Representatives March 3, 1915, pursuant to the provisions of the act of Congress of August 1, 1914 (38 Stat. L., 582–605), and printed as House Document No. 1663, Sixty-third Congress, third session.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 73, after line 15, to insert:

That to carry out the provisions of the Chippewa treaty of September 30, 1854 (10 Stat. L., 1109), there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $141,000, in full settlement of the claims against the United States of the St. Croix Chippewa Indians of Wisconsin whose names appear upon the final roll prepared by the Secretary of the Interior pursuant to the said act of August 1, 1914, and which final roll is contained in the said report of the Secretary of the Interior, March 3, 1915, and in said House Document No. 1663.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 74, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to distribute said fund of $141,000 per capita among said Indians appearing upon said final roll, or, in his discretion, the per capita share of each of said Indians may be credited to him and expended by said Secretary for his benefit in such manner, including the purchase of land, as he may deem proper: Provided, That no part of the funds hereby appropriated shall be paid to any person or persons as attorney's fees: Provided further, That where any of said enrolled Indians have died since enrollment the Secretary shall ascertain and pay their pro rata shares to their proper distributees, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe: And provided further, That one-half of said sum shall be expended in the purchase of land in northern Wisconsin for agricultural purposes, such land to be allotted to said St. Croix Chippewa Indians, each Indian to receive land to the value of one-half of his distributive share in the fund appropriated by this act, patents therefor to be issued in accordance with the general allotment laws of the United States. The land so selected shall be situated in organized school districts, and not be purchased in bodies of more than one section, and said bodies shall not adjoin each other. Such land shall be selected by an agent of the Indian Office familiar with lands in northern Wisconsin and an agent to be selected by said St. Croix Chippewa Indians. If these two disagree as to the value or desirability of any particular tract of land, they shall agree upon a third person, who shall act with the two agents aforesaid in determining such matter of disagreement. No land shall be purchased hereunder unless and until the purchasing agents, together with said third person so selected, shall in person go upon each tract so purchased.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, after line 6, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to strike from said final roll the name of Maggie Staples, No. 39 thereof, and also strike therefrom the name or names of any other Indians who shall hereafter be found to have received an allotment of land on any Indian reservation: Provided, That no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be paid to any of the persons whose names shall be so stricken from the final roll by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, after line 15, to insert:

For the construction of a road from the village of Odanah, in the Bad River Reservation, to the south line of said reservation, $20,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, said sum to be reimbursable under such rules, regulations, and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may cooperate with the State of Wisconsin in the construction of said road.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, after line 23, to insert:

That the relinquishment executed on the 8th day of May, 1914, at Hayward, Wis., by John Stone, a member of the Lac Court d' Oreilles Band of Chippewa Indians, by which he relinquished all his right, title, interest, and inheritance to the allotment of Maggie Grover, deceased, allotment No. 761 of said band of Indians, and described as follows: The west fractional half of the northwest quarter of section 18, in township 39 north, of range 8 west of the fourth principal meridian, Wisconsin, containing 74 acres and seventy-three one-hundredths of an acre, be, and the same hereby is, validated, and that the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to issue a patent to the above-described land to Steve Grover, the father of the aforesaid Maggie Grover, deceased.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 25, under the head of "Wyoming," on page 78, line 15, after the word "Indians," to insert "reimbursement to the United States of the expenditures from reimbursable appropriations," and in line 20, after the words "not exceeding," to strike out "$2,175,000" and insert "$2,509,895," so as to make the clause read:

That in addition to the Indian tribal and treaty funds, the expenditure of which is specifically authorized elsewhere in this act, and such sums as may be required for equalization of allotments, education of Indian children, per capita and other payments to Indians, reimbursement to the United States of the expenditures from reimbursable appropriations, and expenditures for the Five Civilized Tribes, in accordance with existing laws, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to expend not exceeding $2,509,895 from funds held by the United States in trust for the respective tribes, for support and civilization of the Indians under the jurisdiction of the following agencies, to wit.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, line 15, after the word "Crow," to strike out "$151,000" and insert "$250,000," so as to make the clause read:

In Montana: Blackfeet, $51,920; Crow, $250,000; Flathead, $40,000; Fort Belknap, $41,000; Fort Peck, $9,000; Rocky Boy, $21,000; Tongue River, $25,394.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, line 21, after the word "Jicarilla," to strike out "$100,105" and insert "$282,000," and in line 22, after the word "Mescalero," to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$75,000," so as to make the clause read:

In New Mexico: Jicarilla, $282,000; Mescalero, $75,000; San Juan, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 26, on page 86, line 22, after the words "United States," to insert "in Arizona or New Mexico," so as to make the clause read:

That hereafter no public lands of the United States in Arizona or New Mexico shall be withdrawn by Executive order, proclamation, or otherwise, for or as an Indian reservation except by act of Congress.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I rise to inquire whether other than committee amendments are now in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment is a committee amendment, and it would be in order to amend the committee amendment.

Mr. KING. I move to amend the committee amendment by inserting the name "Utah."

Mr. CURTIS. I have no objection to that, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Utah will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 86, line 22, after the name "Arizona," it is proposed to insert the name "Utah."

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, if legislation of that kind is necessary, I think it ought to cover the other States as well.

Mr. CURTIS. I am advised that such legislation is not necessary; and there are conditions in some of the States where there are Indians whom it may be necessary to place on public lands where I think we had better leave the matter to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the committee amendment which has been offered by the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. JONES of Washington. I should like to know what special reason there is for making these States an exception?

Mr. CURTIS. The Senators from Arizona and New Mexico probably could inform the Senator better than I can. There have been some Executive order reservations set aside in those two States, and a year ago a provision was inserted in the Indian appropriation bill which, I think, covers this amendment. Therefore, as a member of the committee, I did not oppose the amendment, because I thought it was already covered by the act of the last Congress. Conditions in Arizona and New Mexico are very different in reference to the Indians than they are in any other States. There are many thousands of Indians there, and they have had many acres set aside by Executive order. The reservations there now are exceedingly large; larger than those in any other State. The object of this provision is to prevent any other reservation being set aside by Executive order in those States.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am not making any objection to that. What I am really objecting to is confining it to Arizona and New Mexico.

Mr. CURTIS. I should dislike very much to see the legislation made general, because, as I stated a moment ago——

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is what I want to get a reason for.

Mr. CURTIS. There are a large number of homeless Indians in different States. There are several thousand in the State of California and there are a number in other States, and it may become necessary for the President to set aside a small reservation by Executive order in order to take care of those Indians; and we want that discretion left in the hands of the President of the United States.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kansas yield to me a minute?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield.

Mr. FALL. Does not the Senator think that in a case of that kind the Congress of the United States would unhesitatingly grant any request of the Secretary of the Interior? I, of course, am satisfied to have New Mexico excluded, but I am entirely in accord with the suggestion of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]. I do not think the Secretary of the Interior should have this power which has been exercised. I do not care to go into a discussion of the matter as it has affected us, but I will say that the Santa Fe Railroad and other great railroads have profited to the extent of hundreds of thousands of dollars by this power being left in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior, not that the Secretary intended to benefit those roads, but other parties represented to him that it was necessary to add on year after year. There have been included in the Navajo Indian Reserve, the Jicarilla Indian Reserve, and in other Indian reservations in the State of New Mexico alternate sections of land belonging to certain railroads, and it has then been perfectly easy for the railroads to get such land exchanged for lands which were worth some three, five, or ten times as much as those that were included in the withdrawal. That is one of the evils of which we complain.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I have a recollection, though it is not distinct, that when Mr. Roosevelt was President of the United States a law was passed including many of the Western States—I think Colorado, Wyoming, and probably Utah——

Mr. SMOOT. No; Utah was not included.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. There were quite a number of States which were included. The reason I remember it so well is that after Congress passed a bill preventing any reservations being made by Executive order the President made the reserves in these different States and then signed the bill, after which no such reservation could be made.

Mr. PITTMAN and Mr. SMOOT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I have concluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the Senator from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. PITTMAN. The amendment that is now before the Senate was offered by me to a bill which came from the other House, providing for the opening of Indian reserves for mining purposes under certain conditions. The amendment as presented at that time was in these words:

That hereafter no public lands of the United States shall be withdrawn by Executive order, proclamation, or otherwise for or as an Indian reservation except by act of Congress.

It is not applicable to any particular State at all. It was simply a declaration of policy on the part of the Senate. The Senate adopted that amendment; it was also agreed to in the House of Representatives, as I recollect, when it went over there. That policy has already been adopted by this body in another bill; and I do not see why, having adopted a policy after unlimited debate, we should now attempt to change it. If it is in order—I do not know the parliamentary situation—I offer an amendment to strike out——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair suggests that the proper course would be to disagree to the committee amendment.

Mr. SMOOT rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah wish the floor?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I wish to say a word.

Mr. PITTMAN. I desire to ask, Is an amendment now in order, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. An amendment to the committee amendment would be in order, but the object which the Senator seeks to accomplish may be brought about by disagreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. PITTMAN. It will then be open to further amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. PITTMAN. I simply want to repeat, as I have already stated, that this matter was argued at length before this body; it was discussed and unanimously adopted as a policy. While I have the utmost confidence in the Secretary of the Interior and in his department—for the amendment was not presented by me because of any suspicion that the matter would be mismanaged—I think this general policy should be adopted.

Mr. CURTIS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield to the Senator with pleasure.

Mr. CURTIS. If the Senator is correct—I have just sent for the statute to see if I can find the provision on the subject—why would not the question be covered by the Senator moving to strike out lines 21, 22, 23, and 24, leaving the existing law in force?

Mr. SMOOT. It is not the existing law. It passed this body, but I think it failed in the other House.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It passed here, but it did not become a law, according to my memory.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield the floor?

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator is through, I desire to speak.

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah is recognized.

Mr. SMOOT. There seems to be some misunderstanding in relation to the statement just made by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]. As I remember, the legislative action was just as the Senator from Nevada has stated it, that in a bill which passed this body there was a provision similar to the one which passed the House of Representatives in the Indian appropriation bill; and, if so, there is no need of this provision in the bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. It did not fail there, as I am informed, but the House agreed to the amendment in conference, though the Indian appropriation bill died before the Senate at the last session. The conference report, however, retained that provision, and it was accepted and adopted by the House.

Mr. SMOOT. But it is not the law.

Mr. PITTMAN. It is not the law by reason of the failure of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. SMOOT. My recollection is that it passed the House.

Mr. PITTMAN. The House adopted it.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, Mr. President, I am willing to support the amendment, although I think it ought to apply to all the States alike.

The act referred to by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] passed back in 1905 or 1906, as I remember, and provides that no land within the States of Wyoming, Montana, Oregon, and one or two other States should be withdrawn for a reservation without an act of Congress.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I think, if I refresh the Senator's memory, he will conclude that that was true only as to forest reserves. Subsequently we placed on the general leasing bill a provision so that it might apply to all reserves; but the law as it stands, according to my recollection, applies only to the withdrawal of public lands for the purpose of forest reserves in the States the Senator has enumerated.

Mr. SMOOT. Be that as it may, Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to have the State of Utah included in this bill if there are going to be any exceptions made at all; but, really, I think that the amendment ought to be disagreed to. I think the House provision should stand; in other words, that it should read:

That hereafter no public lands of the United States shall be withdrawn by Executive order, proclamation, or otherwise for or as an Indian reservation except by act of Congress.

That is what I think ought to be done at this time and that we should make no exception whatever to it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the senior Senator from Utah yield to his colleague?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. KING. Do I understand that the provision which my colleague has just read is found now in the House bill?

Mr. SMOOT. It is in the House bill, and the committee proposes to amend it by limiting it to Arizona and New Mexico. Then my colleague offered an amendment adding "Utah," so that it would apply only, if agreed to, to the three States named. It seems to me that the law ought to be general and that the House provision is the proper one.

Mr. McKELLAR. Should it not apply to the whole country?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Can that object not be accomplished by simply voting down the amendment which confines it to Arizona and New Mexico?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; by disagreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let us disagree to the amendment, and that will make it general.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment to the amendment pending.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, just a word. During the last session I introduced an independent bill to prohibit the executive department of the Government—the President, the Secretary of the Interior, or any other agency—from withdrawing any lands for forest purposes or for military purposes or for any other purposes; in other words, restricting the power of withdrawal and leaving the matter entirely to Congress. I felt that there had been an abuse by the executive department of the power which Congress had granted and that Indian reservations and forest reservations had been created and enlarged when there was no reason for so doing, to the detriment of the people and to the serious injury of the public-land States. Therefore, as I have stated, I offered measures for the purpose of correcting the abuse and the evil. Those bills to which I have referred were offered as amendments to measures which were before the Senate, and upon one or two bills the amendments were added. I think that a better way now would be to disagree to the committee amendment, and, if there is in the bill a provision prohibiting the executive department from making withdrawals, to enact that provision as a part of the bill, because it will cover the situation. I therefore withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah withdraws his amendment. The question is now on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and call the attention of the chairman of the committee to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Arizona will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 24, line 4, at the end of the Arizona items, it is proposed to insert:

For an investigation by the Secretary of the Interior of the conditions on the Salt River Indian Reservation, in Arizona, with respect to the necessity of constructing, for the use of the Indians, a bridge across the Salt River, on said reservation, near Lehi, Maricopa County, Ariz., and the said Secretary is hereby authorized and directed to cause plans, surveys, and reports to be made, together with an estimated limit of cost of said bridge and to submit his report thereon to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1919, $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, the tribe of Indians referred to in the amendment live on both sides of the Salt River, and whenever the river is up, which is very frequently during the early spring and summer, it is impossible for them to get across from one side of the river to the other. The amendment is merely designed for the purpose of having an investigation made as to the desirability of constructing a bridge there, the usual report to be made by the Secretary.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. I offer an amendment, which I ask may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 35, at the end of line 12, it is proposed to strike out the period and insert a comma and the words "to remain available until expended," so that the paragraph will read:

For continuing construction, maintenance, and operation of the irrigation systems on the Flathead Indian Reservation, in Montana, $375,000 (reimbursable), to remain available until expended.

Mr. CURTIS. I have no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STERLING. I offer the following amendment: On page 63, line 22, strike out the figures "$9,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$12,000."

Mr. CURTIS. I have no objection to that amendment; but if the Senator has any justification for the amendment I wish he would put it in the RECORD, for consideration by the conference committee.

Mr. STERLING. I shall do so. In support of the amendment I submit a letter from the Indian agent, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES INDIAN SERVICE,
YANKTON INDIAN AGENCY,
Wagner, S. Dak., June 2, 1919.

Hon. THOMAS STERLING,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am writing you with reference to the Indian appropriation bill, and more particularly that portion of it which refers to this agency.

For years there has been a special appropriation known as Yankton Sioux support, amounting to $14,000, but I learn that this amount was reduced in the last bill, which failed to pass at the last session, to $9,000. There is absolutely no justification for this reduction, and it will be impossible for us to conduct the affairs of this agency on the reduced amount. I have never learned why the reduction was made, but if it is not corrected it will mean the crippling of this agency to such an extent that its affairs can not properly be administered.

Senator JOHNSON promised to see that the old amount was restored in the bill this session, but I learn that he has not yet returned to Washington. I also learn that the bill has passed the House and is now before the Senate. Can you help us? The Indian Office, I am sure, desires the old amount restored. If you can do anything it certainly will be appreciated.

Thanking you for any assistance you can give us and assuring you that we will be pleased to reciprocate whenever the opportunity offers, I am,

Very respectfully, A. W. LEECH.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STERLING. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 86, after line 20, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue a patent in fee simple to the duly authorized missionary board, or other proper authority, of any religious organization engaged in mission or school work on any Indian reservation for such lands thereon as have been heretofore set apart to and are now being used and occupied by such organization for mission or school purposes.

Mr. CURTIS. I have no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment was was agreed to.

Mr. PITTMAN. I suggest to the chairman of the committee that it might be better if the sections of the bill were numbered a little differently. For instance, in the case of the amendment which we have recently been discussing in regard to the withdrawal of lands for Indian purposes, would it not be better if that were numbered "section 27" and the succeeding section, now numbered 27, numbered 28?

Mr. CURTIS. I have no objection to changing the number of the sections.

Mr. PITTMAN. I offer that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The sections will be changed in accordance with the amendment of the Senator from Nevada.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. CURTIS, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, and Mr. ASHURST conferees on the part of the Senate.

VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION OF DISABLED SOLDIERS.

Mr. KENYON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1213, being Calendar No. 3.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1213) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1918, which had been reported from the Committee on Education and Labor with amendments.

The Secretary read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act entitled "An act to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1918, be hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That every person enlisted, enrolled, drafted, inducted, or appointed in the military or naval forces of the United States, including members of training camps authorized by law, who, since April 7, 1917, has resigned or has been discharged or furloughed therefrom under honorable conditions, having a disability incurred, increased, or aggravated while a member of such forces, or later developing a disability traceable in the opinion of the board to service with such forces, and who, in the opinion of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, is in need of vocational rehabilitation to overcome the handicap of such disability, shall be furnished by the said board, where vocational rehabilitation is feasible, such course of vocational rehabilitation as the board shall prescribe and provide.

"The board shall have the power, and it shall be its duty, to furnish the persons included in this section suitable courses of vocational rehabilitation, to be prescribed and provided by the board; and every person electing to follow such a course of vocational rehabilitation shall, while following the same, be paid monthly by the said board from the appropriation hereinafter provided such sum as in the judgment of the said board is necessary for his maintenance and support, and for the maintenance and support of persons depending upon him, if any: Provided, however, That in no event shall the sum so paid such person while pursuing such course be less than the amount of his monthly pay for the last month of active service.

"No compensation under article 3 of the act entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department,"' approved October 6, 1917, shall be paid for the period during which any such person is being furnished by said board a course of vocational rehabilitation and support as herein authorized: Provided, however, That in the event any person pursuing a course of vocational rehabilitation is entitled under said article 3 to compensation in an amount in excess of the payments made to him by the said board for his support and the support of his dependents, if any, the Bureau of War Risk Insurance shall pay monthly to such person such additional amount as may be necessary to equal the total compensation due under said article 3 of said act.

"There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, available immediately and until expended, the sum of $6,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be used by the Federal Board for Vocational Education for the purpose of making the payments prescribed by this section and for defraying the administrative expenses incident thereto."

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I wish I might prevail upon those Senators who are present to interest themselves in this bill. This is not the bill that was before the Senate a few days ago. It is a bill with relation to vocational rehabilitation for men discharged from the military and naval forces. It is a bill of immediate importance, urged by the Secretary of the Treasury in a letter which is attached to the report, which I hope Senators will read, and urged likewise by the Vocational Educational Board.

It is designed to meet this situation: There are over 4,000 soldiers now living in different parts of the country who can not secure the vocational training necessary to rehabilitate themselves, as Congress has provided, because of conflicting decisions between the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and the Board of Vocational Education. I say to Senators—to the 10 or 12 who, now that the speech-making time has gone by, are settling down to business—that the condition of mind these soldiers are getting into who have gone across the sea and given their arms and their legs and who were willing to give their lives to the service of their country is a very important one. They have been waiting around two or three months, getting no compensation from the Bureau of War Risk Insurance—and I am not saying this in a critical way—but wondering when the Government, for which they were willing to give their lives, is going to deal justly with them.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. KING. As I understand the statement of the Senator, the unfortunate and brave soldiers to whom he has just referred are not receiving any compensation or pension or any contribution whatever from the Government. My recollection of the act which is now the law is that it makes provision for some compensation to persons in the condition referred to.

Mr. KENYON. Let me explain to the Senator. Under the act which was approved June 27, 1918, which is commonly known as the soldiers' vocational rehabilitation act, it was provided:

SEC. 2. That every person who is disabled under circumstances entitling him after discharge from the military or the naval forces of the United States to compensation under section 3 of the act—

And so forth.

The War Risk Insurance Bureau, having charge of this matter, interprets these words to mean not what seems to be the plain purport of the words—that is, if a man is disabled under circumstances entitling him to compensation he may have vocational training—but they go further and hold that he must be actually receiving compensation in order to get the training. The determination of the question of compensation is quite a long matter. The bureau has to investigate the soldier's history, his relationships, his dependents, and it is a matter of several months. The applications are coming in now at the rate of 100 a day; the peak will be reached about July 1, but, under the construction of the War Risk Insurance Bureau, the disabled soldiers can not get this training until the compensation is actually being paid to them. Now, the Secretary of the Treasury——

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, they are receiving pensions or compensation under a former act that was passed by Congress, are they not?

Mr. KENYON. No; not in these cases. If they are entitled to compensation and are being paid compensation, then they can have the vocational training. If they are not being paid compensation they can not have such training, and some of them have not been paid any compensation for three months. The question of their compensation has not yet been determined.

Mr. McKELLAR. As a matter of fact, they are in the Army still and drawing their regular pay, but they are receiving no compensation at all, and it is really costing the Government an additional sum by reason of this delay. They will have to pay them compensation, and they are paying them their regular pay.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if I remember the act—and I am not sure which act it is—there is a provision that persons who go into the service shall receive a certain amount for the support of their families during the period they are in the war.

Mr. KENYON. Yes; they have been supposed to.

Mr. KING. And there is a further provision that in the event of injury they shall receive certain compensation. I had in mind that statute and was wondering if they were not receiving the amount provided in an act of Congress for compensation to be paid for persons who were injured in the Army.

Mr. KENYON. No; that is the very point in question.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I was on the subcommittee that had this legislation in hand, and I remember it very well; and I really can not understand why a soldier who is disabled is not being paid by the Government of the United States what the law provides.

In the act of October 6, 1917—by the way, that was not the first act that was passed—specific provision is made for soldiers receiving disability, and it is found in section 300 of that act. It reads as follows:

That for death or disability resulting from personal injury suffered or disease contracted in the line of duty, by any commissioned officer or enlisted man or by any member of the Army Nurse Corps (female) or of the Navy Nurse Corps (female) when employed in the active service under the War Department or Navy Department, the United States shall pay compensation as hereinafter provided; but no compensation shall be paid if the injury or disease has been caused by his own willful misconduct.

Section 301 provides for the rates to be paid in case of the soldier's death.

Section 302 provides for the rates to be paid to the soldier in case of disability, and they are as follows:

If he has neither wife nor child living, $30.
If he has a wife but no child living, $45.
If he has a wife and one child living, $55.
If he has a wife and two children living, $65.
If he has a wife and three or more children living, $75.
If he has no wife but one child living, $40, with $10 for each additional child up to two.
If he has a widowed mother dependent on him for support, then, in addition to the above amounts, $10.

Do I understand the Senator to say that in the case of men who have lost their arms, and are disabled, the Government is not paying them the compensation provided for here?

Mr. KENYON. I say yes; it is not paying them until it determines the question of whether they are entitled to the compensation. They must be hurt in the line of duty and not through their own willful misconduct. Those are questions requiring investigation, and they are behind to the extent of about 55,000 cases.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, of course, it is not on account of the law; it is on account of the collapse of the War Risk Insurance Bureau.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; it is——

Mr. KENYON. Let me say to the Senator——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. KENYON. I should like to get a chance to explain this matter; but go ahead.

Mr. McKELLAR. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. KENYON. No; go ahead. I shall be glad to have the Senator make his statement.

Mr. McKELLAR. I just want to say that they come in so rapidly that they are 4,000 soldiers behind now—soldiers who have been wounded and who are entitled to vocational education. They just have not been able to keep up with them. There are I forget how many thousand, but a great many thousand, perhaps over 100,000, applications for the benefits of this act, but there are 4,000 of them that need vocational education and want it and are just waiting for it and can not get it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator is perfectly aware of that, and I do not want the Senate to get the impression that I am not in favor of taking care of these wounded soldiers. That is not what I rose for. Then I was going to continue by asking the Senator another question, and he can answer them both at once.

The bill that is before the Senate at this time provides:

That in no event shall the sum so paid such person while pursuing such course be more than $75 per month for a single man without dependents, or for a man with dependents $75 per month, plus the several sums prescribed as family allowances under section 204 of Article II of the war-risk insurance act.

It appears to me—and I want to know if this is the fact, because I have not had time to go into it as I should—that if this bill passes a soldier who is single will be paid $75 a month, providing he has no dependents.

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. But if he is a married man, then he is paid $75 per month and whatever the law allows him as an additional amount, as provided under the law, when he has dependents.

Mr. KENYON. That is correct.

Mr. SMOOT. As I remember, the law provides that——

Mr. KENYON. The Senator has read section 302.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. Not to exceed $50 per month.

Mr. SMOOT. Not to exceed $50 per month is correct; but that is section 204. That is $50 per month, plus the several sums prescribed as family allowances under section 204 of Article II of the war-risk insurance act. I did not read that. That is another provision of law. They get that whether they are injured or not, under section 204; and that provides——

Mr. KENYON. That family allowance under section 204 is limited by what follows. You can not exceed the $50 per month.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is correct on that; but what I was going to ask the Senator was this: Suppose this bill becomes a law and they are paid the $75, plus whatever amount is granted them for dependents. The Senator from Tennessee says the applications are coming in so fast now that they can not take care of them. Is this in addition to what they are receiving to-day, that they have not yet been paid by the Government?

Mr. KENYON. During the time they receive the allowances under this amendment to section 2 they will receive no compensation under the war-risk insurance act.

Mr. SMOOT. That is as I understood it.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is in lieu of it.

Mr. KENYON. The average time of training of these men is 10 months. It will be a heavy burden during the 10 months; but this whole plan of rehabilitation of the soldiers will not cost this Government over $12,000,000, while Canada is spending $25,000,000 on the same proposition, due largely to the fact that in Canada they are constructing buildings. We do not have to do that. We have this apparatus and all of this machinery now to carry on the work.

Mr. SMOOT. In Canada they make other donations, do they not, directly to the soldiers?

Mr. KENYON. Yes; they make direct donations to the soldiers.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that is the great bulk of the cost, although I am not sure of that.

Mr. KENYON. I will say to the Senator that this will be finished in about three years. It will not require over three years.

Mr. SMOOT. For instance, say it will cost $500 for each soldier, I should judge, on an average. Many of them are single, and in that case they would not have, more than likely, dependents upon them; but if they did, it would not be more than a mother or father. There would be no children or wife.

Mr. McKELLAR. It would cost more than that. It would probably cost a thousand or nine hundred dollars for 10 months—$750 at least.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, for 10 months.

Mr. KENYON. Getting away a little from that question, the average number of men in training during the fiscal years 1919 and 1920 will be approximately 7,000. That is the best estimate they can give. At the rate of $75 a month, the support of these men will require $525,000 per month, or $6,300,000 in a year. That is the way those figures are reached.

I want to say to the Senator, as to the number of these men, that the Federal board conformed to the requirements of the bureau, and up to May 10 of this year submitted for the determination of the bureau, as to compensability, applications for compensation of 26,814 disabled men. Of these applications through the Federal board, 8,622 were the cases of men already surveyed by the district officers of the board and recommended by the district boards to the central office for training. They have actually in training something like 3,200 men now, and the result of this ruling of the War Risk Bureau, which I will agree with the Senator has gone largely to pieces—of course it has been hard worked as a result of this situation—has been the raising of funds by private institutions.

The Elks have raised a fund of $200,000—to the great credit of the Elks—that has been loaned out to these boys, so that they can carry on this vocational training which they want and live in the meantime. The Knights of Columbus have done some of that work also, and the Red Cross.

I have here some most interesting documents. Here are checks sent back to the Elks's fund from these soldier boys who have lost arms and legs, in the sum of $10 and $50, and post-office orders sent in for small sums, paying back this money that has been loaned to them, and every one of them apparently is endeavoring to pay this money back. I say it is a shame that these boys, who have done what they have and want vocational training, so that they can go into some vocation to make a living, because of the physical condition in which they are, are dependent upon private charity to do the work that their Government ought to do. It is a national disgrace. That is what this bill is aimed to correct.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator right there that I am in full sympathy and accord with all that he says with relation to the assistance of these most unfortunate American boys. What I wanted to get at was to have an understanding, so that there could be no ruling of any bureau of the Government that would cut them out of whatever they are entitled to hereafter; and in order to do that I thought we ought to know just exactly what each soldier was to receive, as far as it was possible, and what change there was in existing law to-day, and the reasons for it. I think that if it is going to cost $100 a month for each soldier on an average, the $6,000,000 provided for here will be consumed, of course, in the 10 months.

Mr. KENYON. Oh, yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not any doubt about that.

Mr. KENYON. It may not be sufficient. It depends on how many of these boys there will be. They estimate that there will be 10,000 at the highest peak of the number for training.

Mr. SMOOT. That will be $10,000,000.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I should like to ask the Senator if I have a correct understanding of the reason for this bill and its purpose.

First of all, no soldier can receive the benefits of vocational education unless he has been honorably discharged, and, secondly, unless he is disabled. Those tests are passed upon by the Board for Vocational Education. A third requirement is one of having the compensation fixed. That is passed upon by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. The result has been so much red tape and dealing back and forth between these two boards that great delay and great inconvenience have been suffered by disabled soldiers. The purpose of this bill, as I undertand, is to do away with that red tape, is agreed to by both boards, and is to promote and hasten action so that the disabled soldiers speedily and quickly can get the benefit of vocational education. Is that the situation?

Mr. KENYON. That is the situation; and the Secretary of the Treasury, as will be seen by the letter attached to the report, warmly indorses this proposition. The War Risk Bureau is under his department of the Government. He feels that this should be done. The Assistant Secretary came before the committee and urged it. The Vocational Board feel that it should be done. It takes this work away from the War Risk Bureau and puts it entirely in the hands of the Vocational Board.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield to me to make a statement right along this line at this time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The fault of the situation is in the law more than in its administration. The law provides that the Vocational Board shall examine into every applicant's eligibility for training under the act, and if they find him all right they accept him; but the same law provides that before they can give him this training he must be receiving compensation under the insurance act.

Mr. KENYON. That is the construction that the War Risk Bureau places on the law.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is the construction that they have placed upon the law, and I assume that that construction is right. I think it is right. And, of course, that means delay. The purpose and object of this bill is to do away with that delay by changing the law and putting it in the power now of the Vocational Board to determine when these men shall be given the training, and the result of this change of the law will be simply to permit the Vocational Education Board to pass upon the eligibility of its own applicants and give them the training at once. There are 4,000 of these applicants who are not receiving the training when they ought to receive the training, simply because of the fault in the law and not the fault of anyone else. This removes that obstacle.

Mr. KENYON. It will not alter the expense of the Government, except in one particular. The money that is now paid will be paid by the board. There will be that much less money needed for the War Risk Insurance Bureau, except that there may be a few cases where the Board of Vocational Training may hold that a man is entitled to this training where the War Risk Insurance Bureau might have held otherwise. There will be a few, but not many.

Mr. McKELLAR. If so, it is an error in the right direction. Surely if there is a man who is maimed and in such a condition that vocational training will help him, even if he should not be entitled to the compensation fixed by the war-risk insurance act, he ought to have the training, anyway. It will be an error that ought to be made.

Mr. KENYON. I do not want to agree with the Senator's proposition that the fault is in the law. There is really not much use in discussing that. I can not conceive how the Bureau of War Risk Insurance have interpreted this law in the way they have, but lawyers always differ on construction of the law.

Mr. McKELLAR. It has been so interpreted by all connected with it on both sides. There can not be any mistake about it. The error is with the law, and not with the administration of it at all.

Mr. KENYON. Well, let it go that way. I do not agree, however, with the proposition.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that I think there was great wisdom in the law as it was framed, if we had had preparation, and the soldier could have immediately gone into the school for rehabilitation. Then I think the law as written was correct, and ought to have applied only to those who were receiving compensation from the Government. But coming back here, as they did, with no preparation, they either had to remain in the Army or else, under the law, lose the benefits to which they were entitled. But if we had been prepared to take every disabled soldier and put him into the training that we now are undertaking to do, then the law, as written, was a very wise provision.

Mr. McKELLAR. At all events, we all agree now that this amendment ought to be enacted, and these boys ought to be put in school.

Mr. KENYON. And I will say that this board have informed me that they can take care of all of these boys within a week. It ought to be passed at once.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let us pass the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will.

Mr. KING. I was rather curious to know what will be the result if this bill shall pass. Does it repeal pro tanto the provisions of the act to which attention was just called by the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], under which disabled soldiers receive compensation; or do the two acts run along parallel, so that the soldier receives compensation up to $100 a month, or perhaps more if he is married, under this bill, and compensation under the act of 1917?

Mr. KENYON. Let me illustrate that to the Senator, and I can make it clearer, premising that by saying this is a substitution for section 2 of the act.

Mr. KING. Of which act?

Mr. KENYON. Of the vocational rehabilitation act, not of the war-risk insurance act. Now, let us take a man who is entitled to rating of complete disability on account of loss of both eyes or loss of both hands, to $100 a month; but he has no dependents. Under this he would receive the $75 a month, and then the War Risk Bureau would still have to pay the $25 a month more; but that is a matter that they can take their time to determine. It may take two or three months to determine his case. In the meantime he is going right along with this training; so the two acts operate and intertwine together.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will still indulge me——

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. KING. Under the act of 1917, the disabled soldier would receive compensation the aggregate amount of which I do not now carry in my mind; and under the measure which is now before the Senate for consideration he will receive a certain amount up to $75 a month if single, and a larger amount if he is married. The question I am interested to have answered is whether or not, in view of obtaining the amount provided by the bill under consideration, it diminishes the aggregate sum to which he would be entitled under the other act, assuming that he did not avail himself of the vocational training?

Mr. KENYON. Oh, it does not apply at all if he does not avail himself of the vocational training. It has nothing to do with the situation. He goes right ahead and has his compensation. We are only talking about vocational training. Now, where he takes his vocational training, if he gets his $75 a month, he gets nothing else unless he is entitled by total disability to more than $75 a month; but if he does not take the vocational training, he goes right ahead under the war-risk insurance act and draws the compensation for injury, just as he would if this law were not in existence. The two things have nothing to do with one another, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. KING. As I understand, then, he may avail himself of all of the provisions of the act of 1917, no matter how much he might obtain there, and, in addition, obtain the $75 a month here?

Mr. KENYON. No; not exactly that. Do I not make it clear to the Senator when I take the case of a boy who is suffering from absolute disability? He would be entitled to $100 a month, and we will say there is no vocational training law of any kind. That is what he would get.

Mr. KING. Under the act of 1917?

Mr. KENYON. Yes. Now, there is a vocational training law. He has a right to this vocational training. He will receive, during that time, what has been estimated to be necessary to support him—$75 a month. Now, there is $25 a month more coming to him, but not $100. Do I make that plain?

Mr. KING. I comprehend. Then, the two acts do not run along parallel. This is a repeal, pro tanto, of the other act?

Mr. KENYON. To that extent. You could hardly call it a repeal. It simply provides there shall be no compensation under that act while he is receiving his allowance under this act.

Mr. KING. Let me put one other question, and perhaps that will answer it. As I understand the Senator, under the act of 1917 the maximum amount which he might receive would be $100. The maximum amount under this bill, if he were single, would be $75.

Mr. KENYON. If he had no dependents.

Mr. KING. Can the Senator conceive of a case where the man would get $175?

Mr. KENYON. No; I do not think I can. I can perhaps conceive of a case where he would get $150.

Mr. KING. Then the two acts run along substantially parallel?

Mr. KENYON. Yes. If he had dependents—a father and a mother dependent upon him, or a wife and a child dependent upon him—I think it would run up to something near $150 a month.

Mr. KING. Was it not intended that the amount provided under this bill should be subtracted from the amount which he might obtain under the other bill?

Mr. KENYON. Oh, practically so during the time of the training, yes; during the time of the training; but if he would secure less under the other bill—another ruling of the War Risk Bureau; they allowed the basic pay of $30 a month—he could receive the larger allowance under this. Now, the Vocational Training Board had to come along and supplement that with $35 or $45 more a month that the man needed in order to live. He could not live on $30 a month. The private would be allowed $30 per month, his pay in his last month, while the captain would be allowed something like $200 a month; but it was the intention, I think, that the amount taken for vocational training would not be held down to the basic pay, because as a private soldier he had subsistence, he had perquisites in matters that the board have taken into consideration; and they rather stretched the law, section 4 of this vocational act, in allowing to that man $35 or $40 more per month. So they are now paying $75 a month to all of these men to enable them to live, and they tell me that a man can not get along for less in any kind of reasonable and decent comfort.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to my colleague that under no circumstances can a soldier receive more than $125 per month under this provision. It says:

That in no event shall the sum so paid such person while pursuing such course be more than $75 per month for a single man without dependents, or for a man with dependents $75 per month plus the several sums prescribed as family allowances under section 204 of article 2 of the war-risk insurance act.

Section 204 of article 2 of the war-risk insurance act provides certain allowances to the wife or the dependents of a man, but in no case shall the allowance be more than $50 a month. So all any soldier can get under this provision is the $75 directly provided for and the maximum allowed under article 2 of section 204 of the war-risk insurance act. So $50 is the maximum and $75 is the direct allowance, making $125 maximum of both. It can not be more than that.

Mr. KENYON. I think that is true. I spoke inadvertently, not thinking of the section limiting the amount to $50 a month. One hundred and twenty-five dollars would be the maximum.

Mr. POMERENE and Mr. McKELLAR addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. KENYON. I yield first to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. I am not sure that I have heard any explanation of the matter to which I want to direct the attention of the Senator from Iowa. I assume, of course, that in the administration of this law, even though the board had serious or substantial doubts, I will say, as to the capacity of the soldier to receive the vocational training he desired, those doubts would be resolved in favor of the boy?

Mr. KENYON. I am afraid not.

Mr. POMERENE. They ought to be.

Mr. KENYON. Yes; they ought to be.

Mr. POMERENE. That leads me to another question. Assuming, for the sake of the argument, that there were these uncertainties, but later on it became apparent to the board that a further effort to rehabilitate the crippled soldier would be unavailing, how long would this course of training continue?

Mr. KENYON. I will say to the Senator that is entirely within the option of the board. They have some boys in a two-year law course. That seems pretty extravagant; but I know one boy, who lost both legs, a boy of strong mentality, whom they put in a law course for two years. They put some in medical courses. It is entirely with the board, but the average period of time is 10 months.

Mr. POMERENE. What rule controls this board in the determination of the fact as to whether a young man should receive this vocational training?

Mr. KENYON. They try to visit the boys in the hospitals. They have regular men, the best men they can get for this purpose, who talk it over with the boy, who visit with the boy, see what he wants to do, examine him, and talk to him as to what they may think, and advise him, and proceed in a friendly way to try to secure that thing for the boy he seems capable of doing and that he desires to do.

Mr. POMERENE. Why does the Senator say if there was any doubt on this question it would be resolved against the young man?

Mr. KENYON. I thought the Senator said it had been resolved in favor of the young man.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, no.

Mr. KENYON. I think it will be resolved in favor of the soldier, but I think it has not been so resolved.

Mr. POMERENE. That relieves my mind very materially.

Mr. KENYON. It relieves my mind if the Senator misunderstood me. There have been cases where a man lost an arm and had gone and tried to do the same work or taken the same job that he had before. The Bureau of War Risk Insurance has written to him and found out he was earning wages and doing the same thing he had previously done, and have denied him compensation, holding that where a man could go back to the same work he has been doing he was not entitled to compensation. Under that ruling he could not secure vocational training. That was another ruling that made great difficulty. Those things perhaps we had better bury. They are past.

Mr. POMERENE. The Government ought to do the very best it can for these boys.

Mr. KENYON. Yes. I think there is no apparent objection to this bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield for just a moment? I want to say to the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], who raised the question of $75 a month and the other compensation that might go to a soldier, that the board very carefully, as shown by the hearings, looked into the matter. They tried $65 a month for these boys at first, and were obliged to raise it. Under no circumstances will the boy, even though he may have dependents or as many dependents as he might have, receive more than $125 a month. At all events it runs on an average of only 10 months. It will not be long; and surely such doubts as those referred to ought to be resolved in favor of the boy. I hope the Senator from Utah will withdraw his objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the committee.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 1, before the word "then," strike out the word "less" and insert the word "more," and after the word "than" strike out "the amount of his monthly pay for the last month of active service" and insert "$75 per month for a single man without dependents, or for a man with dependents $75 per month plus the several sums prescribed as family allowances under section 204 of article 2 of the war-risk insurance act," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, however, That in no event shall the sum so paid such person while pursuing such course be more than $75 per month for a single man without dependents, or for a man with dependents $75 per month plus the several sums prescribed as family allowances under section 204 of article 2 of the war-risk insurance act.

Mr. POMERENE. Allow me to call the attention of the Senator, if I may, to what seems to be somewhat of a differentiation here. On line 1 it is provided that while pursuing such course the amount he is to receive can not be more than $75 per month.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is perfectly clear.

Mr. POMERENE. Why should not the same language be used in line 4, so that it would read also that in no event should he get more than $75 per month?

Mr. KENYON. The Senator will bear in mind that in line 2 the $75 per month is for a single man without dependents. The balance of the proviso is for a man with dependents. A man with dependents has more than $75 a month.

Mr. POMERENE. I understand.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is a great deal of legislation before the committees of the Senate, and I think time can be saved by the Senate adjourning until Monday, in order that the committees may consider the legislation which is before them.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator from Utah, I assume, is going to make a motion to adjourn until Monday?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I rose for that purpose.

Mr. KENYON. I heard a number of Senators say they are desirous of going ahead with the business of the Senate, and they do not know of any particular reason why we should adjourn until Monday. There are other important bills here. I have another bill I would like to take up, but I have given way to my colleague for a bill which, I understood, he would bring up. I do not see why we should not stay here and work to-morrow, and if it is not the desire to take up the bill of which my colleague has charge I would like to move to go ahead with No. 2 on the calendar, which is the bill (S. 18) to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise and their return to civil employment.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Iowa there are a number of Senators who have spoken about Senate bill No. 18 who want to be here when it is brought up for consideration. There seemed to be an understanding that it would not be taken up to-day, and I advised one or two Senators that the bill would not be taken up to-day. I thought it would save time, and I believe it will, to adjourn until Monday, if there is no real objection to the adjournment.

Mr. KENYON. I am not going to raise an objection. We spend the first two hours every day apparently in oratory upon resolutions, and then those who participate in the oratory are in favor of adjourning. These important bills ought to receive attention here. We should go ahead and attend to the business of the Senate. I am ready to go ahead.

Mr. McKELLAR. Why can we not go on this afternoon?

Mr. KENYON. I assured the Senator from Utah I would not ask the Senate to go ahead this afternoon.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator if I had not understood, of course, that Senate bill No. 18 was going over I would have been perfectly willing to have gone on and considered it to-day. Therefore, Mr. President, I move that the Senate do now adjourn until Monday next.

Mr. OWEN. Will the Senator withhold his motion for just a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly, I will withhold the motion.

EXPORT TRADE.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I have called attention several times to a matter, and I would like to ask the Senators present to listen to its presentation again. Our commodity balances are now running to the extent of $400,000,000 per month in excess of what Europe and the outside world are shipping to us. We are not going to be able to continue to make the shipments unless credits, and long-time credits, are arranged for the European countries. There must be some organization for that purpose.

The War Finance Corporation act required, as a condition of extending credits, that individual American banks and individual American export houses should themselves underwrite the credits. They are not willing to do so. They can not afford to tie up their liquid assets in long-time investments. The consequence is that month after month has gone by without affording this relief. I have called it to the attention of various authorities of the Treasury Department, urging them to take some action. I called it to the attention of the Secretary of Commerce. I have a letter from him, which I will ask to have printed in the RECORD, where it may be seen, bearing upon this question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, leave is granted.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, June 3, 1919.

Hon. ROBERT L. OWEN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have given some thought to the matter which you kindly presented to me orally and through the draft of your proposed measure. The subject, I need hardly say, is a large one. Something is necessary that will do the work for which you plan. We must provide means promptly for the sale of the securities of foreign nations, foreign corporations, municipalities, utilities, industries, etc., in the United States. This is necessary now and for the future in order to provide credits in this country against which our war associates and other nations may buy, thus maintaining the movement of our export trade. The maintenance of this export trade is of essential value to us now. Some may say the export trade is but a small fraction of the domestic trade; why care so keenly for it? This leaves out of the account certain facts. During the war, for obvious reasons, we greatly increased our productive capacity, until to-day it is far larger than ever before. Yet before the war—that is to say, before this increase—it was necessary to sell abroad in order to keep our factories running full time, because the absorptive capacity of the country is not large enough continuously to take the full output of all our industries running steadily at full time. This was so before the war; it is more so now. Lacking an outlet for the products thus made by a greater producing capacity, the result must be either the suspension of certain industries, with the consequent effects upon both capital and labor, or else the congestion of products lacking a sufficient market, which would mean a sudden collapse in prices—perhaps of all possible economic events the one which would be most greatly to be deplored. Now, it would mean widespread disaster. This is from the domestic side, but equally cogent reasons apply from the foreign side.

The nations of the world have needs which we can and should supply. Present conditions, however, do not permit purchasing save at ruinous cost. We receive frequent letters protesting against embargoes in one or another country against purchasing in the United States. The conditions, however, which cause these restrictions are supremely exigent. In Italy to-day, for example, the difference of exchange causes a tax of 40 to 60 per cent on merchants who would buy from the United States. In a lesser degree this is true elsewhere. The nations that need our supplies, both of raw materials and finished goods, can not pay us in gold, can not render adequate services in payment, and can not fully pay us in goods. This applies both to past and present debt and to present and future purchases. We can meet this problem by purchasing their securities, and, so far as I know, this is the only key adequate to unlock the problem.

This course, furthermore, has a threefold economic advantage; we receive interest upon the investment; we obtain the business normally arising out of the operations conducted by American capital, thus adding to our export trade upon a safe basis; and we develop the wealth of the countries in which these operations are carried on, thus adding alike to their power to pay their present debt to us and to make further purchases from us.

But we lack facilities for bringing about this desirable condition. The situation is new to us; we do not know what the foreign securities are that we can safely buy, nor even where we can readily go to learn their character. There is no established market for them.

It has been suggested that the credits authorized through the War Finance Corporation offer sufficient means for meeting the export necessities of the country. They do, in a certain way, but not in the way we are considering. They enable American exporters to give long credits, and thus contribute, doubtless, to solving that particular phase of the problem. They do not (and this is the crux of it) provide buying power on the other side, nor do they directly help to forward the development of the wealth of those countries nor give to us any control, however indirect, over their purchases.

In a general way, export trade can be divided into two large classes, which we may call the competitive class and the constructive class, or we may style them the trading class and the development class. The credits of the War Finance Corporation may care for the competitive or the trading class of foreign trade; they are not so well able to care for the constructive or the development class of that business. The former is a matter of six or nine months' credit, or even a year or two. The latter involves a more or less permanent investment and a market must be provided, in order that the securities based on these investments may be readily sold. The two conditions are therefore radically unlike, and the medium wisely provided and ably directed for one was not intended for the other.

We therefore recur to what the mechanism should be for furnishing knowledge of and a market for the foreign securities which we shall have to buy if our foreign trade, so necessary to our domestic prosperity, is itself to prosper. I am not sure about the Government's direct part in it. It seems to me more consonant with our principles and our practice in the past that this matter should be handled purely by private enterprise and capital. Yet I recognize that we can not apply the reasoning of the past to the problems of the present, for that experience and those principles were based upon traditions and conditions which have ceased to be. It is with some force urged that in order to secure public confidence in this novel business of buying foreign securities we must have the assurance that would come not merely from the oversight but from the actual participation by the Government in the ownership and direction of the organization which is to perform so novel and yet so necessary a function. I find myself increasingly inclined to the belief that this may be desirable and to the acceptance of the thought that it may be necessary. If this is so, the rest is a detail. Yet I should be glad if, instead of making the Department of Commerce the sole Government agency, the major part could be given to the Treasury Department, though I think it proper and right that at least one director and some definite participation should be given to the Department of Commerce, which, it is well to remember here, is the only department charged by law with the duty of fostering, promoting, and developing the commerce of the United States.

Concerning the other details, I am not at the moment specially interested, and I take it that you do not care for me to intrude longer upon your time and thought. The principle is, doubtless, what you desire at the time to establish. I assume that the draft of a measure which you have prepared was intended to act as a stimulus to thought rather than to be exactly accurate in every detail. It would seem right and wise, if the Government has one-fourth of the capital stock of the organization, that it should be limited to an equal proportion of the board of directors. However, all these things will be worked out in time. I trust I have for the moment sufficiently met all the things which are in your mind.

Before any final draft of the measure were prepared it would seem to me wise that a conference should take place between yourself and such other legislators as might be immediately concerned, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Federal Reserve Board, the War Finance Corporation, and representatives of the Department of Commerce, and possibly you would feel that representatives of the Department of State should also be invited.

Yours very truly,

WILLIAM C. REDFIELD,
Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. OWEN. I wish to emphasize and to impress upon the Senate, and upon the Republican Members of the Senate particularly, their responsibility in protecting the commerce of this country. If they do not do it, it will be their fault. I have called their attention to it time and again. I am willing to cooperate with them along any reasonable line that will afford this relief, but if they do not do it and they run into a panic in the matter of exchange, it will be their own fault.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Oklahoma that in the closing days of the last session of Congress there was a bill passed authorizing a million dollars for this very purpose.

Mr. OWEN. Yes; and it was tied up so that it could not be used.

Mr. SMOOT. I recognize, Mr. President, that even though it were usable it is not sufficient to take care of the commerce that we are expecting to have with foreign countries. I am in full sympathy with what the Senator has said, and I am quite sure that the majority Members of this body begin to realize the importance of that legislation.

Mr. OWEN. I do not think they do realize it.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope a bill along the lines he has just suggested—and others have already suggested it, too—will be reported from the committee at an early date and that it will pass this body.

Mr. OWEN. It ought to be acted upon promptly, because this matter is already doing very great harm to the commerce of the United States.

TELEGRAPH AND TELEPHONE CONTROL.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I move in behalf of my colleague, now occupying the chair, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 120) to repeal chapter 154 of the act of the second session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, being the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to authorize the President in time of war to supervise or take possession and assume control of any telegraph, telephone, marine cable or radio system or systems, or any part thereof, and to operate the same in such manner as may be needful or desirable for the duration of the war, and to provide just compensation therefor," approved July 16, 1918. I make the motion merely to have the bill become the unfinished business.

Mr. POMERENE. I hope the bill will be made the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. SMOOT. I send to the desk a resolution which has been passed by the Senate. Since that resolution was passed another resolution has been passed by this body adding certain provisions to it. I ask for a reconsideration of the vote by which the former resolution was passed, and then I shall ask that it be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah moves that the vote by which Senate resolution 53 was adopted be reconsidered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SMOOT. I now move that the resolution be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the resolution be read.

Mr. SMOOT. It is merely a resolution authorizing the Committee on Banking and Currency, or any subcommittee thereof, to send for persons and papers.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution will be indefinitely postponed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate adjourn until Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, June 9, 1919, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 6, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, who art in heaven, the same yesterday, to-day, and forever, great men reach great conclusions and strive to follow in the way of truth; but other men refute the truth in their acts; hence science, religion, and the simplest precepts of life fall into disrepute; hence accidents which we witnessed yesterday in a mining community, which swept out of existence many lives, maimed others, left widows and orphans in despair.

To know truth and follow its precepts and the simplest rules of life is to follow Thee, do Thy will, and live now and evermore. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I want an entry made nunc pro tunc, extending leave of absence beginning yesterday until next Monday for the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY]. He is absent on account of the severe illness of his little son. He wrote me in plenty of time if I had received the letter.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the leave of absence will be granted.

There was no objection.

NATHAN HALE.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on Nathan Hale, a Revolutionary hero. To-day is the one hundred and sixty-fourth anniversary of his birth.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on Nathan Hale. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PRINTING OF RESOLUTIONS IN THE RECORD.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the resolution of protest against the Polish atrocities adopted at a mass meeting in Richmond, Va., June 2, 1919.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the resolutions referred to. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I do not think we ought to have these various resolutions that are being adopted printed in the RECORD. There is a way provided by dropping them in the basket, and the RECORD will contain notice that they have been filed. Is there any particular reason why this resolution should be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am not apprised just what are the reasons appertaining to similar resolutions in other sections of the country. This was a largely attended mass meeting, representative in character, and there is a great desire by the participants that there be a record of it.

Mr. WALSH. A great many people think that by putting things in the RECORD it gives them great publicity, while others believe that it is interring them. I object.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege. Mr. Speaker, there appears on page 9 of this morning's edition of the Washington Post a false statement concerning me, as follows:

In large headlines there appears—

Has three sons in pay of House. Representative BLANTON is charged as subject to antitrust law.

I submit that to the Speaker, as I want to show that it is false.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that if it really charges the gentleman with a breach of the law it is a question of privilege.

Mr. BLANTON. To a lawyer's mind it might not, but to the ordinary reader of a newspaper, to the layman's mind——

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is a question of privilege. How much time does the gentleman wish?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the rules of the House give me an hour, but I am not going to take up very much time if my colleagues do not interrupt me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, concerning the practice of patronage, it is as old as the House of Representatives itself. It is well known to the membership of this House, if it is not known to all the people of the United States, that the party in power in Washington has patronage positions. When I came here that system was in vogue, and it happened that my party was in power, and the leaders of my party who had the distribution of the patronage belonging to this House told me, in writing, that I had the right to name a page in the House of Representatives. At the same time it told me that I had the right to put a post-office clerk in the post office. I also had the right to employ a clerk in my office, and that the Government would allow me at that time $1,500 a year, and later it was changed to $2,000—changed not by my vote but by the vote of a preceding Congress before I came here, if you please. Now, I had the right, as there was no law against it, to appoint my son, I had the right to appoint my daughter, I had the right to appoint my wife or any relative as clerk in my office if I saw fit. There may be no particular harm in it, where a relative is qualified and there is no law against it.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I refuse to be interrupted; we have more important business before this House than interruptions just now. I do not yield at all right now. There may be no harm in appointing a relative, if there is no law against it, providing the relative does good work, and there is no law against it. I have made no such point——

Mr. CARTER. Did not the gentleman make the point in his resolution?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Oklahoma ought to have been in the House long enough to observe the rules. If a man refuses to yield, he should keep his seat and not interrupt.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman did not refuse to yield to me.

Mr. BLANTON. I told the Speaker I refused to yield to anybody.

Mr. CARTER. I did not understand any such thing; that is all.

Mr. BLANTON. If I had put some one on the roll as my clerk at $1,500, or when the law thereafter was changed to $2,000, that clerk would have the right to have drawn the money. I represented a big district—59 counties, 556 miles across it. You can imagine how much correspondence I received every day. There is no one clerk alive who could have done the work of my office, and in order to employ a necessary and efficient office force and to be able to control that $1,500, which after July was raised to $2,000, so that I could employ, if need be, two or more clerks by paying the extra amount necessary out of my own pocket, I put my son's name on the roll as my clerk. Did not I have the right to do it? If I did not, I yield to any man in this House to get up and say I did not. I want to see the countenance of a Democrat or the countenance of a Republican who has got the nerve to stand up here and tell me I did not have the right to do it. No; not even the gentleman from South Carolina. [Laughter.]

But my son has not drawn a dollar of Government money since his name has been on the roll, not a dollar. I paid him out of my pocket, because a man ought to pay his son for work in order to encourage him. He has done work for me and I paid him out of my pocket. There has not been a month since I have been in Congress that I have not paid others more than the amount that I have received from Congress. How about the pageship? I did put my son here. Did you expect me, my good friend from South Carolina, to appoint as page some Republican boy from Boston? No; however much I respect my good Republican friends, I would rather appoint my son a page than your son. [Laughter.] You are going to do the same way. My son has not a chance to be page in this House of Representatives now when your Republican friends have got the patronage. Has he? [Cries of "No" on the Republican side.] No, sir. How about the clerk in the post office? I could have put my boy in there the very day that patronage was given me, but did I do it? No. I sent down to Jones County, Tex., and got Mr. Guy R. Holcomb, a splendid gentleman who had a wife and child, and brought him to Washington and put him in the post office. He stayed there until he resigned voluntarily and went back to Texas. When he resigned did I put my son in? No. I could have done it; there is no law against it. If my good friend from South Carolina considers it unlawful, why did not he introduce a bill to make it unlawful? Why did not he do that? When he put in the RECORD yesterday, in his extension of remarks, the fact that I drew 20 cents a mile, why did not he be fair enough to put in there that in the last session he drew $480 mileage from this Congress?

Mr. STEVENSON. Because it is untrue. I draw $160 mileage per session, being the mileage allowed by law. I draw mileage for 400 miles, and the railroads charge me for 412, and if you make any other statement I will hold you responsible.

Mr. BLANTON. You drew $480, did you not?

Mr. STEVENSON. I draw $160, to which I am entitled as mileage, and no more.

Mr. BLANTON. If you take three times $160 it will be $480. You drew $160 each for the three sessions of the Sixty-fifth Congress, making a total of $480 mileage drawn during the Sixty-fifth Congress by you.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend. He must confine himself to the question of privilege.

Mr. BLANTON. I am.

The SPEAKER. The Chair believes the gentleman is not.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order, in the interest of good order in the House only, that the gentleman is not discussing the question of personal privilege.

Mr. BLANTON. I am.

The SPEAKER. The Chair believes the gentleman is not.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order, in the interest of good order only, that the gentleman is not discussing the question of personal privilege.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker. I make the further point of order that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] have been addressing each other in the second person, violative of the rules of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. I will apologize to the House for the slight indiscretion frequently indulged in both by my Republican friends on the other side as well as by Democrats on this side.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is not a slight indiscretion to violate the rules of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Did I put my son in when Mr. Holcomb resigned? No; I sent to Texas and got Mr. Halbert Keifer to come up and hold that position in the post office, and he held it until he resigned voluntarily and went back to Texas. He resigned a few months before the last Congress adjourned, at the time when the Post Office Department down here in Washington was clamoring for clerks. They said they were short a hundred clerks that were needed in order to get mail distributed; that it was impossible to get sufficient clerks anywhere in the Postal Service here in Washington. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD has in it notice of this shortage of post-office clerks here in Washington. I did let my boy go in there, and I am not ashamed of it. He could have been there all the time. It was my patronage. Is there a man here that will say it was not right? Now, if my good friend from South Carolina——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the gentleman from Texas ought to be referring to Members of the House who are sitting in their seats and keeping still and attending to their own business. I understand perfectly well that personal privilege gives a pretty wide limit, but that kind of performance is calculated to provoke a breach of the peace.

Mr. BLANTON. I know it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The gentleman ought not to do it, then.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will caution the gentleman that the Members whose rights are not included in his question of personal privilege ought not to be referred to.

Mr. BLANTON. In view of my regard for the Democratic leader, I will desist from any further reference to any gentleman. I will say this, if you want to break up this practice of patronage now—and it is a pretty mean time for a Democrat to propose it, when he is not in—but if you want to break it up, here is one man who will vote with you to the limit to do away with it. If you want to make it a violation of law, if you want to make it nepotism, here is one man who will vote with you to make it nepotism to appoint the relative of a Congressman to any position. The employment of my sons ended when the Sixty-fifth Congress adjourned, and no son of mine has had Government employment since.

So far as the mileage is concerned, I had a bill in the last Congress and have introduced it again in this Congress, to reduce the mileage to actual expenses. I hope this bill will be passed.

In what I did yesterday I know I had the disapprobation of lots of my colleagues on the Democratic side. I am sorry they did not have good enough judgment to act with me when I needed votes to pass good measures, and forced me to go over and get some Republican votes in order to pass them. God Almighty taught me a long time ago that when you want to do anything—and God puts certain instrumentalities in your hands with which to do it—to use the instrumentalities to do it. And I am sorry I had to use Republican votes. [Laughter.] I wish I could have used all Democratic votes.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the fact of a Democrat using Republican votes is not a question of personal privilege. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustain the point of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Now, gentlemen, I am done, but it would not be fair for me to quit if some good Democrat or Republican wants to ask me a question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman be good enough to state to the House how many sons he has?

Mr. BLANTON. Well, sir, not quite as many as Jacob.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. We could not quite make out from the gentleman's statement whether he had three sons or one.

Mr. BLANTON. I have four, if it will furnish any information to the gentleman. Is there any other question? [Laughter.]

Mr. CARTER. Has the gentleman still one off the roll? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. I have just stated that I have none on the roll; absolutely none.

Mr. CARTER. But the gentleman had three, had he not?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I had only two at one time, covering my patronage of page and clerk in the post office, the latter for a few months only, every other Democrat here possessing the same amount of patronage accorded me.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not now talking to a matter of personal privilege. He is merely delaying the real business of this House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Oklahoma is very solicitous now about Members of Congress putting somebody on the roll. I presume I have the right to refer to him inasmuch as he has interrupted me. Now, if you want to break up this system of patronage, I am ready to vote to do it. Just as sure as you live you are going to find lots of Republican boys on the patronage roll, and they are going to be kin to Congressmen.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was about to——

Mr. BLANTON. I am not going to take up further time, but I am going to yield the floor and allow the appropriation bill to be taken up. [Applause.]

COMMITTEE ON THE MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas submits a privileged report, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, from the Committee on Rules, submits the following report:

The Committee on Rules, to which was referred House resolution 97, submit a privileged report on said resolution, with the recommendation that the resolution be agreed to.

House resolution 97.

"Resolved, That the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House of Representatives, or any subcommittee thereof, in the preparation of such legislation as may be advantageous and necessary to promote the advancement of the American merchant marine, be authorized to sit during sessions of the House and the recess of the Congress, to compel the attendance of witnesses, to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths to witnesses."

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. On that, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, there is a desire to have limited discussion on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries is confronted with the task of outlining a policy and presenting legislation to the House that will enable this Government in some way to utilize or dispose of $4,000,000,000 worth of property. Our merchant fleet has cost the Government in the neighborhood of that amount. There is now no definite policy as to how this fleet shall be utilized, whether by the Government, whether by leasing, or by sale. Many questions will arise in the preparation of such legislation as may be necessary in arriving at a conclusion as to what shall be done with our merchant fleet, and it is to meet the unusual situation that confronts the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries that this unusual resolution is offered. The committee is empowered to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths, and to sit during the recess of Congress, which are in addition to the usual privileges of this committee. The Committee on Rules thought that the facts warranted a favorable report upon this resolution and submitted it to the House.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. This resolution provides for the swearing of witnesses, and that contemplates, I imagine, the summoning of witnesses from various portions of the United States. How are we going to pay them?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That will be a matter for the House to determine later on.

Mr. GARNER. But if the House determines now to authorize the committee to summon witnesses before it, it certainly obligates itself to pay for the attendance of those witnesses, and mileage, and so forth. Has the gentleman any information as to the probable cost of the proposed investigation?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. None whatever.

Mr. GARNER. It occurs to me that the House ought to have some estimate or some prospective idea at least as to the amount. Under this resolution you can summon all the witnesses in the United States and swear them, and it is the duty of the Congress, then, to appropriate the money to pay for their attendance and mileage and the cost of having them summoned, and so forth. It occurs to me that the House ought to have some knowledge as to the proposed investigation and its probable cost.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will state, in answer to the gentleman from Texas, that it is fair to assume that the committee thus empowered will use good judgment in making liabilities for which the House is responsible.

Mr. GARNER. So far as I can recall now, I do not remember in my experience in the House of a case where that was not done.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. If I may be permitted further to answer the gentleman from Texas, it is expected that many of the witnesses—perhaps all of the witnesses who will be called upon—will neither have to be sent for nor be required to bring their papers, but will volunteer to do it. But it may be that as the matter develops it will be necessary, in some instances, to send for the witnesses, with the papers; and it was for the purpose of enabling the committee to meet such an emergency that this resolution was drawn in the manner in which it is presented.

Mr. GARNER. So far as I know, this is the first time that a resolution of this kind has been brought in, unless there was a clear estimate of what the expenses would be, and the whole matter laid before Congress. The gentleman says he has no idea of the amount of probable expense?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have no recollection of any privileged resolution submitted to the House that did estimate the amount of probable expense.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Do I understand from the gentleman from Kansas that the purpose of the exercise of the powers conferred by this resolution is to be confined exclusively to examinations as to the policy to be pursued hereafter in relation to the merchant marine?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The purpose of the resolution is very clear. I could not add to or detract from its language, and the interpretation of it is open to the view of the gentleman from Alabama. My judgment is that the resolution would be confined to legislation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want to ask the gentlemen whether, in clothing this committee with this authority and power under this resolution, it is intended that the committee shall go into an investigation of the activities of the Shipping Board during the recent emergency, as to its contracts and as to its official actions?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. There is in contemplation a thorough investigation of the Shipping Board by a separate committee, under a resolution fully authorizing such a committee to make an investigation. It is not intended that such an investigation shall be made under this resolution.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I assume, then, under the statement of the gentleman as to the purpose of the committee, if the committee should undertake activities of that character, they would be beyond the purview and spirit of this resolution?

Mr. CAMPBELL or Kansas. The minority members could make the point of order that the committee was exceeding its jurisdiction.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I happen to be a member of this committee and, as far as I am concerned, the new committee has never met. Therefore, I am asking purely for information, because I do not know what the majority members of the committee are contemplating. If I understood the gentleman, it is in contemplation to have a special committee, independent of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, for the purpose of investigating thoroughly the activities of this shipbuilding proposition during the war.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I stated that that matter was under consideration. There are, however, qualifications to be made to that statement. If it should develop during the consideration of that question that another body or a joint committee should make such an investigation, a special committee of the House probably would not be appointed.

Mr. KINCHELOE. If the gentleman has the information from the majority members of the committee, notwithstanding the committee has never met, I wish he would tell us what scope and extent is within the purview of this resolution and what is contemplated in the investigation that we shall make under this resolution.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I did not state that the contemplated investigation was to be made by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I understand that.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Or that it was to be inaugurated by that committee.

Mr. KINCHELOE. But the information I should like to get, if I can, is as to how far the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries contemplates going under this rule?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Simply to the operation of the ships, the disposition of the merchant fleet that we have acquired that has cost us in the neighborhood of $4,000,000,000, to arrive at some policy.

Mr. KINCHELOE. And not an investigation of past activities?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Except so far as to show what can be done with these ships.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Kansas, of course, realizes that under this resolution there must be such investigation as is essential to inform the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries as to the cost of the plant and the character of the plant we have and, of course, such inquiry with regard to the use of these ships as is necessary to inform the committee with regard to legislation. Their investigation is an investigation necessary to lay the foundation for legislation.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I want to reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] is entitled to 20 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I confess that I have been wholly unable to fathom the motive which inspires the passage of this resolution at this time, and because I have not understood the motive I have been somewhat hesitant in taking a position in regard to it.

We are assured by the gentlemen of the majority, and were assured in the Committee on Rules when this matter was under consideration, that it is not the purpose under this resolution to proceed with an investigation as to contracts, expenditures, and so forth. In other words, whatever smelling is done is going to be done by another committee, either joint or special, or whatever the majority may determine upon. If it were the purpose to go into that under this resolution, I will say very frankly to the gentleman that I should not oppose it. I think I can assure the gentlemen of the majority that it will not be the policy of the minority to oppose any investigating resolutions that the majority may see fit to offer. We shall insist upon the rights of the minority in these matters, but the gentlemen of the majority may lay down whatever policy they choose in regard to that. But now, since it is not for that purpose, since it is purely for legislative purposes, I repeat I can not see the necessity at this time for this resolution conferring this extraordinary power upon this committee. I realize the importance of the question which the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries is to determine. It is, in my opinion, next to the railroad question, the most important domestic question confronting the country. I sympathize with the desire of gentlemen to reach a sound conclusion upon matters of policy, but that is what they are to determine. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] has been a member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries for 20 years. He has been its chairman before and is its chairman now. He has been a profound student of merchant-marine problems. Surely he does not need to bring a man before that committee and swear him in order to determine what his policy is going to be.

Now, gentlemen of the House, I know of only one precedent—certainly there has been but one occasion during my term of service in the House—when such extraordinary powers were conferred upon one of the legislative committees for use for legislative purposes. During the Sixtieth Congress, the Congress preceding the one which passed the Payne tariff bill, the Committee on Ways and Means were clothed with authority by the House to make preliminary investigations. They sat for some months during the recess of the Sixtieth Congress. When the Congress reconvened on the first Monday in December, Mr. Payne, the then chairman of the committee, came before the House and asked unanimous consent for the consideration of a resolution upon which, I presume, this has been modeled, giving to the Committee on Ways and Means the authority to summon witnesses and swear them.

But the necessity for that had been demonstrated before it was requested, and it was not for the purpose of determining questions of policy. The questions of policy were well defined in the minds of the different members of that committee. The minority had its ideas and the majority had its ideas. The purpose was to enable them to ascertain facts.

Now, this Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries must first determine its policy, and what the necessity is for giving that committee authority to summon witnesses and to swear them I do not see. I confess I can not understand it, and it seems to me that it is making a very dangerous precedent. I do not know what committee to-morrow will conclude that it must swear witnesses in order to help them determine the question of policy. For that reason, because I am unable to see the necessity for it, absolutely unable to see the necessity for it, and because it seems to me it sets a dangerous precedent, I am opposed to it.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. I will.

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman is talking about the determination of a policy. I believe that the expression was used by the chairman of the committee. However, I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that it is not contained in the resolution. The language of the resolution is "in the preparation of such legislation as may be advantageous and necessary to promote the advancement of the American merchant marine."

Now, if the gentleman will pardon me, I think the stricture might be partly justified in consideration of the policy to be determined from the testimony of witnesses. But certainly the gentleman sees that the business to be done with regard to the merchant marine can be partially determined by the testimony of witnesses. It may be necessary to enforce their presence, and if that be the case the resolution is justified.

Mr. GARRETT. If the situation should arise, if the committee would go on like other committees of the House must go on, and like committees of the House always have gone on, until they reach a point where it was demonstrated that they had to have the power to summon witnesses and swear them, I should not then object to giving the power.

But just see what this will lead to. The rules of the House make provision as to the payment of witnesses summoned before committees. It is a small amount, but you pay them $2 a day and mileage. If this policy is entered into this precedent can be easily taken and spread out to every committee of the House, and you will reach a point where you will be paying every man who appears before a committee to discuss a question of policy. I am objecting to the precedent. I am not objecting to the committee having whatever assistance it may need.

Mr. TOWNER. I think the gentleman is hardly justified in saying that this will be considered as a precedent. It is an exceptional case; it is one of the most important matters Congress will have before it, one of the most puzzling propositions that Congress will have. Does not the gentleman believe that this will be treated as an exception?

Mr. GARRETT. Through all the history of the country committees have got along in determining their legislative attitude without having to swear men to tell them what they think the proper policy should be.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. I will.

Mr. GARNER. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that, supposing the Ways and Means Committee had asked for the same kind of a resolution, all the people that appeared before that committee would ask for a per diem and mileage, a very natural thing for them to do. In other words, we are to change the entire custom of Congress in that they come before Congress without pay and now we are going to pay them. I think it is a very dangerous precedent.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time, and I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER].

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, under the rules of the House the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries has jurisdiction of all legislation affecting the American merchant marine. It has the power, as have other committees of the House, to name days, give notice, and have public hearings. It has never been the policy of Congress to subpœna a person before a committee of Congress to express his views on legislation, and if it is the purpose of the committee to summon gentlemen who have interest in legislation, subsidies, or the farmers of the country, who are in favor of Government ownership and operation, or other interests who are in favor of private ownership and operation, to express their opinions, then, I say, that is a useless expenditure of public money, as it would be absurd to ask them to express their opinions under oath.

On May 22 and May 23 the United States Shipping Board held a conference relative to the future of the American merchant marine. All the interests of the country were invited to appear at that conference. They did appear. I have a list here of the names of the representatives of every interest in the country—farmers, manufacturers, mining interests, labor interests, shipbuilding interests, shipowning interests, commercial interests—all appeared before the board. Their statements were reduced to writing. Those hearings are now in the process of being printed, and I was told by the chairman of the Shipping Board they will be available to the membership of the House within a day or two. More than that, the Shipping Board in a few days will present to the Congress in the form of bills what they suggest as legislation to carry out the policy of the Government as regards our merchant marine. I have suggested to Mr. Hurley, the chairman of the Shipping Board, when the bills are ready to place them in the hands of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE], my esteemed colleague for many years on the committee, to be introduced in the House, and I hope the chairman will do so whether he approves them in all respects or not.

They will be referred to the committee in due course, and we then can begin hearings on the concrete propositions presented by the bills and can approve or modify or reject them, as we think best.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries during years past has always reserved to itself the privilege of recasting any legislation proposed to that committee, and during each year that I was chairman of that committee we have never divided on partisan lines, except once and on the shipping bill, and on only two propositions in that bill. As the ranking minority member on that committee I think I can express the sentiment of the minority and say that we intend to cooperate with the majority in every possible way to frame a sensible, sane shipping policy in the light of present conditions, so that these Government-owned ships, built with the people's money at such great cost, may be taken over and controlled or disposed of in some way in the interests of the people, whether it shall be under Government ownership and operation or under private ownership and operation, with the Government control provided by the shipping act. These are questions about which I do not think there will be any serious division in the committee. I assume that we will all undertake to report out legislation that will accomplish the great objects that all of us have in mind.

I assume the next step of the chairman of the committee, if this resolution is agreed to, will be to go before the Committee on Accounts and ask for additional clerks for the committee and ask for counsel to advise the committee. All that will involve expense and is absolutely useless.

I do not want to be placed in the attitude of opposition. If the chairman of this committee thinks it is necessary, in order for him to carry forward the work of this committee, to give him this additional power, well enough, but from my viewpoint it is absolutely unnecessary.

It will be time enough to grant the committee the extraordinary powers asked for when it is made plain to the House that the occasion or necessity has arisen.

No reason has been given thus far by the chairman of the Committee on Rules for this useless expenditure of money, nor were any good reasons given in the hearings before the Committee on Rules for the adoption of this resolution.

Until that is done I do not see any occasion for the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS].

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, extraordinary times bring the need for extraordinary measures. Gentlemen on the minority side seem to be afraid that the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries is going to use this power recklessly in expending the money of the Government. They know well that the committee will not expend any more money than is absolutely necessary.

The question of policy has been brought up. I have not much time to expound what I intended to, but I want to say this: I want to tell the House a few of the things that this committee will have to look into under the head of policy. In the first place, we have legislation on the books which allows the Shipping Board to have certain control over freight rates. With their present experience in running ships it will be absolutely necessary to take up the question of how that legislation is going to be handled in the future; whether it needs amendment; whether it needs extension. Upon this will depend a great deal whether this country is going to build up a merchant marine. A great many of the ship authorities are opposed to this freight supervision. It may be right, it may be wrong, and through an investigation of this important question it is going to be necessary, possibly, to bring some interested witnesses before us.

It means looking into the postal subvention law of 1891 to see why it did not build up a merchant marine, and whether an amendment to that law is necessary. It means an investigation into the subsidy question and all the different ramifications of a subsidy. It means an investigation into the necessity of the discontinuance of the insurance bureau, and also why the American insurance companies do not get the insurance on the ships. It means an investigation and inquiry into the necessity of continuing the law which admits foreign-built ships into American registry. It means an investigation into the policy of continuing the right of foreign ships to operate in our coastwise trade. It means legislation necessary to insure the manning of these ships and the very important feature of this work that will be. It means an investigation into the necessary improvements of our ports and harbors, so that freight can be handled economically. It means also an investigation into the relations of the railroads to these ships, to see whether some joint action can not be taken in respect to freight rates to keep these ships on the sea.

All of these things are going to require a great deal of time and a great deal of labor, and, in answer to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER], the former chairman of the committee and ranking minority member on the committee, I will say that I have always found that men who are interested in legislation come before you, and that as a general thing you do not get the man you want. He may be too busy, or he may not want to come for some reason or other.

I think the committee should have full power to utilize that power in case they find it necessary. They should have every power that is possible for this House to give them. There has not been since I have been before this House a question that is of larger import to the future business and the future interests of this country than the question that is now before us.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. EDMONDS. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. What is the money value of the Government's holdings in the present merchant marine, both in executed contracts and those to be executed?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to extend my remarks, and in that extension I shall endeavor to put the information for which the gentleman asks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] asks how many ships there will be when the program is completed. On April 26 of this year there had been delivered completed to the Shipping Board 4,239,706 tons of shipping, and the entire program as at that time outlined in Director General Piez's report contemplated, when completed, a fleet of 2,464 ships, with a dead-weight tonnage of 14,113,336 and an expenditure of $3,119,093,138. This, of course, is actual expenditure for ships and does not include yards and plants, housing, transportation, nor overhead expenses.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request—that I may be permitted to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Five minutes.

Mr. GARRETT. Does the gentleman desire me to proceed now? If so, I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, I think I can oppose the passage of this resolution with entire propriety, and without reflecting in the slightest degree upon the fairness or correctness of the intentions of the majority members of that committee. I think the resolution may well be opposed upon the ground already stated, that there has not been shown any real necessity for the conferring of the extraordinary powers sought by this resolution. I submit that statement, Mr. Speaker, from my slight experience of two years as a member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, when we certainly had under investigation some very serious and pressing public questions. I am sure that it will be the testimony of each member of that committee that in those investigations of great and prime importance which we had during the last session that instead of having any difficulty in procuring the attendance of witnesses whose opinions we sought, that our chief difficulty was to confine the testimony, to weed out and limit the testimony, of the great number of witnesses who appeared in those investigations and made statements there; and I feel reasonably assured that in the scope of the enlarged investigation of these great problems that, as has already been stated by the gentleman from Tennessee, this committee will have to look into they will experience no difficulty and no obstacles in procuring the voluntary attendance of men who are experts—men who are deeply and vitally interested in every phase of the development of our merchant marine. This is in the nature of a new precedent we are seeking to establish here, and in the absence of a showing of some paramount necessity for the invocation of this extraordinary power, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that it would be unwise on the part of the House to establish this precedent. If you authorize this committee to summon one witness by the distinguished chairman of the committee in the beginning of our investigation that would be a precedent; and as we have got to expect human nature to operate in these matters, every man who subsequently comes before the committee, whether from the Pacific coast, or from the southern country, or from the far northeast, will expect and positively demand, as a matter of equity to him, his per diem and mileage, and possibly his expenses. So, for these reasons, and in the absence, at least up to the present time, of any showing for the necessity for the powers conferred, it seems to me this resolution ought to be defeated. If, after we get into an investigation of these matters, it develops that there are some recalcitrant witnesses who do not desire to appear and disclose things peculiarly within their knowledge, then, it seems to me, gentlemen of the House, it will be full time to come back here and ask for the passage of a resolution of this character. But upon the face of the failure to show this necessity, in view of the fact that this committee has at all times had the benefit of the gratuitous appearance, the voluntary appearance, of witnesses who are acquainted with facts we had under investigation, and in view of the fact it seems to be an unwarranted and possibly, in its ramifications in the future, a dangerous precedent, it seems to me, without any disrespect to the majority members of the Merchant Marine Committee—because I am sure we will all cooperate in the spirit of harmony—on the basis of the showing already made for the necessity of the resolution, that the majority members ought to be willing not to press it at this time.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Does the gentleman think it would be at least essential, and not be so premature, if the committee had been called together one time at least to decide upon this policy and determine whether it was unanimous or not?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Well, that is a question of propriety with which I do not desire to take issue. I believe that is all I care to say, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I see no reason for alarm in this resolution. In the first place, it does not set a precedent. One has already been set for the resolution, and even if it did the Members of the House should not fear setting a precedent. It is not necessary to follow it in the future unless conditions arise that make it necessary. Gentlemen make use of the statement that witnesses will voluntarily appear, that such parties will come before the committee. True, it has been stated that interested parties have volunteered to appear before the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries in the past. That is true, but this is also true, that those interested witnesses have not enabled the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries to develop a plan by which in the future it would handle in the neighborhood of $4,000,000,000 worth—not worthless property but property that has cost the Government in the neighborhood of $4,000,000,000—for the purpose of arriving at a just and a wise conclusion as to how much of that $4,000,000,000 will have to be written off before these ships can be operated by our Government or by private individuals under lease or sale. So it becomes necessary for a very wide investigation into the cost of the ships and into the future policy of their operation.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. FESS. Is not this the first specific time that the Congress has been making an effort to establish a policy as to the merchant marine?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I think the gentleman's question answers itself. This is the first time that it has been contemplated that a policy should be developed, whether Government ownership or Government control, or whether we shall lease these ships or sell them, or how much shall be written off in the cost of these ships. I hear it stated that in the neighborhood of 50 cents on the dollar will have to be written off. If so, we will have to throw away at the outset in the neighborhood of $2,000,000,000.

Those are some of the questions that confront this committee. And in arriving at a just conclusion it will not always be safe to follow the advice of some interested party. It may be necessary to send for an important party that is not interested.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield for a question.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why did not the chairman of the committee call his committee together and consult about this thing before coming in with this resolution? What is the committee for?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Does the gentleman refer to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is exactly what I do.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I understand they had a hearing on this resolution and agreed to it substantially.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have been informed they never did.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The minority members were not present.

Mr. ALEXANDER. There has not been a meeting of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The majority members of the committee are not a committee.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. But the responsibility of the legislation they shall bring out will be upon them in the future.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That may be true. I am objecting to the juggling performance of the majority members of the committee acting for the whole committee. They may have the responsibility.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The responsibility rests upon the majority members of the committee and on the majority of this House for the policy to be pursued.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The responsibility rests on the majority of the whole committee.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I have been informed that the minority members were invited to appear before the Rules Committee by the chairman of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know; but I am not talking about the Rules Committee. The Rules Committee has one form of action and this Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries has another, and the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries should get together the whole committee to consider this question as to what they want to do, and work out a plan and bring it in here and submit it to the House sitting as a jury in the case.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] permit me to ask the gentleman from Missouri a question?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The question has not been put to the House. I suggest that the vote be taken, and the absence of a quorum suggested afterwards.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. Obviously, no quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the passage of the resolution will, as their names are called, answer "yea," and those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 184, nays 133, answered "present" 3, not voting 109, as follows:

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, I voted "nay," but I have a general pair with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. MCFADDEN, and I desire to change my vote from "nay" to "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present, and the Doorkeeper will open the doors.

On motion of Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 4226, being the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill, with Mr. TOWNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 4226. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4226) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bathing beach: Superintendent, $720; 2 watchmen, at $500 each; temporary services, supplies, and maintenance, $4,500; for repairs to buildings, pools, and upkeep of ground, $1,780, to be available immediately; in all, $8,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the words "to be available immediately."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts will please state the point of order. It is on the ground of new legislation?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. What does the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] say?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think perhaps it is subject to the point of order; but all these appropriations, I believe, will be immediately available anyhow.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD: Page 28, line 11, after the semicolon, insert "life saving and resuscitating appliances, $1,000."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order is reserved by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I am influenced to offer this amendment because of the fact that the bathing beach in the city of Washington is used by a great number of people, and used most beneficially by nearly all. But I think no one can go by this great public convenience and utility in the summer time without being convinced of the necessity of safeguarding the place against the loss of human life more than it is now safeguarded. At the present time there is no telephone connected with the bathing beach and no means of communicating with a physician in the event of finding one half drowned or ill. There is no pulmotor or any other instrument for artificial respiration for those partly overcome in the water.

The amendment I have in mind is in connection with the supplies and maintenance and has for its purpose the installation in this bathing beach of a pulmotor and such other life-saving and life-resuscitating appliances as are necessary to safeguard human life. I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will not insist upon his reservation of the point of order against the amendment.

Only the other day a man, I believe, from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing or the Government Printing Office, was drowned there. His absence from his companions was not discovered and his body was not recovered until, with the facilities they had at hand, it was impossible to bring back the spark of life. It has been said in the newspapers that had sufficient appliances been available down there at this bathing beach, had there been a pulmotor, had there been sufficient life guards, had there been any appliances for resuscitation, this man's life might have been saved.

Now, to say that any appropriation, no matter how much it may be within reason, should be stricken out here is entirely untenable, because it is a provision for the safety and preservation of human life. The amendment which I offer has for its purpose the carrying into the best effect of what is undoubtedly the intent of those who have this bathing beach in charge. Therefore, I offer the amendment, and should the gentleman from Massachusetts insist upon his point of order I will ask to be heard upon that. But I trust that the gentleman will not insist upon his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts insist upon his point of order?

Mr. WALSH. I make the point of order.

Mr. GARD. What is the point of order made by the gentleman?

Mr. WALSH. The point of order is that this is an appropriation not authorized by law and is, in effect, legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by me is really supplementary to the phrase "temporary services, supplies, and maintenance, $4,500." It is intended to take its place between the item of "temporary services, supplies, and maintenance" and the item for "repairs to buildings, pools, and upkeep of grounds, $1,780." Of course, if the amendment obtains, an increase of $1,000 will be necessary to the final amount. But the point that I make is that it is not legislation upon an appropriation bill unless it is new matter to be inserted, since it pertains merely to the specifications of that which must be held to be applied as maintenance for the bathing beach.

It is idle to say that if a municipal corporation authorizes the use of a beach, a place where people are in the water, that that municipal corporation must not attend that bathing beach with every possible safeguard, and when the legislative provision calls for supplies and maintenance it is not an embarkation upon new legislation or legislation upon an appropriation bill when an extension is made for not only the convenience and comfort of the people but the safety of the people. Therefore I contend, Mr. Chairman, upon the point of order as made by the gentleman from Massachusetts that it is not legislation upon an appropriation bill and it is not new matter incorporated; that it is merely legislative description and definiton and extenson of necessary articles in the conduct of this bathing beach and is in no wise subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The facts stated, in the judgment of the Chair, constitute new matter and new legislation. If it is the desire of the gentleman merely to increase the amount stated for a specific purpose, of course he might present that in the form of an amendment. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GARD. I did not understand what the Chair said.

The CHAIRMAN. In the course of the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio he said this is merely a restatement in other form of some of the provisions already provided for in the paragraph. If that be true, the proper method for reaching the gentleman's purpose would be to increase the amount of the appropriation rather than to insert new language. The Clerk will read.

Mr. GARD. Under the suggestion made by the Chair I offer an amendment to strike out the figures "$8,000," in line 12, on page 28, and to insert in lieu thereof the figures "$9,000," to carry into effect the purposes I have mentioned.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 28, line 12, strike out "$8,000" and insert "$9,000."

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that I was satisfied that the gentleman's amendment was subject to a point of order, I did not make the explanation which I will now make. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that the matter he desires to cover in his amendment applies to what is called the Tidal Basin, and the appropriation for that is carried in the sundry civil bill and has nothing whatever to do with the item now under consideration. There is a concrete pool down on the Mall which this applies to, but the matter to which he refers is carried in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. GARD. I am not talking about the concrete pool on the Mall.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is what this item refers to here.

Mr. GARD. Where is this place called the bathing beach?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is down in the Mall near the Monument, across from the new War and Navy Building—a concrete pool.

Mr. GARD. A pool?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. GARD. It is not the place in the Tidal Basin which was newly opened the other day?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. No.

Mr. GARD. Then I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. TREADWAY. In view of the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio in reference to the Tidal Basin, which was the item he supposed was under discussion, but which appears not to have been the subject referred to in the bill, I wish to supplement what the gentleman from Ohio has said in criticism of the methods of conduct of the Tidal Basin bathing beach, so called. Two or three days ago I had occasion to give the matter some inquiry, and I called to the attention of Col. Ridley, who, I believe, has the Tidal Basin bathing beach in charge, the same matter which I am now about to state.

During the past few days, when the weather has been so extremely hot, there has been a large influx of people desirous of using that beach. I get it on the best of information that the manner in which the beach has been managed is grossly negligent. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] referred to one drowning.

Information reaches me that two days ago a young lady who was bathing there came very near losing her life because of the fact that the guards stationed there were absolutely incompetent; and had it not been for the presence of a former member of the Navy, who rescued the girl and took her to the shore, she certainly would not have been in a condition to be resuscitated when she reached land.

The accommodations have been overtaxed, and there is a feature which appears to me to be extremely dangerous, namely, that just beyond the life lines the depth goes very quickly over anyone's head, and if a person should venture beyond the life line he is liable to be in immediate danger of drowning unless he is an expert swimmer. The service given by the attendants there has been wretched, I am credibly informed, and some features of the sanitary conditions are very bad. Two days ago I called to the attention of Col. Ridley these same matters which I have now stated, and he promised to make an immediate inquiry into the conditions I named. Since then I have heard nothing from them. I make no criticism of him or of his management, but I make this statement in view of the statement of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD], which supplements it, for the purpose of calling sufficient attention to these conditions to protect the public in going to that beach in such large numbers as they have been doing during the past few days. It is a condition that ought not to be allowed to continue, and whoever is responsible for it certainly ought to give it immediate attention, because the information that I have endeavored to convey to the House can be substantiated on the very best evidence. Therefore I think it is up to Congress to know of these facts and to see that some remedy is quickly found in order to accomplish the purpose the gentleman from Ohio referred to, namely, the saving of lives at the Tidal Basin. It is not with a view of offering any criticism that I am making this statement, but in the hope of a correction of the condition.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries: Supervisor, $2,500; inspector of playgrounds, $1,200; clerk (stenographer and typewriter), $1,200; to be employed not exceeding 10 months—22 directors of playgrounds or recreation centers at $75 per month each, assistant director at $60 per month, general utility man at $60 per month; to be employed not exceeding 7 months—3 assistant directors at $60 per month each, 4 assistant directors at $50 per month each; to be employed not exceeding 4 months—5 guards or swimming teachers at $60 per month each; to be employed not exceeding 3 months—4 assistant directors at $60 per month each, 22 assistants at $50 per month each; to be employed 12 months—22 watchmen at $50 per month each, clerk (who shall be a bookkeeper) at $75 per month; for services of extra directors at not exceeding 35 cents per hour, $800; for services of extra watchmen at not exceeding 25 cents per hour, $600; in all, $45,980.

Mr. WALSH. I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. What authority is there for employing five guards or swimming teachers at $60 per month each for not exceeding four months?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I do not know that there is any specific authority for it, but it has been carried in the bill for several years. It is in the current law.

Mr. WALSH. Where?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. For five guards or swimming teachers for four months, at $60 per month each, $1,200.

Mr. WALSH. Under what item is that?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Under the item of playgrounds.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Lighting: For purchase, installation, and maintenance of public lamps, lamp-posts, street designations, lanterns, and fixtures of all kinds on streets, avenues, roads, alleys, and public spaces, and for all necessary expenses in connection therewith, including rental of stables and storerooms, livery and extra labor, this sum to be expended in accordance with the provisions of sections 7 and 8 of the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1912 and with the provisions of the District of Columbia appropriations act for the fiscal year 1913, and other laws applicable thereto, $415,000.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, on page 31, line 23, the word "therewith" is incorrectly spelled. I ask to have it corrected.

Mr. GARD. I think that yesterday, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON], the Clerk was authorized to make typographical changes in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Officers: Superintendent, $6,000; assistant superintendents—1 $3,500, 1 $3,000; director of intermediate instruction, 13 supervising principals, supervisor of manual training, and director of primary instruction, 16 in all, at a minimum salary of $2,200 each; secretary, $2,000; financial clerk, $2,000; clerks—1 $1,600, 1 $1,400, 1 $1,200, 3 at $1,000 each, 1 (to carry out the provisions of the child-labor law) $900; 2 stenographers, at $1,000 each; messenger, $720; in all, $62,520.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word to make an inquiry of the chairman of the committee relative to the item "clerk, $900 to carry out the provision of the child-labor law." I hold in my hand the law conferring on the Commissioners of the District of Columbia the regulation of the employment of child labor in this District. It provides that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to appoint two inspectors to carry out the provisions of that law at a compensation of $1,200. I assume that all these appointments have been made, and I therefore rise to learn if this clerk attached to the office of the superintendent is merely for clerical work involved in the report the different inspectors may make to the school authorities. My observation is that the child-labor law of the District of Columbia is not sufficient either in its text or in its administration. No one can read what the law is and observe the general conditions in Washington and have any idea that there is anything but the slightest pretext of carrying out the child-labor law.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that one of the great measures of the country to-day is in the conservation of child life, in seeing that every child within its years of childhood has an opportunity for education and play so that it may grow up to be a healthy, useful, and intelligent citizen. Therefore all States are united in condemning the evil of child labor, and to say that in the District of Columbia there should be no greater provision made for the inspection in all the different positions where children are employed than to have two inspectors at a salary of $1,200 is to say that the child-labor law and its administration is almost negligible in the District of Columbia.

I realize, of course, that I am speaking somewhat outside of the record on this appropriation bill, since it is a matter primarily for the concern of the Committee on the District of Coumbia. But I am concerned, as I think every good citizen should be concerned, in this question of child labor, the furnishing of proper schools, the question of playgrounds in connection with their health, and so I make the inquiry whether or not this $900 clerk is to afford any assistance in carrying out the child-labor law in the District of Columbia.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will inform the gentleman somewhat as to his inquiry. I am reading from volume 36, Statutes at Large, page 990:

The major and superintendent of police shall hereafter detail two privates of the Metropolitan Police for the enforcement of the provisions of the act "To regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia, approved May 28, 1908."

This $900 clerk is for clerical labor in connection with the child-labor law. That is all there is to it. The $900 is for clerical assistance to keep track of these matters.

Mr. GARD. Is there any provision in the law except this clerk for the board of education, or school officers, and the assignment of two persons at a salary of $1,200 each for the administration of the child-labor law in the District of Columbia?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I know of none; I have read all the law on the subject. If the gentleman objects to this $900 clerk, he can make the point of order.

Mr. GARD. Oh, I do not object; what I am objecting to is because they do not have more. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Class 5, 136 at $950 each, including vocational and trade instructors.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I wish to offer an amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SISSON. I will state to the committee that the basic salary by law of these teachers of this grade is $800. I think class 5 is $800.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will state to the gentleman that we have not made any change in class 5. The next salary to class 5 is $960.

Mr. SISSON. Not under the longevity law.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes. We did not change class 5, I will inform the gentleman. It has not been changed since the Fifty-ninth Congress.

Mr. SISSON. Then, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order, because it is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska: Page 34, line 23, after the word "and," strike out the word "thirty" and insert the word "forty" in lieu thereof, and at the end of line 24 add the words "and 10 librarians in high and normal schools."

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, this involves a transfer from the following page 36. This amendment proposes the transfer of 10 librarians from the positions noted on page 36 to be entered with class 5, page 34, among the teachers, instead of among the clerks. As these librarians render considerable service as teachers, they should be classed among the teachers instead of among the clerks. Moreover, the volume of work they do as teachers, from my understanding of the question, entitles them to a classification along with the teachers on the same basic salary, $950, as is proposed here. It will be understood by those who have inquired into the matter that these librarians are educators in the strict sense of the word. They help the high and normal school students in their studies very materially. Anyone who has occasion to study the question, and especially who has been a teacher, knows full well that the person who aids the student in gathering knowledge is quite as important as the teacher.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands, the gentleman from Mississippi made the point of order.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. I wanted the gentleman to have an opportunity to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desired to know whether the gentleman from Nebraska was discussing the point of order.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I was discussing the amendment, and understood the gentleman from Mississippi simply reserved the point of order. As I was about to say, a librarian teacher is one of the most useful persons in guiding the work of the students, and in the library the students are taught how to discover knowledge, are aided in their work so that the volume of work done by those librarians in their capacity as teachers, along with the work of librarian, I think clearly entitles them to the same grade and classification as those in class 5, with a basic salary of $950.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard?

Mr. SISSON. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that he thinks it is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. SISSON. Then I would like to be heard. The salaries of all the teachers in class A, class 5, class 4 are fixed by the longevity law. Librarians are not in that longevity class, and it is clearly legislation to put the librarians in class 5 with the longevity law.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will notice the statement made by the gentleman from Nebraska, he stated that on page 36 the librarians are included in class 5, so that there would not be a change in classification to transfer them from that item to the present item.

Mr. SISSON. It would then be subject to a point of order, because you are raising the salary of the librarians from $840 to $950. You are increasing the salary of the librarian by the amendment. I think that makes it clearly subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the $840 on page 6 the statutory law?

Mr. SISSON. That is the current law. We have not yet reached that item. I could not, of course, raise the point of order on that item until it is reached. It embodies, of course, the same point of order that might lie against the $840. My recollection is that the salary of the librarians has been increased by the committee, and we carry an increase of salary there which would also be subject to the point of order, but this is clearly subject to the point of order because it raises the salary above the $840.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to make a few observations which I think are pertinent here upon the situation of the teacher. In doing so, I am not offering any criticism of either the committee or of the school situation in the District of Columbia. I notice that the number of teachers given in the District is 2,035. I read in a report of a hearing yesterday that the average salary of the teacher in the District is $1,100. That is a very good showing in comparison with the average salary of the teachers throughout the country. I called up the Department of Education to ascertain whether they had the exact figures for the average salary of the teacher throughout the country, and they said that they had not anything more recent than 1916. At that time the average salary was $563. I saw a statement that I do not offer as accurate, because I have had no opportunity to verify it, that the average salary throughout the country in 1919 is $630. The Bureau of Education was not able to verify that statement.

I also asked the bureau whether they had figures upon the number of teachers called into the service by the war, and they said that from the secondary schools 170,000 were taken, and if you include the colleges and universities and normal schools, and so forth, it would reach 200,000. The number of teachers throughout the United States is about 650,000, and you can readily see what proportion of the entire number went into the service. The proportion of male teachers to the entire number is about 20 per cent. Twenty per cent of 650,000 would be less than the total number that went into the service. Therefore, that figure included women teachers who have been called to Washington and elsewhere to enter the service of the Government during the war.

The problem now is to induce teachers who have gone into the service to return to the teaching profession. If any Member of Congress will consult with his friends who went out of the profession into the service he will be impressed with the desire not to return to the teaching business. I have made a little investigation along that line and I find that the service in the military realm has very much dissatisfied the teacher for the work he or she was in before the war. We have a severe problem there.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. KREIDER. Does the gentleman know what the average length of service per year is? How many months?

Mr. FESS. The average length of term for the year in the States varies greatly. In Ohio the minimum is nine months, and in the gentleman's State I think it is eight months. In some States it is much less.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. At the point at which the gentleman closed just before asking for an extension of time the gentleman from Ohio was discussing the average length of the school year. It was ascertained by the Committee on the District of Columbia yesterday from the Superintendent of Public Instruction that for the District of Columbia the scholastic year is 180 days.

Mr. FESS. One hundred and eighty days of school work. I thank my friend for that information. I think the questioner wanted a nation-wide answer, which I have not now in mind.

Mr. KREIDER. Because the gentleman quoted the average wage, I was anxious to have the average length of time as applied to wages.

Mr. FESS. Now, let me have your attention just a moment on that particular item. There is some little opposition to a fairly good salary to teachers on the basis that they do not teach all the year. Let me say to the membership here that that is one of the most unfortunate features of school work, that there is an enforced vacation without the option of the teacher of a good portion of the year that is hurtful to him rather than helpful, and they have attempted to cure that in some places by hiring a teacher for 12 months, with a tenure in teaching for 9 months, and giving a monthly salary that will carry the teacher through his vacation. It is a serious situation, gentlemen, and let me state again I am not finding fault either with the committee or with what is going on in this District. The committee has done well and the District is doing, I think, creditably on behalf of the teachers, but I want to know under the exigencies of the time what are we going to do for the schools of the country unless we make an appreciation of some sort in the way of remuneration. Let me suggest some facts that I am sure the Congressman has not in his mind. A teacher to enter the high schools of this District—I have not looked up the ruling, but I am absolutely certain I am correct, for I do not go in the statement beyond what are the requirements of the high school in the States and I know that the District of Columbia is not in its demands below the average State—a teacher to enter the high-school service throughout the States must have the qualifications, first, of a high-school education, which means four years after the grades; a normal school education in many States, which means not less than two years and in some States four years beyond the high school, and, my friends, the distinguished gentleman from the third district of Ohio [Mr. GARD] has cities in his district that will not accept any teacher in any high school who has not a college diploma. What is true in his case is true in many States of the Union. A man or woman can not get into a first-class college without a first-grade high-school diploma, and a first-grade high-school diploma means mathematics up to the point of trigonometry and in language, four years of Latin and a certain amount of modern language and even some colleges include Greek. Greek, however, is being dropped out, but Latin is not. This suggests the time and money as well as energy required to teach in a high school. If you put the wage of one who needs no training above the teacher, would any teacher spend the four years in the high school and from two to four years in normal school and four years in a college or university and summer terms in our universities in order to get a salary less than paid for a man or woman who needs no training of any sort?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. GARD. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARD. Does the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FESS. I will yield to my friend from Ohio.

Mr. GARD. With reference to the argument which the gentleman is making on this very pertinent matter I have simply to say that I saw a statement in the press the other day that hod carriers are now making $6 a day.

Mr. FESS. A statement which I think is true, and which represents a general fact in the range of remuneration.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I will.

Mr. BEE. What is the qualification for a teacher in the schools of Washington, must he first have a high-school education——

Mr. FESS. I have not looked that up, but, of course, I am sure the high school requires specially trained teachers.

Mr. SISSON. They require in the District a diploma from a college or a normal school. The District of Columbia have accredited schools from which they take teachers from outside the District.

Mr. BEE. What is the average compensation and what is the lowest compensation paid to a teacher?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It is $800.

Mr. FESS. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. We had quite extensive hearings upon the question now suggested by the gentleman from Ohio, and a very bright teacher made the following statement in response to a question by myself:

> As you understand, a teacher in the high schools of the District of Columbia has to have a college degree to begin with, the standard college degree—an A. B. or B. S. degree.

Mr. FESS. That is my understanding. It is the general rule throughout the North and West.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is for a high-school teacher at the present time. Now, I do not wish to encroach upon the time, but I think I can—perhaps I had rather wait until the gentleman finishes, and then I will make a little further explanation in regard to the present salaries of the teachers of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BEE. That is what I wanted to find out—what the lowest salary was.

Mr. FESS. The observation I want to make to Members, not suggesting there will be any change in this bill, because I think under the general conditions throughout the country the committee has done fairly well, but in order that we may see with eyes open the situation facing the school work of the country.

I can not for my life see how you can enlist the type of men and women that we ought to have to preside over the most precious, if not the greatest, source of wealth of the country, namely, the childhood of the Nation, at the rate we are paying for a man or woman teacher unless the teachers are subject to such an altruistic impulse that they are wanting to give their time as a sacrifice and who otherwise would be foolish to go on to make all the sacrifices in order to meet all the requirements of all the years to get ready to do a work that pays a salary so much below that commanded by other work that requires absolutely no training. [Applause.] This is a problem that faces me and you, and I wanted to get the facts before the Congress with the hope that in the period of high prices, as to the teachers, whose salaries are fixed and are suffering under a situation as if their salaries have been cut in two, because they get the same but pay twice for what they live on, there might be a movement to either bring the cost of necessaries down, if we know how to do it, or else lift the salaries of the teachers to a place where they can meet the increased cost. For you can not secure the type of character to direct the plastic mind of the youth so as to grow not wealth nor to multiply dollars, but to grow men and women of strong heart power and strong will power—for they must come out of the schools of the country—at these low salaries. I dislike to know that we are paying more for brawn than we are for brain, and we should show a little appreciation for the development of the future citizens in their ability to do the work that the country will demand.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended one minute, so that I may ask him a question.

Mr. FESS. I will yield for one minute if the time is extended.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman will remember that when we passed the bill to establish a minimum wage of $3 for laborers in the District I offered an amendment that we should at the same time establish a minimum wage of $4 for every day in the year for teachers, and the gentleman will remember what happened to that amendment by the vote of the House. I think $4 should be a minimum of wage for teachers.

Mr. FESS. Replying to my friend, my mind is not refreshed on that subject as he mentions it. The only thing I have in mind is as to how a man or woman can continue in such line of training at such salary as $563 per year.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], the chairman of the committee.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, prior to the year 1918, prior to the 1919 law, which is in force at the present time, the basic salaries for the low-grade teachers were as follows under, of course, the longevity system: Class 1, the lowest-paid teacher, was $500 per annum; class 2 was $600 per annum; class 3 was $650 per annum; class 4, $800 per annum; class 5, $950 per annum; class 6, $1,000 per annum. That was the basic salary up to the current law, which is the law of 1919.

Mr. BEE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think I will answer the gentleman's question. I would not suggest these things now if we had not gone by the opportunity to make a point of order.

Mr. FESS. That is why I did not raise the question.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. In the bill that failed to become a law, when my colleague from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] was chairman, we raised the basic salaries as follows: Class 1, of $500, we raised to $750. Mind you, that is the law. Class 2, of $600, we raised to $750; class 3, of the $650 class, we raised to $800, and class 4, the $800 class, we raised to $850.

Now, we have raised in this bill—and we have gotten beyond the point of order—all of the lower class $50 apiece more. So at the present time the lowest-paid teacher in the District of Columbia gets $800 salary and $240 bonus, or $1,040 in all, if this bill becomes a law; and I believe it will, since we have gone beyond the point of order. Have I answered the gentleman's question as to the low-grade teachers?

Mr. BEE. Yes, sir. Here is what I wanted to suggest to the gentleman: I think the committee is to be congratulated upon its raising the salaries, but may I express the hope—and I think that is rather a familiar sound—that the next time the committee reports it will report a basic salary of not less than $1,200 for every teacher in the public schools in Washington.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will say this in response to what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] has said. He asks the question, and a very pertinent question, as to what we are going to do to get teachers. That is a conundrum. I will simply say this, that before the war and up to, as I say, the first or second year of the war, the low-grade teacher was getting only $500 a year. Now, if you gentlemen will be kind enough to pass this bill, and we succeed in getting it through the Senate, we will have a little more than doubled it. As to whether that will keep the teachers here or not is a conundrum. I think my esteemed friend, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], will be better able to answer that than I can. But we have done the very best we could under the conditions. In other words, we have $40 more than doubled the price of pay of the low-grade teachers since the war began. Whether that is enough or not I can not say. But that is what we submit to you gentlemen here. I am in favor of paying the teachers a good living always, because I am satisfied they earn it—of course, they work only nine months a year—and that has been demonstrated by the gentleman from Ohio to my satisfaction.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

As to what my colleague has said about the salary of teachers, the current law raises the salary for the lowest grade teachers from $500 to $750, plus the bonus. Under the present bonus and present salary, in two years a teacher's salary, in the low grades, has been increased over 100 per cent. It seems to me that is going some. But the chairman of the committee has not told you all the story. He did not tell you that the very next year the teacher who enters on a basic salary of $1,040 now will get a bonus of $240.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. If the gentleman will permit me, the reason I did not tell that was that in my enthusiasm for the teachers I forgot it.

Mr. SISSON. Yes. You can not tell what a teacher's salary is by reading this bill. If you will look over here and see that something like $500,000 is carried in this bill to cover longevity pay, you will then begin to understand that in addition to the item of $1,000,000 you must carry nearly $500,000 to pay this longevity pay. In other words, the teacher who teaches a year gets the next year a longevity increase, and the next year an increase over that, and so on for 10 years, the increase being $50 each year.

Now, when the basic salary has been increased and the teacher has been teaching for 10 years, that longevity pay amounts to something like $500, so you must add that $500 to the $540—made up of the $300 and the $240, which makes $540—and longevity pay added makes $1,040, which, of course, is more than is carried on the face of the bill for the teacher if she has been teaching 10 years.

Now, I do not think anyone could complain of what the District subcommittee has done for the school-teachers of Washington. There are thousands of school-teachers in the city and country schools all over this country who would be most happy, indeed, to be treated half as well as we treat them in the city of Washington.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I stated that the average teacher throughout the country received $560.

Mr. SISSON. Yes; and I understand the gentleman does not condemn this. But I have heard so much complaint in the newspapers and oral complaint in Washington about the pay of the teachers that I thought this was the time and the occasion when this subcommittee and this Congress might defend itself against the unwarranted charges that have been brought against it.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. BEE. Reiterating my admiration for the committee for their splendid work in this line, I should like my friend from Mississippi to explain the method of the longevity pay.

Mr. SISSON. Well, my friend the chairman of the subcommittee wants to get through this bill as speedily as possible. But if you will get the law and read it over you will find the provisions regarding longevity pay all written out. For instance, they provide a basic salary—that is, the entrance salary—and the second year they get additional pay. We will take, for example, class 2 or class 3. In that case the additional pay is $50, so that if the basic salary is $800, the next year they get $850, and the year after that they get $900, and the year after that $950, and so on.

Mr. BEE. That answers the question.

Mr. SISSON. I am sure the Board of Education and the Auditor of the District, as well as the members of your subcommittee, have never yet been able to figure out accurately what the longevity pay would amount to in any one year.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. KREIDER. Does the District of Columbia have a teachers' retirement fund so that when they reach a certain age they can continue to draw pay?

Mr. SISSON. No; there is nothing of that here.

Mr. KREIDER. We have that in Pennsylvania. I just wanted to know.

Mr. SISSON. They have no pensions here; but I think in view of what the committee has done for the teachers here, Members of Congress ought to be willing at least to say to the people when they go back home, "We have done more for the teachers of the District of Columbia than we are doing for you teachers at home," because that is true. [Applause.] The highest basic salary in the United States to teachers is in Boston and Philadelphia. Cleveland has a very good basic salary. I will not worry you with figures, but here they are. But when you add the longevity pay to the teachers in the lower grades, the teachers of the District of Columbia are found to head the list of them all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Since the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] has been talking about longevity pay, I will say it is something that I have never yet been able to fathom myself, and never yet have I found anybody who was able to fathom it satisfactorily to anybody else. But I hold in my hand a document which I ask leave to insert in the RECORD, the May pay roll for the teachers of the District of Columbia, upon an annual basis, the actual pay roll. This, however, only includes the $120 bonus, and not the $240 bonus which they will get next month, after the 1st of July; and it does not include on the lower grade the $50 that you have put in here.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. In other words, the statement that the gentleman proposes to put in the RECORD is a statement of the money that was actually paid to the teachers of the District of Columbia for the month of May, reduced to an annual basis?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes. But, as I say, this includes only the $120 bonus, and on the 1st of July they will be entitled to an additional $120; and, of course, added to this for the month of July, if we pass this bill, will be the $50 additional which each one of the low-grade teachers will receive.

Now, with that explanation, I ask permission to put in the RECORD the May pay roll of the teachers of the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the statement he refers to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the statement referred to:

NOTE.—Salaries given based on pay roll for the month of May, 1919.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. This was made out by the auditor of the District, Mr. Tweedale, who audits all the expenditures of the District of Columbia. It was made out last month.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. BEE. I want to ask the chairman if he does not think the committee does itself an injustice, and the Congress as well does itself an injustice, in not having these items show that the $800, for instance, the lowest pay, is not in fact $800, but $1,040? It goes out to the country as $800, and unless I had asked the question and it had been answered, I would have supposed that every teacher was receiving only $800, when in fact they are receiving $1,040. Does not the committee do itself an injustice in not putting that in the bill?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is true. This is only the basic salary that is placed in the bill.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be much difficulty in understanding in these discussions on this bill what "longevity" really means. I am not sure if the gentleman understands it; I am not sure that I do or not. But would it not be a good plan if, in the course of his remarks, he would put into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the provisions of this longevity-pay law in a concise form, so that we might see just what is meant by "longevity pay" and what its application is?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Does the gentleman mean to insert the law on the subject?

Mr. GARD. Yes; that is what I mean. I note here on page 37 it refers to the act of June 20, 1906, as amended in 1908, 1910, and 1912.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I have it here before me, and it is five closely printed pages.

Mr. GARD. So much as that?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. So much as that, and the language of it is such that I question very much whether anyone except an expert can fathom what it means. I know I am unable to do so.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman then inform me where the longevity-pay law may be found?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Volume 34, Statutes at Large, beginning on page 316.

Mr. GARD. I thank the gentleman very much.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Night schools: For teachers and janitors of night schools, including teachers of industrial, commercial, and trade instruction, and teachers and janitors of night schools may also be teachers and janitors of day schools, $50,000.

[1] Includes allowance to principals.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman, Is there any plan devised by which teachers and janitors of night schools are paid?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. We appropriate $50,000 for that purpose here.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I am speaking of them individually and not collectively.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The janitors run all through this bill. We have a kind of standardized pay for janitors running all through the bill.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Is there any reason why the night teachers should not be paid more than the amount specified under this section?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I know of no reason why they can not pay them more. The only question is the advisability of paying more.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Then under this bill night teachers can be paid any amount that the board of education deems proper?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That rests with the board of education. We have a very large, intelligent, and trustworthy board of education.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Do you not also have the same board of education for the day schools?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. We do.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. If your committee regulates the pay as to the day schools, why does it not regulate it as to the night schools?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think we do.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. There is no regulation here.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. There is nothing said about it here.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. The gentleman admitted that under this bill the night teachers could be paid any amount that the board of education might deem proper.

Mr. FOCHT. Time and a half.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I can give the gentleman the schedule for the pay of night-school teachers. Principals of high schools $54 per month for three nights a week——

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Under what authority?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It is in the law.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Not in this bill.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Not in this bill; principals of high schools, $54 a month for three nights a week, $72 a month for four nights a week, $90 a month for five nights a week.

Principals of graded schools, $45 a month for three nights a week, $60 a month for four nights a week, $75 a month for five nights a week.

Teachers, $30 a month for three nights a week; $40 a month for four nights a week; $50 a month for five nights a week.

Janitors, $15 to $30 per month for three nights a week; $20 to $40 for four nights a week; $25 to $50 per month for five nights a week; and the rate varies according to the size of the building and the number of classes in the building.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. How long has that law been in force?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. This is an estimate made up by the school board, and this is what they are acting upon now. That is the basis of the $50,000 appropriation which we carry in this bill.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Does the chairman of the committee think that after a teacher instructs pupils all day that same teacher can give the proper efficiency teaching at night? Do the pupils get as much attention from teachers who instruct all day?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I should hardly think so. I think excessive labor tends to weaken the quality of the labor.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Then is it wise to have day teachers instruct the night pupils?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is a question of policy which, as I say, the very large and distinguished school board of this District have determined upon, and I do not care to put my judgment against theirs. My judgment would amount to nothing when they really carry it into effect.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Have we no power to change that?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. We have, but not on an appropriation bill. The longevity law was reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia and not the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I will.

Mr. FESS. The day school is more wearing upon the teachers, because of the discipline. I think any school-teacher will say that the wearing process of teaching is not the teaching of the pupils so much as the maintaining of the esprit de corps of the class. The night school is attended by a different class of pupils, and the discipline there cuts no figure, because those who are there at night know what they are there for, while the pupils in the day school are there because the law requires them to be there; and the teacher who devotes an hour or more to the night school will not suffer the fatigue that he would in the daytime.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think I can straighten it out in the gentleman's mind. The day teachers are not of necessity night teachers. It is optional with them, if they desire to do so.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I understand that.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. And in many instances teachers from the outside come in and teach in the night schools, especially in the manual training and kindergarten departments.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I was thinking of the mental and physical advancement of the night pupils. When they come at night they have worked all day and are tired, and they do not want a teacher who is also fatigued and perhaps irritable.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Miscellaneous: For rent of school buildings and grounds, repair shop, storage and stock rooms, $16,500, to be available immediately.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the words "be immediately available." In this connection I would like to ask why we are renting school buildings and grounds and repair shops and stock and storage room instead of having school buildings erected.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I can answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. MADDEN. Why do we not build them?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. We are building as fast as possible.

Mr. MADDEN. As fast as we appropriate the money.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. No; it is difficult to get labor and material. The authorities assert that they can not get the material and it is difficult to get labor.

Mr. MADDEN. We are building buildings elsewhere.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Well, we are building now, but we have not built for two years.

Mr. MADDEN. I think I asked the gentleman the other day what percentage of children who attend the schools are only able to attend half a day.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I can give the gentleman the information. The present enrollment is 57,000; 49 one-half time classes above the second grade total more than 2,500.

Mr. MADDEN. All the other children in the District have sufficient school facilities?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. They do.

Mr. MADDEN. My understanding is that they have nothing like the number of school buildings that they need.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. We have 60 portable buildings to fill out the emergency.

Mr. MADDEN. Are these portable buildings being used?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes; and then they are building as fast as needed. The gentleman must remember that the schools are crowded; there ought not to be over 40 in a class, and in some of the classes there are 55 and some 60, but the children are being taught. They could be taught better if we had more buildings.

Mr. MADDEN. We seem to have plenty of money in the District. They raise a sufficient amount in taxes and then they have our contribution from the Federal Treasury to do all that is necessary in the District in a proper way. I think one of the most important functions of the municipal government is to supply education to the growing manhood and womanhood in this country.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I believe that 434 other Members of Congress are of the same opinion.

Mr. MADDEN. Then why do we not appropriate?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. We appropriate as fast as the school board and the commissioners recommend it and as fast as they can furnish material and labor. Your committee has gone as far in that direction as the board desires.

Mr. MADDEN. It seems to me the board ought not to decide the question when it is evident on its face that they are not making such recommendations as ought to be put into effect. If the board of education and the commissioners are lax in the performance of their duty——

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That raises a new question. I do not say that the gentleman is censuring the board of education. They are fine men. They are appointed by the justices of the Supreme Court of the District instead of by the commissioners or being elected by the people, as they probably ought to be. We had a provision in the bill to permit the board of education to be appointed by the commissioners, but it was stricken out on a point of order. If the gentleman is censuring the board he is censuring Congress in striking out the provision, and censuring the people of the District for wanting to retain the appointment of the board in the hands of the supreme court.

Mr. MADDEN. Let me say to the gentleman that I had something to do with the writing of that law. I think I was one of three men who drew the law requiring the board of education to be appointed by the court. I think it has been the most beneficent law we have had on the statute books. I do not think the board should be appointed by the District Commissioners, because I do not think they are the men best qualified for that purpose. I do not think they ought to be elected by the people. I think somebody sufficiently far away from the turmoil of District management, who can see the needs of education and not be affected by the clamor for places, a body like the supreme court, should have the power to appoint.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I desire five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The remarks that I have made were along the theory that the gentleman from Illinois thought the board of education was not properly performing its duty.

Mr. MADDEN. I say if the board fails to perform its duty I do not say that it does, but if it does fail——

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. How are you going to get rid of them?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not want to.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Is it not possible and probable that the unusually large attendance during this time produces the condition of which the gentleman complains?

Mr. MADDEN. We are not likely to have that condition changed. I remember that before the war began we had 28,000 civil employees in the District of Columbia outside of the War and the Navy Departments. To-day we have at least 120,000. And if the present indications mean anything we are liable to have them for a long time to come. Even when we had 28,000 we did not have school facilities enough to meet conditions. It makes no difference what the board of education recommends, if they fail to perform their duty to the extent they should we have the power to override their recommendations.

I think we should have vision enough and interest enough in the education of the coming generation to see to it that facilities are supplied. If we did not have the money, if it was impossible to raise the money, that might be a good reason for not doing it; but they do raise it, they have the money, they can put the buildings up, and they have the lots upon which there are no buildings now. It is true they have been putting up movable buildings, frame structures, to a very limited extent. I do not think they have used all those that they have erected. They have not even been erecting them as quickly as they should, and the education of the children of the District has been in a large measure neglected.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. I have some children here. Do I understand that my children may not get a full year's education here in the public schools?

Mr. MADDEN. It depends upon their age.

Mr. FOSTER. They are of the high-school age.

Mr. MADDEN. I think likely they will be able to crowd in some place within the walls of the school, but whether they will have sufficient facilities that will give them the kind of education they ought to have under the present plan I do not know.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I better send them back to God's country in Ohio.

Mr. MADDEN. That is a pretty good place, but this is not a bad one. Ohio, of course, is in the public eye. Everybody recognizes that as the magnet to which all of the people of the Union should go.

Mr. FOSTER. Seriously, I want to suggest this: I have great confidence in the gentleman, and I would like to follow him, if something can be done to remedy this condition.

Mr. MADDEN. It ought to be done, and I am simply saying what I have said for the purpose of calling it to the attention of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations having charge of the District appropriations, for they have the power, regardless of what recommendations may be made by the board of education or the District Commissioners, and they should exercise it.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. FESS. The chairman of the committee referred to 49 classes on half time. I want to know whether that half time is due to the fact that we do not have room or whether this is the part-time system of school work, where a pupil spends half the time in study and the other half in some industry somewhere?

Mr. MADDEN. That is due to the fact that we have not the school facilities, because children who attend in the forenoon are not permitted to attend in the afternoon, and the classrooms occupied by those in the forenoon are occupied by others in the afternoon.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. My information is just to the contrary.

Mr. MADDEN. I happen to know, because I happen to have children that have been required to go for a half day. One month they are required to go in the forenoon and the next month in the afternoon, and the room that is occupied by those children in the forenoon is occupied by a lot of other children in the afternoon, not because they are at work, because they are not able to work, as they have not yet reached that age.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. Does the gentleman insist upon the point of order?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; on the language "to be immediately available."

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I am willing to concede that the point of order is well taken, but I thought the gentleman wanted this money available immediately so that the commissioners could go to work as speedily as possible.

Mr. MADDEN. This is for rent.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. All right; but they need the money.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, every session of Congress, when the District of Columbia appropriation bill is under consideration, we hear much about the lack of school facilities and the overcrowded schools. Some four or five years ago I got the Commissioners of the District to furnish me with a map of the District of Columbia, and to mark every schoolhouse on that map with a red star. When they had done so, I counted them, and found there were 299 permanent public school buildings in the District of Columbia, and many have been built since.

Originally the District of Columbia was 10 miles square. In 1845 that part of the District which was on the other side of the Potomac River was taken off, leaving the District about 7 miles square. Ten per cent of that is water and the rest is land. You have more than 300 permanent schoolhouses upon those 7 square miles, and interspersed all through them you have parochial and private schools in great numbers. A flying machine could hardly go over the District of Columbia and drop a bomb without hitting a schoolhouse somewhere. Yet year after year we hear that we are lacking in school facilities.

They talk about 59,000 pupils being enrolled in the District of Columbia. That is about correct; but two-thirds of them do not attend the public schools. The others go to the parochial and to the private schools, and many do not go at all. Some schools are overcrowded and others are almost empty. Why? Because children will go on the street cars, with the consent and approval of their parents and the consent of the Board of Education, and ride by two or three schools to get to the one that they prefer.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Then does not the gentleman from Kentucky think there ought to be an equalization by direction of the Board of Education of the schools at which attendance should be required?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Certainly there ought to; but that would interfere with another plan. You know the great game in the District of Columbia is real estate speculation and promotion. Every time that a man goes out into the country and opens up a primeval forest and maps it out on paper with town lots, the first thing he must get is an engine house and a police station and a school. To do what the gentleman suggests would stop the building of those schools in order to promote the selling of town lots in some of the suburbs here, as I said, in unbroken forests. I advisedly call them unbroken forests. You have rural routes here in the District of Columbia that are lighted by electric lights. This thing of not having plenty of school accommodations in the way of houses in the District of Columbia is all bosh. There are plenty of accommodations here. I have seen statements in the newspapers in the last few years gone by about schoolrooms being overcrowded, and the very next day I, with others, would go to those selfsame schoolrooms and find them half empty. This is newspaper bosh that a lot of you have been reading, and it is not supported by the facts at all.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield for just a moment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. My attention has been called to what Gen. Knight said. He said:

The War Industries Board limited us to the number of 20 of our portable school buildings. That is all we have got out of 80.

The War Industries Board is another thing that prevented the building of more, and I wish to insert that in the RECORD. That is one reason why we did not build all the schools. That, however, has been removed, and they are proceeding as rapidly as possible.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Another matter, where one of these school promoters will go to a newspaper, to a committee room, or to gentlemen who are to come upon this floor and explain their notions and their ideas about schools, is that they invariably mention the great number of children enrolled in the schools of the District of Columbia. They never tell the number of children who actually attend, and I know beyond peradventure that there is ample school room.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will.

Mr. BEE. Is there any rule or law in the District of Columbia that requires children to attend within the school district?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; and the school board in recent years ought to have written such a regulation.

Mr. BEE. In other words, to require the children in this area to go to this school and not be permitted to go to a school over here except by transfer. If they would do that then they would not have some schools empty and some schools full.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say to the gentleman, some years ago when Mr. Roosevelt was President and his children attended one of the public schools here, after he started his children to that school that schoolhouse, which was doubly ample for all the school children within reasonable reach of it, was overcrowded to an extent that they tell me that more than half the time they could not get within a square of where the schoolhouse was; they all wanted to go right there.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, in reference to the school buildings we have had some trouble always in getting the facts as to exactly the amount of space needed, and when Mr. Burleson, the present Postmaster General, was chairman of the District subcommittee there was a great hue and cry raised in the District about the crowded conditions of the schools. At his suggestion the Engineer Commissioner of the District measured the school floor and air space in the District of Columbia at some considerable trouble, and the schoolroom space in the District of Columbia at that time was a greater number of square feet per pupil and a greater number of cubic feet air space per pupil than any city in the United States and perhaps in the world. Now, that is the engineer's report after an accurate survey. Since that time there have been built a number of palatial school buildings, among them the Central High School, which is looked upon as being one of the greatest public school plants in the world, and then the colored school on M Street has been built, another very palatial and magnificent building. Those buildings cost averaging a million dollars each. Those have been built since the survey was made, and then additions have been made in the way of 8, 10, and 12 rooms and 3 or 4 rooms since that time, and since my friend, the present chairman of this subcommittee, and I have been on the subcommittee, and numbers of these school buildings were put up under Mr. PAIGE'S administration as chairman, and your subcommittee has not been at all niggardly in supplying school facilities for the District of Columbia. The present chairman is a very strong advocate of the best school system. I refer to the present chairman of the subcommittee, not only for fair treatment to school-teachers but to the school children, so no criticism can be lodged against the chairman of the committee because he has been most zealous and most active in the interest of better schools and more school buildings in the District of Columbia. But he has his limitations; we all have our limitations. There is a certain amount of money that can be well and reasonably expended in the District of of Columbia. Not only that, but the testimony before this committee at the present time by the architect was that owing to the conditions of labor and the conditions of material there was just a certain amount of material to work with that could be gotten and that could be economically used within the next current fiscal year, and your subcommittee gave them the money, all that could be economically used.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I will.

Mr. BEE. Has this committee the power to subdivide the children of Washington into school districts?

Mr. SISSON. No; not this committee.

Mr. BEE. Has the Congress that power?

Mr. SISSON. The Congress has that power.

Mr. BEE. That ought to be done.

Mr. SISSON. Now, the school board has ample authority to decide and say which school children shall attend and confine them within that area. That was gone into some time back. The condition that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] speaks of got to be quite acute here at one time. Children would desire to follow some school-teacher or go to some particular school which they thought happened to be a little better or had a little better building than a near-by school, and at that time there was a readjustment of the matter, and an effort was made to relieve the situation, so that evil possibly in the public-school system can not be traceable either to the subcommittee or to Congress. There are a certain amount of administrative duties that devolve upon the school board here, and if there is a fault to it, it is not our fault.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent to address the committee for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I have just said that everybody here who wants to get ground purchased for a school building and wants another school building erected somewhere in order to promote real estate transactions invariably speaks of the great number of enrolled children, and they always speak of them as "children."

The school rolls of the District of Columbia stand a better chance to be padded than the school rolls of any other place on the American Continent, for the reason that there is no maximum school age. A few years ago I went into the ages of those who were attending schools here, and I found that they ranged from 5 years to 66 years. That is a positive fact. Now, then, whom do they enroll? At what age do they stop the enrollment in order to get 60,000 enrolled pupils? They do it for a purpose. It is not beneficial to the school system. I just wanted to invite attention to that fact. I will say that I looked into the ages of the students at one of the schools at that time, some five or six years ago, and the average school age at that school was 24½ years.

Mr. BEE. May I ask the gentleman a question? Do they not take a census of the school children of this District at all?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Somebody does. I do not know who. When they say it is 60,000 I presume they would not say so unless they took some sort of a census.

Mr. BEE. How do they arrive at the enrollment at all, then, if you know?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. By determining in advance the number they want.

Mr. BEE. And the amount of money they need?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes, sir.

The Clerk read as follows:

For equipment of temporary rooms for classes above the second grade, now on half time, and to provide for estimated increased enrollment that may be caused by operation of the compulsory education law, and for purchase of all necessary articles and supplies to be used in the course of instruction which may be provided for atypical and ungraded classes, $5,000.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for just a minute and not to consume time. We have the half-time provision in this paragraph.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. This is for equipment.

Mr. FESS. I am concerned whether or not the District provides for half-time equipment, not because there is a lack of facility either in schoolrooms or in teachers but in order to meet that exigency that we meet in some places in the night school and in other places in the part-time school. The chairman of the committee is exceedingly familiar with the legislation we have had throughout the country on the provision for the part-time schools, and if the city of Washington does not have a provision in its school system to make it possible for a pupil to study or attend school one half the time and work the other half, the city of Washington is not keeping up with the movement of the educational reforms of the country. And I am asking the chairman of the committee whether the system does not include the part-time school as well as the all-day school?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think it does.

Mr. FESS. I am glad to have that information.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For furniture, including clocks, pianos, and window shades for additions to buildings; equipment for kindergartens; and tools and furnishings for manual-training, cooking, and sewing schools, as follows: Three kindergartens, $2,400; two sewing schools, $520; one housekeeping and cooking school, $800; one cooking school, $580; two manual training shops, $1,480; portable schools, $12,500; in all, $18,280, to be available immediately.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the words "to be available immediately."

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment of necessary expenses connected with the organization and conducting of community forums and civic centers in school buildings, including equipment, fixtures, and supplies for lighting and equipping the buildings, payment of janitor service, secretaries, teachers, organizers, and clerks, and employees of the day schools may also be employees of the community forums and civic centers, $30,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What is the reason that the appropriation for this purpose has been increased 100 per cent?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Originally we had $15,000 in the District bill, and the deficiency act contained $6,000 additional, making $21,000, and we have increased it $9,000 because, as we claim, of increased work and activity in the community forums and the increase in the expense of paying janitor services, and one thing and another.

Mr. WALSH. Have they increased the number of the forums?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think they have, and want to increase them many more. They wanted, I think, $60,000, but we kept them down to $30,000. But the expense of maintaining them has increased considerably. They have to pay certain expenses, such as for janitors, and so forth. We have increased that only $9,000.

The Clerk read as follows:

The children of officers and men of the United States Army and Navy stationed outside of the District of Columbia shall be admitted to the public schools without payment of tuition.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. Do I understand that if there are officers of the Army who are on duty in Baltimore or in Virginia, they can send their children in here to Washington and have tuition without charge, the families not living in the District at all?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The principal object of this new legislation, if you so call it, is to take in the children of officers over here at Fort Myer. That is chiefly the reason. They made it general. I do not think that it will catch any who are living in Baltimore, so far as that is concerned, but those around on the edge of the District, living in Maryland, and particularly at Fort Myer. It is in the current law.

Mr. WALSH. That does not take it out of the reach of the point of order.

Mr. SISSON. If the gentleman will yield, I myself objected to this language before, for the reason that the language is broad enough to enable a naval officer living anywhere in the United States to put his children in school here. As I understand the purpose for which it was put in the bill, it was that the children of officers stationed at Fort Myer and near-by places might have school facilities. But the language is entirely too broad. If the bill would restrict the language so as to include the children of Army officers stationed at Fort Myer, where they do not happen to have any near-by school facilities, there would be no harm in it. But I do not think it is abused at all now. I think only the children of officers attend who do not have those facilities near where they reside.

Mr. WALSH. I assumed from the hasty examination of the appropriation act that this was a seeming war-emergency provision that was put in.

Mr. SISSON. I do not think so. It was carried in the bill prior to that.

Mr. WALSH. Not long.

Mr. SISSON. There was some objection to it, but we were requested to put it in the bill, and it was put in.

Mr. BEE. My understanding of that proposition is this: We have a large cantonment near San Antonio. An officer may be at a station far removed from the railroad, while his family may be in Washington, and this is to permit those children to attend the schools. We have the same provision in our city. If an officer is living at a post, his children may attend the schools in the city, because they have no fixed habitation.

Mr. WALSH. That is true. But a number of Army officers who have established homes elsewhere are sent to various camps and cantonments all over the country, and while they are there, particularly during the social season, their families come to Washington and hire an apartment or live in a hotel, and send their children to the high school or various other institutions. I think that if this is intended for Fort Myer or a near-by reservation, you ought to be specific. I make a point of order on the language.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter the board of education is authorized to use all necessary floor and room space in the Franklin School Building for office purposes.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I believe I can satisfy the gentleman in just a moment that the gentleman ought not to make a point of order on the paragraph. The Franklin School contains at the present time the following officers:

Officers located in Franklin School: Superintendent of schools. Two assistant superintendents of schools. Secretary board of education; superintendent of janitors. Medical inspection; school nurses. Division of primary instruction. Division of intermediate instruction. Supervisor of manual training. General secretary of community centers. Financial official board of education. Board of examiners. Child-labor office. Statistician. Director of special activities.

The bureau of education and agriculture department are temporarily using two rooms: Assembly hall and board room.

Number of rooms	25
Number used for offices	19
Number used for teaching	4

It is the intention to use all available space for administrative purposes but not to disturb the four rooms for teaching.

Persons employed in offices in the building: Fourteen general administrative officers; 25 assistants and clerks.

The Franklin School Building is at present in a very crowded condition. The number of rooms used for teaching is only four. It is not the intention to take these four rooms away at all until we can construct other buildings in place of the four rooms that are now being used. I have that on the express statement not only of the superintendent of schools but of the Board of Education. They are very much in need of additional room. If the gentleman makes the point of order, I wish him to be advised that not a single pupil will be deprived of school attendance by virtue of this item, and it is only after we shall have obtained additional facilities that these four rooms will be used for purposes other than as schoolrooms.

Mr. PLATT. I notice there is some apprehension concerning this language among people interested in the schools, lest these four rooms should be taken from the pupils.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. After hearing this matter thrashed out for several years, I am thoroughly convinced that there is no ground whatever for apprehension.

Mr. PLATT. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York withdraws his point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky renews the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. We have just heard the cry of lack of school facilities, which is unfounded, however. The Franklin School Building, if I am correctly advised, is on Thirteenth Street, between I and K?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Where would those children go to school now if this house is taken away from them?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I do not know. I can not say. But they would go to the nearest school, provided we furnished rooms and buildings for them.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Where is that?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I can not locate it now geographically. Perhaps my colleague [Mr. SISSON] could.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Over on Nineteenth Street, not very far from Pennsylvania Avenue, is an old engine house. It is a nice piece of property in a fine neighborhood. Some years ago a society here which some people call the "Cliff Dwellers," but which calls itself the "Society of Oldest Inhabitants"——

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Not "the Smart Set"——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not know whether it is called "the Smart Set" or not. The editor of the Washington Star, I believe, is the president of it. Now, that house, occupying a great deal of floor space, both on the ground floor and above, something like 10 years ago, by act of Congress, was given to that society; or rather the use of it was given to that society. Now, instead of depriving the children of a schoolhouse in the midst of a thickly populated neighborhood, why not undo that act and take that engine-house property over there which this society, the "Oldest Inhabitants," is now using, and let some of these officers go there? Does not the gentleman think that would be better, now that rents are so high? The United States Government is renting property at all kinds of fabulous prices here, and the District of Columbia itself is renting property at fabulous prices, and yet it is giving away valuable pieces of property of its own. Is it not a good time now to correct that?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The chief reason I suggest in opposition to the gentleman's argument is that in my opinion the school officers, the heads of all the departments, should be in one building. No doubt the suggestion of the gentleman is good. No doubt that property ought to be taken away. If I am chairman of the subcommittee framing the next bill, and the gentleman will come before that committee, I will not only listen to him but I will encourage him in producing evidence to warrant the taking over of that "Cliff Dwellers" building if possible.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, to still further stimulate the movement in the right direction, in order that the property now occupied by the "Cliff Dwellers" may be taken back, I make a point of order against this item.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For instruction of blind children of the District of Columbia, in Maryland or some other State, under a contract to be entered into by the commissioners, $7,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That all expenditures under this appropriation shall be made under the supervision of the board of education.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. FESS. I desire, Mr. Chairman, at this stage to offer a word of congratulation to the committee for the recognition they have given of the valuable school work in the Capital of the country. I do not care to take the time just to consume it, but I really think that in view of what has been done in other parts of the country on school matters, there is a word of congratulation due to the Congress for its attempt to appreciate education here.

I think that the Capital has among its buildings the finest school equipment of any city, probably, in the world. I doubt if there is any city anywhere that has a finer institution in the way of public education than the Central High School and the other school that was mentioned for the colored children. If there be a crowded condition of the school population, I could understand it by the great influx of population induced by the war. While it is true that those who have come add to the population about 100,000, as I understand, yet they would not all represent families, and therefore would not increase the school population in anything like that rational proportion, and yet they would increase the school attendance in a degree. That would make imminent a crowded situation that would be more or less temporary, and thus the rental method would have to be resorted to, rather than permanent buildings.

A good deal has been said about the manner of the appointment of teachers. I do not share in the criticisms of some of our best friends of education we have here in this Congress, on the manner of the selection of the school board. I think one of the most important features of a good school system is to have a board that can act fairly independently. I am not afraid of the pressure that would be brought upon a board, but you can see, all of us recognize, that some little incident comes up and a tremendous storm will soon be brewing against the school board or school authorities, and it might not be anything more than temporary, if not a mere trifle. One of the things that a good school system must have is a fairly independent board, to act for the interests of the school children without reference to any particular prejudice or influence coming from any source. While I was not in Congress when this plan was adopted, I have looked upon it as being one of the sources of a splendid school system in our Capital. I want to take this opportunity to say again that I think our Capital ought to be an object lesson for all the country of what our schools should be—first, in the character of the teaching; secondly, in the character of the equipment; and, thirdly, in all that goes in the way of physical requirements for buildings, conveniences, and so on. If there is any feature of a modern school system that is not provided for in the city of Washington, I have failed to detect it. I think this much ought to be said to this committee by a practical school man, whose life has been devoted to school work, because it is due not only to the committee but to the Congress. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For necessary expenses of inspection of dairy farms, including amounts that may be allowed the health officer, assistant health officer, chief medical inspector in charge of contagious-disease service, and inspectors assigned to the inspection of dairy farms, for maintenance by each of a horse and vehicle at not to exceed $25 per month, or motor vehicle at not to exceed $30 per month, for use in the discharge of his official duties, and allowances for such other inspectors in the service of the health department as the commissioners may determine, of not to exceed $15 per month for maintenance of a motor cycle each, or of not exceeding $25 per annum for the maintenance of a bicycle each, for use in the discharge of their official duties, and other necessary traveling expenses, $7,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to ask the reason for making an allowance of $15 per month for the maintenance of a motor cycle and then an allowance of $25 a year for the maintenance of a bicycle? What maintenance is there of a bicycle that would run up to $25 a year?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I really can not tell the gentleman, except that has been the established amount. It is the current law and has been the established amount ever since I have been on the District Committee. I can not tell what expenditures there can be for a bicycle amounting to $25 a year, but nevertheless it is urged all the time.

Mr. SISSON. There is an allowance of $15 a month for the maintenance of a motor cycle, or of $25 a year for the maintenance of a bicycle. Of course, the maintenance of the motor cycle is more expensive on account of the cost of gasoline and tires.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I understood the gentleman's question was concerning the maintenance of a bicycle.

Mr. WALSH. That is correct.

Mr. SISSON. That is $25 per annum, which is a little over $2 a month. That is for tires and repairs. The inspector furnishes his own bicycle. The District does not furnish it.

Mr. WALSH. He furnishes his own bicycle?

Mr. SISSON. He furnishes his own bicycle. It costs about $2 a month to pay fines and keep the bicycle in repair and buy new tires and about $15 a month to maintain a motor cycle—$180 a year for the motor cycle and $25 for the bicycle, both of which are owned by the employee.

Mr. WALSH. They use these on inspecting trips?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Throughout the District?

Mr. SISSON. Yes; attending to Government business. Of course, when they are not on Government work they use their bicycles and motor cycles as they please, but they are on duty six days a week and eight hours a day, working all the time for the District.

Mr. WALSH. I suppose they have somebody who inspects the bicycles to differentiate between the wear and tear when bicycles are used on Government business and when they are used for personal business.

Mr. CRAMTON. That inspector probably has an automobile. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the maintenance of a dispensary or dispensaries for the treatment of persons suffering from tuberculosis and of persons suffering from venereal diseases, including payment for personal service, rent, and supplies, $12,500: Provided, That the commissioners may accept such volunteer services as they deem expedient in connection with the establishment and maintenance of the dispensaries herein authorized: Provided further, That this shall not be construed to authorize the expenditure or the payment of any money on account of any such volunteer service.

Mr. WALSH. I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I should like to inquire about the last proviso. We make an appropriation of $12,500 for the treatment of persons suffering from tuberculosis and venereal diseases, and then say—

That this shall not be construed to authorize the expenditure or the payment of any money on account of any such volunteer service.

Now, if you have some volunteer physicians and nurses, who go into this dispensary and treat people, under this proviso they can not use any of the supplies that are purchased under this appropriation, as I construe the second proviso.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I do not think so. That is intended to prohibit the payment of any money for services.

Mr. WALSH. It says on account or for any such volunteer service. It seems to me that that language would prevent the use of any supplies bought out of the $1,200 appropriation.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is not the purpose. It is to prevent the paying of money out for volunteer service. That is the intention.

Mr. WALSH. I think instead of the words "on account of" the word "for" would be preferable, so that it will read, "The expenditure or payment of money for any such volunteer service." Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order and offer an amendment, in line 16, page 59, striking out the words "on account of" and inserting the word "for."

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MAGEE). The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 59, line 16, after the word "money," strike out the words "on account of" and insert in lieu thereof the word "for."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, referring to the hospital situation here, I notice that there are only two hospitals referred to, the Garfield Memorial and the Providence Hospital. My question is what hospitals in the city are provided for in this bill?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. There are many that follow on subsequent pages. These only pertain to the isolating wards.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hospital for the Insane: For support of indigent insane of the District of Columbia in St. Elizabeths Hospital, as provided by law, $500,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice that we have the lucky number of 13 Republicans on that side in the consideration of this bill. I would like to know if the chairman expects to finish this bill to-night.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I do not expect to fully finish it, but I want to read along a little further.

Mr. BLANTON. And the gentleman does not desire a larger audience?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. No; we have a fair audience. I notice on the other side the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] watching pretty closely, and I am glad they are.

Mr. GARD. We make up in quality. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses of camps, including hire of horses for officers required to be mounted, and such hire not to be deducted from their mounted pay, and for the payment of commutation of subsistence for enlisted men who may be detailed to guard or move the United States property at home stations on days immediately preceding and immediately following the annual encampments, damages to private property incident to encampments, instruction, practice marches and practice cruises, drills and parades, fuel, light, heat, care, and repair of armories, offices, and storehouse, practice ships, boats, machinery and dock, dredging alongside of dock, telephone service, horses and mules for mounted organizations, street car fares (not to exceed $200) necessarily used in the transaction of official business, and for general incidental expenses of the service, $24,000.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, in line 18, page 81, the word "storehouse" should be "storehouses."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. Can the gentleman, chairman of the committee, give some explanation for the extraordinary increase in this item—$7,500 to $24,000?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I know the reason why it was put in. The parties interested, and I will say that I am interested myself by being a National Guard man, state that before the war broke out we were expending more than double this amount. When the war broke out it broke up the National Guard organization, and they are trying to reconstruct it. They wanted a much larger sum; they wanted $50,000 or $60,000, and we gave them this small amount of $24,000. I think it is absolutely necessary if you are going to reorganize.

Mr. WALSH. And the effort is to reorganize it on prewar conditions?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I do not know as they want to do that; I do not know that they want to go that far, but they have a rifle range, and they want to reestablish that on a reasonable basis.

The Clerk read as follows:

For emergency fund, to be used only in case of a serious break requiring immediate repairs in one of the more important aqueduct or filtration-plant structures, such as a dam, conduit, tunnel, bridge, building, or important piece of machinery, $5,000; all expenditures from this appropriation shall be reported in detail to Congress.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Minnesota if from the concluding words of this paragraph we may infer that the other appropriations of the bill are not reported in detail to Congress?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Not at all. This is one of those complex, divided propositions about which I tried to inform the gentleman in my opening statement. The Washington Aqueduct here is under the War Department, and they get the water into the city. After it comes here we take care of it and meter all the premises and handle the water. We wanted to make sure that the War Department would report in detail their expenses, and I think it is a very good provision.

Mr. WALSH. Is there not a report in detail for the operation of the aqueduct?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I do not wish to criticize along that line, but I would like to have a little more detailed and itemized statement of the expenditure of this money.

Mr. WALSH. But it is particularly important that this $5,000 emergency appropriation should be reported in detail because of the complexity of the situation and the possible conflict of authority.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think if the gentleman will read that carefully, he will see it is intended that the entire expense of the Washington Aqueduct shall be covered by that.

Mr. WALSH. No; I do not think it bears that construction. It says $5,000 for this emergency fund, and then we find the language:

All expenditures from this appropriation shall be reported in detail to Congress.

I submit, of course, that would apply to the paragraph in which the language is found.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, before the Clerk reads I move to strike out the last word of the preceding paragraph, for the purpose of asking the chairman how long he proposes to run to-night?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, my purpose is, unless interfered with, to read just another page, over to section 7, and then have the committee rise.

Mr. FESS. It is now about 5 o'clock, and it has been pretty hot to-day.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. We will then have gotten through all of these matters and will have come to some new matter. I want to give the House full opportunity to discuss the items following that, if it is desired.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That the commissioners are authorized to employ in the execution of work the cost of which is payable from the appropriation account created in the District of Columbia appropriation act approved April 27, 1904, and known as the "Miscellaneous trust-fund deposits, District of Columbia," all necessary inspectors, overseers, foremen, sewer tappers, skilled laborers, mechanics, laborers, special policemen stationed at street-railway crossings, 1 inspector of gas fitting, 2 janitors for laboratories of the Washington and Georgetown Gas Light Cos., market master, assistant market master, watchman, horses, carts, and wagons, and to incur all necessary expenses incidental to carrying on such work and necessary for the proper execution thereof, such services and expenses to be paid from said appropriation account.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, simply for the purpose of directing the attention of the committee to the manner in which the present bill has received consideration from the Committee of the Whole and to compliment the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee and his colleague upon the minority side and the other members of the committee upon the measure which they have produced, and which, as has been shown, has withstood all attacks upon some of the items that have been made on both sides of the aisle. I further express the hope that when this measure returns to the House from a voyage away from here, we will find that the appropriations have not been inordinately increased, and that the committee may be able to see to it, if the measure goes to conference, that they, having in mind the support accorded them by this vast assemblage during the consideration of the bill, will stand for economy in expenditures.

I believe there is a general disposition to be liberal in the appropriations for the District of Columbia, and the committee in presenting this bill has followed a procedure which I think is to be commended. It has not been satisfied to take the bill simply as it passed the House in the last Congress and report it without further consideration, but has held supplemental hearings upon several of the items and estimates, and in that particular it has not followed the precedent set by another great and powerful committee of this body.

It is pleasing to note the harmony existing between the former chairman of this subcommittee, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] and the present chairman of the committee, the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS]. I think from the support that has been given them on the part of Members on either side of the aisle the people of the country can rest assured that this measure, although it has somewhat of a perilous path before it, will still continue to be air-tight and iron-clad.

I wanted to assure the gentleman that the inquiries which I have had the temerity to propound have not been for the purpose of criticism or to consume time, but to simply fully understand some of the changes that have been made. I assume the gentleman before taking up another section of the bill, which may be subject to a point of order, may desire a little time to fortify himself upon the point, if it should be made, and I assume will now ask that the measure go over until to-morrow.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, in view of the very complimentary words of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], for which I thank him not only for myself but, I hope, on behalf of the whole subcommittee; and in view of the harmony that now exists, and which I feel exists on both sides of the House in regard to this bill, and not wishing to tax the patience of the committee any longer, I now move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 4226, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. RODENBERG, for five days, on account of delivering an address at a returning soldiers' celebration.

To Mr. DRANE, for Friday and Saturday, June 6 and 7, on account of important business.

To Mr. SEARS, for 15 days.

To Mr. RUBEY, for 10 days, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. WISE, indefinitely, on account of serious illness in his family.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. ZIHLMAN was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Jennie Smith, widow of Peter Smith, Company H, One hundred and ninety-fourth Pennsylvania Infantry, Sixty-fourth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

RESIGNATIONS FROM COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce to the House that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON] has resigned as a member of the Committee to Investigate War Expenditures, and that Mr. C. J. THOMPSON, of Ohio, has resigned as a member of the Committee on Claims. Without objection, the resignations will be accepted.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint in place of Mr. HAMILTON, of Michigan, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE].

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I think it will be of general interest to Members of the House to inquire of the gentleman from Wyoming what bill he will probably bring in after we finish the consideration of this particular measure?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I hope the House may conclude the District bill and maybe consider one or two bills from the Committee on Accounts, one with regard to clerk hire of Members, if possible, and possibly one or two other small bills, nothing especially important. We also hope to have a report from one, and possibly two, of the appropriating committees to-morrow in order that the reports may be printed and the bills taken up on Monday—one or the other of them.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman will recall in a private conversation he stated it was the expectation to bring in the railroad administrative bill at an early date, and I was wondering——

Mr. MONDELL. I will say to the gentleman it is not certain at this time which bill will be received first, the railroad or the military bill, but we hope to receive a report on one of them to-morrow, possibly both.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What time to-morrow does the gentleman expect to receive it?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, reasonably early we hope.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is the gentleman going on with one of them to-morrow?

Mr. MONDELL. We do not expect to go on with the bills to-morrow, simply to receive the bill and reports for printing under the rule.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Saturday, June 7, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Valley Creek, Jefferson County, Ala. (H. Doc. No. 78); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a clause of legislation submitted by the Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing for insertion in the paragraph providing for salaries of employees of the bureau for the fiscal year 1920 (H. Doc. No. 79); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Kenosha Harbor, Wis. (H. Doc. No. 80); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 7, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father Almighty, source of all that is true, and pure, and noble, we thank Thee that the people of the District of Columbia have set apart this day to express their gratitude to the brave soldiers who answered gallantly to the call for humanity, and were ready at home and abroad to throw themselves in the way of an organized force whose object was to rob humanity of all that we hold dear—freedom, liberty, truth, justice.

May the good men and women of the District count nothing lost in the way of sacrifice for the soldiers living and the soldiers dead.

Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty. May it be ours to watch, and fight, and pray, and the battle ne'er give o'er until a brotherhood shall be established as broad, and deep, and pure, as the love of God our Father; and we will give all praise to Thy holy name, through Him who died that men might live and enjoy all the blessings of life. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 2480) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, had requested a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. CURTIS, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, and Mr. ASHURST as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed Senate bill 1213 to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval boards of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1918, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

REFERENCE OF RESOLUTION.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I introduced House resolution 104 on yesterday, and I will state that it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations when it should have been referred to the Committee on Accounts. I ask unanimous consent that it be referred to the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. What is the title?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is House joint resolution 104.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is it about, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state. The gentleman asks that it be rereferred from the Committee on Appropriations to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will state to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] that it is for the purpose of fixing the manner of paying the clerk hire of Representatives. It is practically the same bill that was introduced by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] during the closing hours of the last session and failed in the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is it that you wish to do with it?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I am asking that it be referred to the proper committee for consideration.

Mr. SIMS. It ought to be done, anyway. It is a legislative proposition and not an appropriation.

Mr. GARNER. The Committee on Accounts is not a legislative committee, and you can not give this a privileged status by taking it from the Committee on Appropriations and referring it to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It can not come from the Committee on Appropriations, because it is legislation that does not carry any appropriation.

Mr. GARNER. Likewise the Committee on Accounts can not consider any proposition except for a certain purpose.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The appropriation is already provided.

Mr. GARNER. You propose to send it to the Committee on Accounts to legislate on a subject. You can not do that.

The SPEAKER. This is all by unanimous consent.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. This is a matter of very great urgency.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be some question as to what committee of the House has jurisdiction over this matter. Clearly the Committee on Appropriations has no jurisdiction, as it has no authority to report legislation. Strictly speaking, the Committee on Accounts has no jurisdiction over this bill, but the Committee on Accounts could report it. It would not be privileged, it is true, after that is done, but the Committee on Appropriations does not care to exceed its authority, and should not exceed its authority, by reporting the bill. The Committee on Accounts could report it.

Mr. GARNER. This is a proposition changing legislation carried in an appropriation bill?

Mr. MONDELL. It is, but the Committee on Appropriations has no authority to legislate. Let me say to the gentleman from Texas that if we would not be taking advantage of gentlemen who are not here, it would be perfectly satisfactory to me, if it would be to all of these other gentlemen, to take the resolution up and pass on it now by unanimous consent. The House has once passed on the matter in exactly the same form.

Mr. GARNER. Is this what is known as the old Humphreys resolution?

Mr. MONDELL. It is the old resolution.

Mr. GARD. From what committee did it come before?

Mr. MONDELL. From the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the Committee on Accounts has any jurisdiction over this.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Why not let the Committee on Appropriations incorporate that in one of the appropriation bills and let the Committee on Rules make it in order?

Mr. MONDELL. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that the Speaker in the last Congress referred this bill to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know, but I do not like to be held responsible for everything I did in the last Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. SIMS. Then I most emphatically object to it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] that the reference be changed from the Committee on Appropriations to the Committee on Accounts. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 2480, the Indian appropriation bill, be taken from the Speaker's table, that the amendments be disagreed to, and the House agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER], the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, asks unanimous consent that the Indian appropriation bill H. R. 2480 be taken from the Speaker's table, that the Senate amendments be disagreed to, and that the conference asked for by the Senate be granted.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman whether or not there has been any rider placed upon this bill by the Senate making appropriations for the United States Employment Service?

Mr. SNYDER. There is not.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2480) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the year ending June 30, 1920.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees Mr. SNYDER, Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, and Mr. CARTER.

ADDITIONAL PAGE.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan presents a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 88.

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint an additional page for the remainder of the present Congress, to be paid compensation out of the contingent fund of the House at the rate of $82.50 per month, said appointment to date from the opening of the present session.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, a resolution similar to this was passed in the last two Congresses for the purpose of providing a page to be assigned to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] who, as is known, is blind.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. GARNER. This page is to be assigned?

Mr. MAPES. Yes; the same as heretofore.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON THE CASE OF VICTOR L. BERGER.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I present another privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan presents another privileged report from the Committee on Accounts, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 94.

Resolved, That the expenses incurred and to be incurred by the special committee on the case of Victor H. Berger shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House; and the Clerk of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized to pay out of the contingent fund of the House such sums as said committee may deem necessary for said purpose, and said committee shall submit vouchers for the expenditure of all sums of money disbursed under its order in the execution of this resolution, which disbursements and vouchers shall be subject to the approval of the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. MAPES. There is a committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 2, after the word "Victor," strike out the letter "H" and insert the letter "L."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is that the only amendment?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

GEORGE C. HORSNELL.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to George C. Horsnell, clerk of the late Hon. Carl C. Van Dyke, a Representative in Congress from Minnesota at the time of his death, May 20, 1919, the sum of $166.66, being an amount equal to one month's salary of a clerk of a Representative in Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 4226, being the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 4226, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, with Mr. TOWNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 4226, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4226) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That the commissioners and other responsible officials, in expending appropriations contained in this act, so far as possible shall purchase material, supplies, and equipment, when needed and funds are available, from the various services of the Government of the United States possessing material, supplies, and equipment no longer required because of the cessation of war activities. It shall be the duty of the commissioners and other officials, before purchasing any of the articles described herein, to ascertain from the Government of the United States whether it has articles of the character described that are serviceable. And articles purchased from the Government, if the same have not been used, shall be paid for at a reasonable price not to exceed actual cost, and if the same have been used, at a reasonable price based upon length of usage. The various services of the Government of the United States are authorized to sell such articles to the municipal government under the conditions specified and the proceeds of such sales shall be covered into the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt: Provided, That this section shall not be construed to amend, alter, or repeal the Executive order of December 3, 1918, concerning the transfer of office material, supplies, and equipment in the District of Columbia falling into disuse because of the cessation of war activities.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota what this Executive order of December 3, 1918, is?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. If the gentleman is in no hurry, I will read the Executive order.

Mr. WALSH. Just the purport of it; I do not care for the entire language.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It is pretty dangerous for me to attempt to give the gentleman from Massachusetts or this House the purport of an Executive order coming from the Chief Executive. I desire to be exact, and therefore if the gentleman wants to know the exact purport of it, I will read it.

Mr. WALSH. Well, perhaps it would be better if it were read, because it may be one that ought to be repealed.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. In view of the fact that we have a reading clerk whose voice resounds all over the Hall, and very melodiously, I ask that the Executive order be given to the Clerk and that he may read it in my stead.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

EXECUTIVE ORDER.

Whereas the present emergency has created a condition whereby large quantities of office material, supplies, and equipment now in the hands of the executive departments and other establishments of the Government in the District of Columbia will fall into disuse because of the cessation of war activities, or for other reasons, it hereby is ordered that all such office materials, supplies, and equipment not required for use by the executive departments and independent establishments be transferred hereafter to the Secretary of the Treasury, to be handled through the General Supply Committee for the benefit of the municipal government and the governmental service in the District of Columbia in the following manner:

1. The several executive departments and independent establishments and the municipal government in the District of Columbia shall not purchase any of the classes of material described herein unless the Secretary of the Treasury has certified that there is not in the possession of the Government material, equipment, or supplies that are serviceable.

2. No executive department, independent establishment, or the municipal government of the District of Columbia shall be permitted to obtain any of the classes of material, supplies, and equipment described herein from the Secretary of the Treasury unless such services have an appropriation available for the procurement thereof.

3. All material obtained from the Secretary of the Treasury shall be paid for by transfer of appropriation from the purchasing service to the selling service and the proceeds covered into the Treasury in accordance with existing law.

4. All material, supplies, and equipment purchased hereunder by one service from another, if the same has not been used, shall be sold at actual cost, and if the same has been used, at a cost based upon length of usage, but in no instance to be less than 75 per cent of cost.

5. Material of the classes herein described which is condemned as unfit for use may be disposed of otherwise than to governmental services by the Secretary of the Treasury. And usable material remaining unsold to other services of the Government shall be held by him for disposition by law.

6. The Secretary of the Treasury shall keep a record of all material received and disposed of by him hereunder and the price at which disposed of, and shall prescribe the regulations necessary to carry this order into effect.

7. This order shall supersede the Executive order of November 29, 1918, dealing with the same subject matter.

THE WHITE HOUSE, WOODROW WILSON.
3 December, 1918.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, the purport of this paragraph apparently is to confer authority similar to that granted by the Executive order. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee under what authority the President issued such an order as that, relating to the disposal of Government property purchased under appropriations by the Congress, and also prescribing the method by which the municipal authorities should acquire or dispose of municipal property?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The gentleman wants to know what authority the President had for issuing that order; is that the point?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; if the gentleman knows.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I can not say, except by virtue of his being President of the United States.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, well——

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The gentleman knows that quite frequently the President issues Executive orders. Now, as to his legal authority, I assume that he has it or he would not issue the order. As to what the basis of that authority is I am unable to state.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman evidently seeks to perpetuate that Executive order in the proviso in this paragraph. Of course, this paragraph, in my view, is clearly legislation. Now, I think we should know why it is necessary to legislate if this subject has been provided for by an Executive order.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will say to the gentleman that in all the appropriation bills that have been passed, as far as I know, a clause almost identical, if not exactly the same as this, has been passed. The District of Columbia is the only branch of the Government I know of that has not been given authority to purchase from this supply committee by legislative action.

Mr. WALSH. Apparently it is given that authority by Executive order.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That may be true to a certain extent. Nevertheless, the gentleman has sat here for a long time when similar legislation has been passed with regard to the other branches of the Government, and I can see no reason why this should not be extended to the District of Columbia.

Mr. WALSH. I did not catch the last part of the gentleman's remark.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I say the gentleman has been here on the floor, and he is good and faithful in his attendance——

Mr. WALSH. I do not care for that part of it.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I am simply stating what is true, and the gentleman has permitted this provision to go through on all these other bills, and I can see no reason why it should not go through on this.

Mr. WALSH. Most of these other bills that had the language of section 7 in them passed the House before December 30, 1918. Now, since that time the President apparently has issued a supplemental Executive order supplanting that of November 29, and it apparently covers the same character of property, the same exchange, and transfer that is provided for in the gentleman's proposition.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. None of these bills became laws until late in February or early in March.

Mr. WALSH. They may not have become laws, but they had gone through the House of Representatives and most of them had gone from the Capitol and were awaiting, either on the shores of France or on the bosom of the wide ocean, the signature of the Executive. This deals with materials that are no longer necessary and which will fall into disuse because of the cessation of war activities. Now, it seems to me it is idle for Congress to provide legislation on an appropriation bill if the Executive is going to issue an order covering this same subject, whether he has authority under some general war act we have passed or whether he has not.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The object of this particular legislation is to enable the District to purchase materials which, if it were not authorized by law to purchase, might go upon the junk heap. The supply commission has vast quantities of this material, office furniture, and so forth, on hand.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DYER. May I ask how much time the gentleman from Pennsylvania desires?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not desire any time, except in due course, when I may ask for it in the regular way.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. There is at least $1,000,000 worth of this property that is absolutely useless as far as many of the great departments of the Government are concerned. It must be disposed of in some manner. We seek to purchase some of that material, and no doubt it will be purchased at cheaper rates than we could purchase it from outside dealers. If we did not purchase it this supply committee would have to let this property go upon the junk heap, at a great loss to the Government. That is the object of the legislation that we are now trying to pass, to give the District authorities the power to purchase some of this property.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Commending the gentleman from Minnesota for his desire to get for the District of Columbia cheaper supplies than it has heretofore obtained, what does the gentleman say to the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] that the President must have had under existing law the authority to issue the order with regard to the sale of supplies? Prior to the war the President certainly would not have had power by Executive order to direct that property be sold. He could not by Executive order direct that a piece of ground be sold or that some junk be sold. That would be regulated by law. I am as much interested as is the gentleman from Massachusetts in finding out, if possible, where the President obtained the authority to order goods sold.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The gentleman will have to apply to some other source of information than the chairman of this committee. I am unable to tell him where the President gets his authority for issuing this Executive order, and I am surprised that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, whom we consider a great authority upon all matters of this kind, should now ask information from a man who to a certain extent, compared to himself, is a novice.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is very nice of the gentleman from Minnesota, who is a thoroughly well equipped and experienced Member of this House, although still a very handsome one. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Thank you.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The President probably gets his authority by reason of certain war powers that we may have granted to him.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I am very much obliged to the gentleman for the information.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think the question of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is entirely pertinent, and that in peace times neither the President nor any other executive officer should have the power to direct that property of the Government be sold in this way.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I am not questioning the right of the gentleman from Massachusetts to make that inquiry at all.

Mr. WALSH. I make the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. SISSON. I will ask the gentleman to withhold the point.

Mr. WALSH. I will reserve the point of order and yield the floor.

Mr. SISSON. I want to state in answer to the question asked by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] that under the Overman Act, so called, the President was given the right and the power to consolidate departments and transfer property from one department to another and reorganize the departments.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I assume that to be the fact.

Mr. SISSON. Under that act the President issued this Executive order. We wish to call this to the attention of the District Commissioners. This paragraph is just like the legislative provision placed on other bills for the purpose of calling the attention of the District Commissioners to the law. I think, under the Executive order made in pursuance of the Overman Act, the President had the authority to issue that order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The President had no such authority prior to the war?

Mr. SISSON. Absolutely not, except the general power that he might have to give direction as President to the heads of departments.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman state that the President, under the Overman Act, had the authority to issue this order concerning property which will fall into disuse because of a cessation of the war activities?

Mr. SISSON. I think so.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. If we assume that the President had the power, about which there seems to be some controversy, what would be the object of duplicating the power by the enactment of this section?

Mr. SISSON. As I stated, it calls the attention of the District Commissioners in this act to the law.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman assume that the commissioners are not aware of an order issued by the President of the United States?

Mr. SISSON. I would not be surprised if the commissioners were as ignorant of that order as some Members of Congress are of the laws passed by Congress. The purpose of the act and of this section is to get as nearly full value for this property as is possible. In other words, if the District of Columbia was situated as other departments are, it would be taking it from one pocket and putting it into another. It would simply transfer the charge from one department to the other, and no money is appropriated. Therefore the Government is getting full use of all of this enormous amount of property which was purchased for the use of the various departments during the war. The committee has had the matter up repeatedly, and it unanimously decided that it was the proper thing to do to enable the department to get these things from other departments.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I will.

Mr. FESS. I am in sympathy with what the gentleman wants to do, but I would like his opinion as a lawyer. If this authority is exercised under the war power, then the authority would not extend beyond that time?

Mr. SISSON. I think we are still at war, technically.

Mr. FESS. But we will not be after the President declares that it is over?

Mr. SISSON. After the peace treaty is signed and the President makes his proclamation, we no longer are at war.

Mr. FESS. And this authority will not be any authority after that date?

Mr. SISSON. The Executive authority would not, but this would extend it after the proclamation of peace; this would bring it in order after the President's order ceased to exist. I want to say in my judgment this is nothing more than a limit upon the expenditure of the money in this bill. I do not believe it puts any extra burden on the District Commissioners, but is simply a direction by Congress as to how the money appropriated shall be expended. It is nothing but a limitation. Even if it had not been placed on any other bill, even if the Overman bill had not been passed, if the Executive order had not been issued, I think it would be in order to place it on this bill to limit expenditures of the money in purchasing new supplies, to say that there must be no supplies purchased if they are on hand elsewhere in any other department of the Government. Congress has always reserved the right to give direction as to how moneys which are appropriated shall be expended.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to discuss the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to address myself to the Chair on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has not yet been made.

Mr. SISSON. No; but it has been reserved. I do not think the point of order is well taken, because I think a careful reading of the law will convince the Chair that it is a mere limitation on the expenditure of money in the bill. In my judgment, it is not subject to a point of order. I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will not press the point of order, because it is clearly within the line of economy and the retrenchment of expenses, and half of it will be saved to the Federal Treasury. Not only that, but it is a proposition in order under the Holman rule providing for the reduction of expenses. Unquestionably if they shall purchase from another department of the Government the furniture they want, no money is to be appropriated out of the Treasury; and under the provisions of this act one-half of the money contributed on the part of the Government toward the purchase would not have to be paid, and therefore it is manifest that this is in the nature of retrenchment and saving money and saving expense to the Government.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would the commissioners have the power in this paragraph to purchase food supplies?

Mr. SISSON. No; it does not enlarge their powers of purchase; it simply states that the money which we have appropriated in this bill for certain purposes, such as buying furniture and typewriters, they shall first use in trying to get such supplies from the other departments of the Government.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Of course it is their duty to purchase food supplies for the various institutions.

Mr. SISSON. Oh, yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Could they purchase food supplies under this?

Mr. SISSON. They might perhaps purchase food supplies if the Government had them on hand in some other department of the Government and has no need for them there.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have been thinking this thing over, and it seems to me there is some merit in the paragraph, if it goes so far as to enable the commissioners to buy food supplies for prison or reformatory or for hospital use.

Mr. SISSON. To be frank with the gentleman, I do not think that idea had ever occurred to me, and I do not know whether it occurred to the members of the committee or not; but if the Government of the United States in any of the departments—the War or the Navy Department or under the Food Administration—has supplies which it is going to sell, then I am inclined to believe that under the language carried in this bill the District Commissioners would be authorized to purchase from the Government without its having to go through the process under the law or having it offered for sale and auction off.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am inclined to think that this would not apply only to the purchase of desks and letter files and penholders, and such stuff as that, but that the language is sufficiently comprehensive to enable the commissioners to purchase all supplies, including food supplies, for it says that they shall, and so forth, so far as possible, "purchase materials, supplies, and equipment, when needed and sums are available, from the various services of the Government." Would this not mean that, if the War Department had stored up tons and tons of food supplies, which might not be readily sold to individuals, but which could be sold to institutions, being canned goods very largely, the commissioners, under this provision could buy those supplies from the War Department and store them up for the purposes of these various institutions at prices that might be favorable?

Mr. SISSON. I am inclined, since the gentleman has raised that question, to think that that language is perhaps broad enough to do that, but, to be frank, that matter had not occurred to me, and I do not know whether it occurred to any member of the subcommittee or the full committee or not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If I thought the paragraph went that far, I would certainly urge the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], who reserved the point of order, to permit us at least to discuss it for a little time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, may I be recognized upon this matter?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania for five minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, we read almost daily now of large quantities of canned goods, particularly meats, that are stored up here and abroad by the War Department, and possibly by the Navy Department, that are no longer usable for war purposes, and we hear on the floor of the House the suggestion that the War Department and the Navy Department are practically aiding the canners, the packers, or whatever instrumentality produces these food products, by not disposing of them for public use, because of the possibility of reducing the price to the consumer and affecting the present market status. I am inclined to think that some international understanding was had on this subject—a very important one to the consumers, and a very serious one to the poor people in the great congested communities who are almost deprived of meat now, because of the high price of beef and pork and supplies of that kind. I say I am inclined to think that there may have been an international understanding upon this question. At any rate it is almost time for us to consider whether we shall enter a wedge here in the interest of the United States that will break this combination, whatever it may be, and help our own people obtain cheaper food.

For a time there was a suspicion that our allies, by reason of their war necessities, were able to obtain and sell to their consumers, not to their armies, but to their consumers in civil life, meat supplies and food supplies generally much more cheaply than we could sell them to our consumers in the United States. We had considerable evidence before us from time to time that you could buy meat cheaper in London than you could buy it in New York.

Mr. HULINGS. American meat.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; American meat. It certainly was true in regard to flour and certain other food products. But I read this morning that Great Britain evidently is wincing under the high prices that prevail there, and that there might, after all, be something to this suggestion of an international understanding—or in the abrogation thereof—for Great Britain has demanded of New Zealand that it come to the assistance of Great Britain to beat down the packers' prices in the United States. I am not contending especially against the packers. I do not know about their situation, but I have observed for two or three years that there seems to have been a complete understanding between the great meat producers of the United States and our allies on the other side. If there is a break now and our allies and their consumers are to receive the advantage of low meat prices, I think it is fair that the consumers in the United States were also considered. [Applause.] If we have stored up in our warehouses under the direction of the Army and Navy untold tons of food supplies that the people might use, it is a grave question whether we should permit the hoarding to go on. We can make a start here in the District of Columbia by providing that our public institutions that have to be supported by the common people may buy some of these surplus materials that the War and Navy Departments can not use, and which they seem to be storing up against the public for some reason that we do not understand. I am inclined to think the paragraph, if it applies to foodstuffs, is a good one and ought to stand, and I trust when the matter is thought over the point of order will be withdrawn. I hope we may be able to vote to permit institutions of the District of Columbia to obtain these cheaper foodstuffs, and that ultimately the people of the land, the consumers, who are now going without meat because of the high prices, may also have a chance.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. I agree fully with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and I want to ask him, if he has any doubt about the authority to buy food supplies, if it would not be advisable to add an amendment after the word "supplies," in line 14, by inserting the words "including food supplies."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes. If the point of order is withdrawn and the paragraph stands, and the gentleman from Illinois does not do so, I shall offer that amendment cheerfully.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, on the point of order clearly this Executive order could not, I think, have been issued under the provisions of the Overman Act, because that act merely provided for the consolidation of executive offices and the transfer of their supplies, property, and equipment, and that that act is limited to a period of six months after proclamation of the treaty of peace, or such earlier time as the President might designate, but this order which was issued was concerning property that will fall into disuse because of the cessation of war activities, and it is apparent upon its face that it is to continue after the cessation of war unless the President himself should alter or repeal it. Now, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] during the course of his remarks stated that he believed this paragraph was put in here by way of limitation, and that it would result in a decrease of the expenditures of the public money. Well, let me ask him if he thinks that the sentence at the top of page 91, authorizing the various services of the Government to sell articles under the conditions specified and the proceeds to be covered into the Treasury is in any way a limitation?

Mr. SISSON. Is the gentleman addressing himself to me?

Mr. WALSH. I am asking the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. SISSON. Yes. I think if it is not a limitation that under the clause of the Holman rule it tends to reduce the expenditures of the Government. The authority to sell this property, of course, and any property of the Government, so far as I know, there is no law authorizing it to be sold in the manner prescribed here. There is a manner in which property which is not used by the Government may be sold, but the gentleman understands that that is sold at auction.

Mr. WALSH. Well, Mr. Chairman, we have not yet heard the authority for this Executive order which it is sought in this paragraph not to modify or amend.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I will.

Mr. WINGO. Has the gentleman a copy of the Executive order?

Mr. WALSH. I have, and it has been read.

Mr. WINGO. I was not in the Hall when it was read.

Mr. WALSH. It was read.

Mr. WINGO. Does this Executive order—I was not in the room when it was read—undertake to cite the authority upon which it was issued?

Mr. WALSH. No; the authority apparently is the emergency whereby large quantities of supplies will fall into disuse.

Mr. WINGO. Does not the gentleman recognize this: That as a matter of fact, coming down to practical results, the effect of this section 7 will be a limitation of expenditures in that we must take knowledge of the fact that when you undertake to sell this stuff it is nothing more than salvage, and the Government always gets less than it gave? That has been the experience of the Government always, and Congress will certainly take judicial knowledge, so to speak, of that fact. Then, that being true, if we authorize one Government agency to go and purchase from another governmental agency any of this salvage property and cover the proceeds into the Treasury, will not that be in effect a saving to the Treasury?

Mr. WALSH. Well, I assume there is a good deal of truth in the gentleman's contention, but it is curious to note that the appropriations for supplies and equipment all through this bill have been increased, and upon inquiry we have been told that the reasons for those increases were that prices had gone up, that it costs more for material and labor. Now, certainly, if they are going to buy them from these various departments at a cheaper price than the Government paid for them there is no warrant for increasing the appropriations for those items.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. I want to propound a question in order to get a legal answer from a lawyer——

Mr. WALSH. I am afraid the gentleman had better ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania, perhaps.

Mr. FESS. I want to ask the gentleman who is on his feet, Will the writing of this authority referred to here in the Executive order, that the point of order will lie against if anyone makes it, extend authority in peace time which without this would stop with the war?

Mr. WALSH. Well, that is the question which I had in my mind. I doubt—I do not recall any of the various war measures which we passed which contain authority specific or blanket to the Executive to issue that sort of an order, but I think that to provide this limitation and specifically provide that the order which he already has issued shall not be altered, amended, or repealed, that we ratify that order and permit it to continue beyond the cessation of war activities.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, the membership of the committee I feel sure is in sympathy with the purpose here expressed.

I think there is no doubt that there would be specific loss to the Government if this authority is not granted, but if granting this authority which is being exercised under the Executive order, which was by virtue of the war, will extend war power after the war ends, it becomes immediately a question of doubtful wisdom as to what we should do. Now, it is very apparent that powers exercised as war powers might continue after the war closes. I have understood that distinguished lawyers recently before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce have held that there are decisions by the Supreme Court which permitted war powers to continue after war ended by virtue of certain involutions that come by stress of war and that could not be relieved by the close of war. And I think, while we are in deep sympathy with this purpose, we ought to know whether we are extending war power in time of peace.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I will yield to my friend, who is a distinguished lawyer.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Would not the danger you have in mind be averted by inserting the word "extend," so that it would read "amend, alter, extend, or repeal," and leave the order just as it is?

Mr. FESS. I should hope that if the clause remains in the bill, as I wish it could, if it is to be safeguarded, that that amendment could be offered. I would like to see this power given, yet I would not like to see it extended after the war is over.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman this: If he has any objection to the provision here, well and good. I am willing it should go out or stay in, but I for one do not care to do anything on an appropriation bill that would look as though I was trying to repeal an Executive order. That is why the saving clause was put on it. I do not care to do it on an appropriation bill. That is the reason why that proviso was put on. I do not think it adds or detracts from it in any shape, form, or manner especially; only the committee thought they did not wish to be placed in the position of attempting legislation on an appropriation bill and repeal an Executive order, either before or after war activities.

Now, I want to say just a word as to this section 7, and I am going to state in a few words what, in my opinion, it means. Since the cessation of war activities the various departments of the Government have on hand large quantities of automobiles, office furniture, material, and supplies of other kinds that are needed in other departments, and especially need in the District of Columbia. We make provisions all through this bill for the purchase of supplies just like this in character, but I think the food question was never thought of or suggested until the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] suggested it. We need in the District government here a large number of articles of various kinds which we know the supply commission have on hand at the present time. Therefore this section 7 was put in here for the purpose of a limitation upon the appropriation, and I think if the Chair will observe it, it is very clearly a limitation:

That the commissioners and other responsible officials, in expending appropriations contained in this act—

Underscore those last few words—

In expending the appropriations contained in this act, so far as possible, shall purchase material, supplies, and equipment, when needed and funds are available, from the various services of the Government of the United States possessing material, supplies, and equipment no longer required because of the cessation of war activities.

In other words, there is a glut, so to speak, in the supply department of about $2,000,000 of material the other activities of the Government can not use, and hence we wish and desire by this bill to have the authorities of the District of Columbia use the appropriation contained herein and purchase those supplies from this supply division, as we believe, and know, in fact, that they will purchase them at a much greater reduced cost than they would if they had to go into the open market. Hence I believe this is clearly a limitation upon the expenditure of money contained in this bill. And I trust the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] will withdraw his point of order as to that portion of the section.

Mr. WALSH. I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Page 90, line 14, after the word "supplies," insert the words "including food supplies."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Massachusetts is performing a distinct public service in calling attention to this Executive order, because on further inquiry it appears it was not justified by the Overman Act and probably is not justified by any existing law—war act or otherwise. If I am in error about that, some gentleman will correct me. I am informed there is something about the history of that Executive order which will show that it was prepared in an element of doubt, to meet what was, we hope, an existing condition in the District of Columbia, where some good might be affected by an Executive order during the war. But it certainly would be a dangerous thing if the President of the United States had the power, by Executive order, to direct the disposition of property of any kind. Such a thing would be unthinkable in times of peace and might be tolerated only in times of war, but in this instance it certainly is not justified by any existing law, whether passed under pressure of war or not. So much for the point raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts. If my statement is in error, as I indicated, some gentleman will correct it, but if I am correct, then the gentleman from Massachusetts has uncovered an Executive order issued by the President without warrant of law. So much for that.

I have offered an amendment which proposes to include food supplies that may be obtained from the Army or the Navy if the commissioners can obtain them, at reduced cost, for the use of those inmates of institutions over which the commissioners have charge in the District of Columbia. It might be a good thing to follow this proposition up in the States and let the States buy from the War and Navy Departments in order to supply the various institutions which the States have under their control at a reduced price. Thus we could begin to get these foodstuffs back to the people.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Has the gentleman prepared an amendment?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes. I have offered an amendment to include food supplies. I hope the gentleman will accept it.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will accept it, and for two reasons—first, I think it is a good amendment, and, secondly, I think the word "supplies" covers it, anyhow.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I also think so, but the language "food supplies" emphasizes it and will call attention to the fact that the Government has food supplies in storage unused while the consumers are paying extravagantly high prices for everything they get to eat.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, if a new Member may be permitted to make a short nonpartisan talk, I should like to have your attention, because I believe I have something here that will be of interest to all of you.

Some time ago it was my good fortune to be in a city where they employed 23,000 men in their factories. They had a Victory loan quota there of about $4,000,000. At that time they thought they would have to let 3,000 men go. The merchants and business men of that city, numbering over 500, got together and agreed that they would cut their prices down to a point where they would run without profit, or sell without profit, for a period of 90 days, while they were passing from the war program to the peace program. In view of that concession made by the merchants and business men of the town, the industries agreed to keep 3,000 men on their pay roll whom they did not need for a period of 90 days, which they did; and the men in those factories subscribed to the loan 100 per cent. The landlords of the town reduced rents 15 per cent. The various dry goods stores cut their prices anywhere from 15 to 50 per cent. That town did that for a period of 90 days. Why? Because the prices of foodstuffs had risen to such a point that the men could not support their families and at the same time buy these bonds. And yet in that city the people in two days oversubscribed their quota $1,000,000.

Now, then, we find that we have in this country, held by the Government, vast quantities of preserved meats, which I have listed, and I ask the privilege of putting the statement into the RECORD as a part of my remarks in order to save your time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to insert in his remarks the statement he has referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Here are the figures:

PRESS INTERVIEW WITH THE SECRETARY OF WAR, MAY 14.

The following informal verbal statements were made by the Secretary of War in conversation with the newspaper correspondents May 14:

There has been a misapprehension with regard to the policy of the War Department in disposing of meat supplies. The meats in question are specially prepared meats, in special containers, and of a kind never sold commercially in the United States—roast beef, specially salted pork—which are not articles of ordinary commercial trade in the United States. The cans are not even labeled. The question of disposing of these supplies is not a question of maintaining a price level—the War Department has no interest in that—but of some way to dispose of them. We can not, for instance, set up retail stores all over the United States to sell Army supplies, and therefore have to dispose of them in bulk. So much of the supplies as are of the ordinary commercial kind in the United States and which people recognize we are selling in the United States—selling them in any way in which we can prevent speculation. But specially prepared Army supplies—7-pound cans of roast beef, and things of that sort—are not known to the commercial public of the United States, and the buying public knows nothing about them, and they would not be available for ordinary commerce here. I have talked the whole question over with the sales director, and there are a number of questions that have to be solved. Some products, for instance, by repacking in new tins and being labeled, could be resold in the United States. There is a possibility that we may be able to dispose of substantial quantities of food supplies in institutions where bulk purchases are made. All avenues are to be sought out, and, so far as possible, food and clothes will be sold in the United States.

The market regulates the price; we have no power to set an arbitrary price. If we had a million pair of shoes to sell we would have no means of going to John Jones and letting him buy a pair of Army shoes, but by putting them on the market it would probably affect the market price.

There has been no agreement with the meat packers with regard to the distribution of meat supplies, but they have suggested that the most practical thing to do would be to sell these supplies in Europe instead of disposing of them in this country, because of the fact that they are packed for transportation across the ocean. In this way it would not be necessary for the packers to prepare other food for transportation while the present supply is being distributed in this country.

Here is something more that will interest the farmers to know. There is also held by the Government the following:

75,000 sets of harness—cost $85 with collars; $75 without.
1,000,000 yards No. 8 duck.
3,000,000 pair cotton socks.
2,000,000 pair woolen socks.
12,000,000 cotton undershirts.
8,000,000 cotton drawers.
627,000 woolen undershirts.
2,500,000 woolen drawers.
1,500,000 pair Jersey knit gloves.
1,500,000 pair cotton flannel gloves, leather palm.
20,000 black raincoats.
100,000 overalls.
7,000 moleskin breeches and coats.

Now, with reference to these foodstuffs and other supplies, I will state that they are located not in Washington but in Chicago, Columbia, Schenectady, New Cumberland, Newport News, Baltimore, Omaha, New Orleans, Boston, San Antonio, New York, St. Louis, El Paso, Atlanta, and San Francisco. I incorporate this detailed statement in my remarks:

Now, then, I just offer this suggestion: You may think it is a foolish one, but we have used the post offices of this country during this war for various purposes, for recruiting and for distributing various kinds of propaganda, and we have used the parcel post for almost everything. Would it not be possible to utilize the 55,000 post offices to transport these goods to the consumers through the medium of the parcel post? The consumers by buying Liberty bonds have paid for these goods, and now they are paying top prices for everything they need. The high price of food supplies has created a critical situation to-day with the laboring man. With his rent and the prices of clothes and foodstuffs increasing from day to day, I maintain that the time has come when he should have a square deal and an opportunity through governmental agencies to get the benefit of the goods for which he has sacrificed and paid. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. That the sum of $50,865 shall be transferred to the credit of the United States from the amount in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the District of Columbia to pay the indebtedness of the District of Columbia to the United States on account of advances to defray the expenses of constructing and equipping a school building in Georgetown, D. C., as provided in the act approved March 3, 1875; and said sum shall be transferred to the credit of the United States from the amount in the Treasury to the credit of the District of Columbia immediately upon the approval of this act.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 92, line 18, insert as a new section the following:

"SEC. 11. That an act entitled 'An act to save daylight and to provide standard time for the United States,' approved March 19, 1918, be, and the same is hereby, repealed."

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman reserve it?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I really am in a little bit of a hurry to get this matter through. We have been delayed three days now.

Mr. BLANTON. I admit it may be subject to a point of order, but will the gentleman reserve it?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will reserve it for three minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. That is all I want.

Mr. Chairman, there was a tacit understanding at the time each emergency war measure was passed that as soon as the emergency was over the war measure would be repealed. War board after war board has been done away with within the last few months, even in the closing hours of the Sixty-fifth Congress. We are getting ready right now to turn back just as quickly as possible the railroads to their owners, and I for one wish that we had never taken them over in the first place. We are also preparing now to turn back all of the wires to their owners just as quickly as possible, and I for one wish that we had never taken them over in the first place. Our good friends from the East and from the North have seen fit to force upon the South and upon the West what is commonly called and designated a seven-hour day's work. The South and the West just now are suffering from what has been designated as the "daylight-saving act," which was clearly an emergency war measure only, and may have been necessary at the time for Congress to place upon the statute books of the country, but that emergency certainly has passed. In the South and West in certain portions until this year for three years they have suffered an unprecedented drought, taxing to the limit the resources and endurance of the people and country. Now it has had God's smile shine upon it this year, and we have one of the biggest grain crops ever seen in the history of the country. Many of the boys are away from home yet. Thousands of them are yet in the camps of this country, where they have been for 13 or 14 long months. With a seven-hour day's work there is no chance to harvest the wheat and the oats which are needing harvesting right now. Even though this amendment is subject to a point of order, and even though it will be stricken out on the point of order, I hope that this Congress will keep good its tacit understanding at the time we passed this daylight act and will help our committee to promptly report and pass one of the scores of bills now pending before the committee to repeal the daylight-saving act and to make the repeal immediately effective.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Minnesota to reserve it.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I reserved the point of order, and I now make it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of order that the amendment is new legislation. The Chair, of course, sustains the point of order.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I desire to return now to page 2 of the bill, lines 8 and 10, "Salaries of the commissioners, $6,000." I understood the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WHEELER] to reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. WALSH. He reserved it on the entire paragraph.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, the office of Commissioner of the District of Columbia is a very important one. I reserved the point of order solely for the purpose of bringing up the question of the salaries of the District Commissioners. Upon investigation I am firmly of the opinion that the salaries of the commissioners should be increased. Therefore I withdraw my point of order.

Mr. WALSH. I renew the point of order on the $6,000 items in lines 8 and 10, page 2, the increase in the commissioners' salaries.

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. JUUL. What is the amount of the increase?

Mr. WALSH. One thousand dollars. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I move to amend by inserting in lieu of the item stricken out the figures "$5,000," which are the figures contained in the current law; in line 8, $5,000, and in line 10, $5,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota: Page 2, line 8, strike out "$6,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000"; in line 10 strike out "$6,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4226) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question upon the bill and amendments to the final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put the amendments in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. KAHN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. 5227) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri reserves all points of order on the bill.

Mr. KAHN. I desire to say to the House that I hope to bring the bill up and have general debate on it Monday.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS.

Mr. HUDDLESTON, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the following cases, no adverse reports having been made thereon:

A bill (H. R. 12200, 65th Cong.) granting an increase of pension to John Coss;

A bill (H. R. 12014, 65th Cong.) for the relief of Nancy A. Parsons;

A bill (H. R. 2720, 65th Cong.) granting a pension to James E. Norman; and

A bill (H. R. 2462, 65th Cong.) to reimburse Hugh T. Caffey, Leeds, Ala., for money and stamps stolen, etc.

COLUMBIA INSTITUTION FOR THE DEAF.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will reappoint as directors on the governing board of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf Mr. PORTER, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. RAKER, of California, who are now serving as members of that board.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, June 9, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Acting Secretary of State submitting supplemental estimate of appropriations required by the Department of State for additional employees, for scientific attachés at the embassies in London and Paris, and for representation in international scientific bodies, for the fiscal year 1920 (H. Doc. No. 81); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation required for buildings and grounds at St. Elizabeths Hospital, fiscal year 1920 (H. Doc. No. 82); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Appropriations was discharged from the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 104) providing for the appointment by each Member of the House of Representatives of one secretary and one clerk, whose names shall be placed on the rolls and paid in monthly installments, and the same was referred to the Committee on Accounts.

SENATE.

MONDAY, June 9, 1919.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we begin our day with meditation upon the greatness and glory of Thy name. We come before Thee not only that we may receive that fullness of character and perfectness of life that will make us in accord with the divine will in our personal feelings and aspirations, but we seek also from Thee that vigor and strength of intellectual power that we may hold the balance of justice, and know the path of right, and think after Thee Thy thoughts concerning the government of men. We pray that Thou will endue us this day with Thine own Spirit that we may follow Thy word and work out Thy plan in the work that Thou hast committed to our hands. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the proceedings of Friday last, when, on request of Mr. WARREN and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

INVITATION TO AMERICAN REPUBLICS (H. DOC. NO. 86).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Acting Secretary of State, recommending legislation authorizing the President of the United States to invite each of the American Republics to send, after June 1, 1920, not more than two of its citizens at one time to receive instruction in the United States Naval Academy and the United States Military Academy, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed.

GILLESPIE PLANT EXPLOSION (S. DOC. NO. 31).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of War submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation in the sum of $1,319,033.59 required by the War Department for payment of claims for damages to private property by the explosion at the T. A. Gillespie Loading Co.'s plant in October, 1918, etc., which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 4226) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2480) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SNYDER, Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, and Mr. CARTER managers at the conference on the part of the House.

THIRD DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably with sundry amendments the bill (H. R. 3478) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 11) thereon. Copies of the bill will be placed on the desks of all Senators, and I hope I may be able to call it up for consideration some time to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 72, submitted by Mr. LODGE on the 6th instant, reported it favorably without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized, during the Sixty-sixth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 1521) authorizing the Cowlitz Tribe of Indians, residing in the State of Washington, to submit claims to the Court of Claims; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 1522) granting a pension to Marius Thomsen; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STERLING:

A bill (S. 1523) for the relief of the heirs of Joseph F. Mitchell (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 1524) donating captured cannon and unloaded projectiles to the city of Cawker City, Kans.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 1534) to amend an act entitled "An act to pension the survivors of certain Indian wars from January 1, 1859, to January, 1891, inclusive, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1917; and

A bill (S. 1535) to amend section 2 of an act entitled "An act to pension the survivors of certain Indian wars from January 1, 1859, to January, 1891, inclusive, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1917; to the Committee on Pensions.

INDIAN CLAIMS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. On May 23 I introduced Senate bill 628, authorizing the Indian tribes and individual Indians, or any of them, residing in the State of Washington to submit certain claims to the Court of Claims. It was referred to the Committee on Claims. It is a matter relating entirely to the Indians. It is a claim of Indians and has heretofore been considered entirely by the Committee on Indian Affairs. The Indian Affairs Committee has held hearings upon it, and a similar bill has passed the Senate, I think, twice—once, at any rate. I think the bill should go to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I ask that the Committee on Claims be discharged from its further consideration and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AMENDMENTS TO AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WATSON submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for investigating farm domestic water supply and drainage disposal, the construction of farm buildings, etc., from $25,000 to $75,000, intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RANSDELL submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $83,200 for the investigation and improvement of fruits and the methods of fruit growing, harvesting, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS AGAINST MEXICO.

Mr. KING submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 74), which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Whereas claims aggregating millions of dollars in compensation for damages to property and for personal outrages and destruction of life suffered by citizens of the United States in the Republic of Mexico have been filed with the Department of State for presentation to the Government of Mexico; and

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, directed to report to the Senate whether or not said claims have been presented to the Government of Mexico, and what steps and measures are being taken to prosecute such claims and to liquidate and settle the same, and if said claims have not been presented, then to report to the Senate what steps and measures are contemplated to be taken with respect thereto and when the department will proceed with the same; also to report to the Senate the number of citizens of the United States who have been killed in Mexico since Porfirio Diaz retired from the Presidency of Mexico, together with the number of nationals of other countries who have been killed in Mexico as far as the Secretary of State is advised; also to report to the Senate the amount of claims filed with the Secretary for damages suffered by citizens of the United States in Mexico, and any information which the Secretary has as to the confiscation of property of citizens of the United States and as to the damage suffered by the citizens of the United States in Mexico; also to report to the Senate the number of citizens of the United States who have been compelled to leave Mexico on account of the disorders prevailing in that country, the amount of property abandoned by such persons, and the number of citizens of the United States presently residing in Mexico and the amount of their property.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT PUBLICATIONS.

Mr. KING submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 75), which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior report to the Senate the number of publications or periodicals issued by the Department of the Interior, together with the name of each publication, the bureau or other division of the Department of the Interior issuing the same, the time it is issued, the name of the editor and the number of persons employed in preparing the same for publication, the number of copies issued, the cost of the same, the usual number of pages, the persons to whom they are sent, whether said publication is distributed gratuitously or upon subscription, the purpose and object of such publication, and whether or not the same is employed to advocate and carry on a propaganda to promote measures pending in Congress, and whether or not the department publishes such periodicals for the purpose of advocating legislation which it desires to be enacted by Congress; whether conferences or conventions have been held at the instance and invitation of the Department of the Interior to promote legislation pending in Congress, and whether funds of the Government have been used to arrange for or pay the expenses of such conferences or conventions and the amount of funds used for such purposes.

POWER OF THE SENATE OVER TREATIES.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask unanimous consent to introduce into the RECORD a very short article from the pen of former Gov. Simeon E. Baldwin relating to the power of the Senate in the making of treaties.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. MOSES. What is the request?

Mr. THOMAS. The request is for the publication of a very short article by former Gov. Baldwin, of Connecticut, relating to the treaty-making power of the Senate.

Mr. MOSES. To be published as a document?

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, no; in the RECORD.

Mr. MOSES. In view of the announcement that I have several times made before, I ask that it go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. THOMAS. I did not understand the Senator's remark. Does the Senator object?

Mr. MOSES. I have stated several times that utterances by Senators or the President of the United States would not be met by any objection from me, but utterances of other persons which are presented here for printing in the RECORD or as a public document I should venture to ask might be sent to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. THOMAS. Very good. Of course, I am aware I am not able to have the order made at this time in the presence of the objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The article will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 4226. An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

TREATY OF PEACE.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask to have the following cablegram from President Wilson read.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	France	Kenyon	New
Borah	Frelinghuysen	Keyes	Newberry
Brandegee	Gay	King	Norris
Capper	Gronna	Knox	Nugent
Chamberlain	Hale	La Follette	Overman
Culberson	Harding	Lenroot	Page
Cummins	Harris	Lodge	Phipps
Curtis	Harrison	McCumber	Pittman
Dial	Hitchcock	McKellar	Poindexter
Dillingham	Johnson, Calif.	McLean	Pomerene
Elkins	Jones, N. Mex.	McNary	Reed

Smith, Md.	Sutherland	Underwood	Warren
Smoot	Swanson	Wadsworth	Watson
Spencer	Thomas	Walsh, Mass.
Sterling	Trammell	Walsh, Mont.

Mr. DIAL. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH of South Carolina] is detained on account of illness in his family.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

PARIS, June 7, 1919.

TUMULTY,
White House, Washington.

Please convey the following to Senator HITCHCOCK:

"I am heartily glad that you have demanded an investigation with regard to the possession of texts of the treaty by unauthorized persons. I have felt that it was highly undesirable officially to communicate the text of a document which is still in negotiation and subject to change. Anyone who has possession of the official English text has what he is clearly not entitled to have or to communicate. I have felt in honor bound to act in the same spirit and in the same way as the representatives of the other great powers in this matter, and am confident that my fellow countrymen will not expect me to break faith with them. I hope the investigation will be most thoroughly prosecuted."

WOODROW WILSON.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it seems to be beyond controversy at this time that this treaty is now being published in practically all of the countries abroad. Certainly copies are being circulated throughout Germany, Norway, Sweden, Holland, Belgium, Denmark, France, and probably England. I entertain no doubt myself that there are a number of copies in this country, which I think the investigation which the President properly indorses and asks to be made thorough will undoubtedly establish.

My desire, Mr. President, has been from the beginning to have a copy of this treaty. As I said the other day, had the treaty been confined to making peace with Germany I should not be as deeply interested in that part of it; but I am deeply interested in the league of nations, which is interwoven with the treaty, and therefore I have made every effort within my power to secure a copy of this treaty.

I have in my possession this morning a copy of the treaty, which I am going to ask permission of the Senate to print as a Senate document. I am permitted to make this treaty public by the consent of those who gave it to me. The particular copy which I am offering this morning was brought to this country by Mr. Frazier Hunt, the staff correspondent of the Chicago Tribune. It was taken to the Chicago Tribune office last week and retained there for some time, just how long I do not know, but the Tribune felt, for patriotic reasons, that it ought not to print it on its own initiative and without first having presented the treaty to the officials in Washington, and so withheld the printing of the treaty.

The treaty was brought to Washington last afternoon and delivered to me as a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations. I entertain no doubt that it is a true and correct copy, and I ask unanimous consent that the same be printed as a Senate document.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, a few moments ago I asked permission to introduce into the RECORD a very short statement by a very eminent citizen of this country, to which objection was made. In view of that fact, I object to the unanimous consent at this time.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Regular order!

Mr. BORAH. I move that the document which I have, which purports to be, and I entertain no doubt is, a true copy of the treaty of peace, be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Idaho. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. NORRIS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. KELLOGG (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. I do not see him present and therefore withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. Under those circumstances I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], which I transfer to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT]. He is absent and I am unable to obtain a transfer. I therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. Transferring that pair to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FLETCHER. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE. I am able to transfer my pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. KING. I wish to announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], and the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] are detained on official business.

Mr. HARRIS. My colleague the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] is detained from the Senate by death in his family.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to announce that the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] and the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] are detained on public business.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON]; and

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

The result was announced—yeas 47, nays 24, as follows:

YEAS—47.

So Mr. BORAH's motion was agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I wish to say only a word in reference to the vote which has just been taken which I did not have the opportunity to do during the roll call.

Like all the other Members of the Senate, I am intensely interested in what is in this treaty, and should be glad to see the official copy at the earliest possible moment. I voted against publishing in the RECORD the document as presented by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] for this reason: I have great confidence in the Senator from Idaho and I know that he would not offer a document to the Senate that he did not believe was the official copy, but there is no evidence which has been given to the Senate in either the remarks of the Senator from Idaho or by investigation of one of the committees of the Senate, that this is a true and official copy of the treaty that has been made up in Paris. If it is, there will be no harm done; but if it is not and it goes out to the country with the sanction of the United States Senate as a part of the arm that approves this treaty, that the document that is published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is the official copy that has been agreed on in Paris, and there should turn out to be clauses in it that are not accurate or which are misleading, it may cause great harm in the country. For that reason I thought it the wiser part to withhold the publication of the treaty as an official document until we knew absolutely and beyond peradventure that we had an official copy.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, in addition to what the Senator from Alabama has said, I desire to say that there is another reason why this document should not now be published. In the negotiation of treaties, prior to their final making, the party who represents the United States officially under the Constitution is the President of the United States, the executive department, and as the Senator from Idaho knows from a communication addressed to the White House from the President, which was this morning given to the Committee on Foreign Relations and which I suppose will be published this afternoon, the President states that by agreement with France and Great Britain the treaty was to be withheld until it had been finally negotiated. That means, of course, until Germany has had her say about it and we have had our say about modifying the treaty in accordance with the wishes of Germany or for reasons of our own. So, in addition to the reasons given by the Senator from Alabama, there is the grave reason of this being a piece of bad faith upon the part of a part of the United States Government when that part of the United States Government that is authorized to make agreements of a preliminary or negotiatory character with foreign governments had made an agreement, and had communicated that agreement to a committee of this body, or rather had communicated it, and it had come to a committee of this body.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I simply desire to say that I omitted to state that this document is printed both in French and English text. Of course, I only desire the English text printed. I should have stated that.

Mr. McCUMBER rose.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator from North Dakota wishes to make some remarks, though I have another motion to make, I shall make it after he shall have concluded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I only desire to say that for 20 years I have consistently voted against making public any treaty that was under negotiation until it came to us as a completed contract between the nations. I have done so on the ground, first, that until it came before the Senate it belonged peculiarly to the Executive branch and not to the Senate, and, secondly, because I have considered that the better relations between nations demanded that a treaty be disposed of by the delegation or other authority that had to deal with it before it was given publicity. This being my view in all of the time past, I can not change it with a change of administration.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, as explanations seem to be the order of the moment, I desire to say a word. I have had no sympathy whatever with the movement afoot to get prematurely a copy of this treaty. I believe in the orderly course of events we should await the time when the treaty comes to us through the regular channels. At the same time I am just as anxious to have first-hand knowledge of this treaty as any other Senator can be, and at the earliest moment practicable.

My reason for the vote I have just cast is this: It has been said that this treaty has been published in other countries. Just before the Senate was convened this morning I was advised that the treaty has been, or is to be, printed by one of the leading journals in New York City. That being so, I could see no reason why everybody outside of this Chamber should have access to a copy of this treaty and Senators not have it before them in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

I think it is unfortunate that the treaty has been made public at this particular time, but at the same time, as it has been, or is about to be, made public, I can not understand why it should not be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, before the Senator from Ohio sits down, I desire to ask him a question. I understood him to say that he thought it unfortunate the treaty had been made public. I want to ask him if he does not think he has made a mistake of language there? I suppose he means the negotiations up to date, for the treaty has not been completed, and will not be completed until it has been signed not only by one side to it but by the other side. Everybody knows that constant changes are being made every day or two in it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I think that my words were fairly intelligible. Of course this document is not a treaty in the legal, technical sense; it is perhaps negotiatory in character; but such as it is, I think we all understand it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Because a newspaper guesses from what has gone before what shall follow, guesses from the negotiations as to what shall be a treaty, I do not see why the Senate of the United States, a calm, deliberative body, partially national and partially international in its functions, should take the newspaper view of the matter.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, if the Senator from Idaho will permit me, I desire to say that I feel there is probably an exaggeration of the importance of whether this document is made public or not; but it seems to me beneath the dignity of the Senate of the United States to cooperate with the German Government in endeavoring to make this public for the purpose of throwing a monkey wrench into the negotiations.

We all know that this treaty was first made public in Germany; that the German Government did it for a purpose; that the purpose of the German Government was to interfere with the negotiations and the settlement; that the German Government did it for the purpose of getting better terms; and the majority of the Senate of the United States is deliberately cooperating with the German Government in that direction.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, to emphasize further what has been said, it appears that but a few days ago the Senate passed a resolution asking the President, if not incompatible to the public interest, to send the treaty here. Now, before a response is made to that resolution, before it could be answered, the Senate undertakes to publish what purports to be a copy of the treaty. It seems to me common respect for the resolution which has been sent to the President would certainly have induced this body to have waited until a reasonable time until they had obtained his answer.

I wish to emphasize the fact that, without waiting for a response from the President to the request addressed to him, this course is taken by a vote of the Senate. The President said that he was committed and in honor bound not to give the treaty out without the consent certainly of those with whom he had made the agreement. He had the authority to make such an agreement, because the treaty is at his disposal until transmitted here. It seems to me a remarkable piece of disrespect to the President, in order to nag and worry him, to take this unprecedented course before he could even answer the resolution sent to him by the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, instead of throwing a monkey wrench into the machinery, this action of the Senate is simply carrying out the newer doctrine of "open covenants, openly arrived at." There are two propositions contained in that statement; one is that the covenants should be open when they are reached, and the other is that in reaching them all proceedings should be public. Most of the objections which have been made must base their merit, whatever merit they may have, upon the old doctrine that everything should be done behind closed doors; that all such business should be secret. But we had a great statesman not long ago who overthrew that idea and who gave to the world the new doctrine that secret treaties were an abomination. I agreed with him; I approved of that position, and the people of the civilized world approved of it. While the treaty may be changed before it is finally signed, the existing draft of the treaty with Germany is one of the steps in arriving at a covenant, and the Senate's action makes it an open step.

To my mind it is no objection that Germany is now practicing the doctrine of openly arriving at covenants, and that therefore we should arrive at them secretly. If the doctrine is good, if it is right—and I believe it is—then every step in these negotiations leading up to a treaty in which the people of all the civilized world are interested ought to be openly arrived at. It seems to me therefore that in the present highly civilized state of society the reasons for secrecy have no bearing whatever.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, it seems to me that the question as to whether or not we believe in openly arrived at covenants can have nothing to do with the question on which the Senate has just acted. It is apparent from the message which we received from the President this morning that, in his opinion, this treaty should not be given any publicity at this time; at any rate, this document, alleged to be a copy of the treaty, should not be given publicity. All the reasons for that we can not know; but we do know that the President is upon the ground; we do know that he is advised as to the reasons as to why this should not be done. There is no evidence here that this purported copy comes through Germany. We are advised by the Senator from Idaho that this purported copy is printed in both English and French. How it was obtained we have no evidence; but we do know, from the statement given us this morning by the President, that it has been obtained in some way contrary to the wishes of the representatives of the United States, France, and England. We can only surmise that it has been obtained in a surreptitious manner, a manner not commendable, a manner decidedly improper and worthy of the condemnation of the Senate. We are officially advised by the President that if any such copy is here it came over in an improper manner, and it has possibly been obtained through theft. Will the Senate of the United States put its approval upon a petty larceny, a larceny which has for its purpose interference in the most important foreign affairs in which this country has ever been engaged? I submit, Senators, that this thing should not be done; that it is unworthy of the Senate and unworthy of our country.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I do not wish to repeat, if I can help it, any particle of the very strong statements made against the propriety of the Senate's action this morning. We know that somebody came into the possession of this treaty illegitimately. So well does the Senate know it that it is pressing an investigation to see who has been guilty of this crime against humanity—and I am not overstating the case. I am not surprised to see the humor of the antileaguephobists.

Mr. President, it is a violation of the agreement of our commissioners in the formation of this treaty. We are a part of the treaty-making power. We are violating a confidence just as much as if we ourselves had been a party to the treaty; and now we insist on doing this, and for what purpose? We do not know whether it is the treaty or not. We know that the one negotiating it on the part of the United States is opposed to its publication. In fact, so far as we know it is not the treaty. We have a right to infer that it is not the treaty, for there is no use in withholding it after it is completed; and yet the Senate, which is investigating the crime, has immediately vindicated the criminal by publishing the product of his thievery, and then holding an investigation, examining this very morning by what strange processes this treaty, or alleged treaty, ever came into the United States at all.

We know that it did come to the United States. We know that it did come through Germany, if the newspapers are correct, and that is all the information we have as to it. We know that they first published it; and no matter who published it, no matter how he got it, no matter how correct or incorrect it is, it is a piece of bad faith on the part of the United States as one of the negotiators of this treaty to come now and, as has been well said, probably throw a monkey wrench into the proceedings at this hour, thus carrying out the very purpose of those who do not wish this treaty to be ratified.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I merely wish to add to this post-mortem symposium the statement that I voted against the motion simply because I did not think it was fair to play favorites in the introduction of documents offered for printing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I wish to say that had I been present—and I was down at the War Department when the Senate voted, trying to find out the date of arrival this week of the Amphion, that is bringing home from France an Arkansas regiment, now the One hundred and forty-second Field Artillery—I should have voted against the motion to publish the alleged treaty in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD now.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I myself have a "single-track mind," and I like to know what I am talking about if my intellect will allow me to grasp the subject.

I read with pleasure before it was introduced, and then heard read with pleasure, the President's cablegram which will be a part of the printed RECORD to-morrow, sent, not through the usual channels of communication with this body, the Department of State, or directly to one of the Senators who read it into the RECORD, but through the President's secretary in the White House to one of the Senators, addressed personally in this body, and not through the State Department at all. If there was the slightest degree of impropriety in the Senator's offering this document for printing in the RECORD, he is responsible for such impropriety. I was glad to have read it before it was read openly, and glad to hear it being read and made a part of the RECORD. It justified my vote upon the question of printing in the RECORD the copy of the treaty offered by the Senator from Idaho.

I hold in my hand the copy of the cablegram from the President, addressed:

TUMULTY,
White House, Washington:

Please convey the following to Senator HITCHCOCK:

"I am heartily glad that you have demanded an investigation with regard to the possession of the text of the treaty by unauthorized persons. I have felt that it was highly undesirable officially to communicate the text of a document which is still in negotiation and subject to change. Anyone who has possession of the official English text has what he is clearly not entitled to have or to communicate. I have felt in honor bound to act in the same spirit and in the same way as the representatives of the other great powers"—

And so forth.

Mr. President, the investigation as to who has copies of this treaty is proceeding openly before the Foreign Relations Committee. This cablegram was presented to the different members of that committee this morning, and it is now in the record of the committee itself. I considered it an indorsement of the action of the Senate in ordering the investigation. As a lawyer I can see no method by which we can ascertain whether there is first an official copy of the treaty in existence here in the United States or whether there is a copy of the treaty which is correct, although not authorized or not official, unless we have a copy of the treaty itself, either of the one class or the other.

The President first is very careful to speak of the English copy of the text. He says that anyone who has or claims to have in his possession the official English text of this treaty has it in his possession without authority, and he wants it investigated. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has presented what he says he is confident is a copy of the treaty in both French and English. The English translation could easily have been made from the French text; and it need not cast any reflection upon the President or anyone in the White House whomsoever that the text is translated into English as presented here, and, under the request of the Senator from Idaho, will be printed in the RECORD to-morrow in English. The Secretary of State has various copies of the treaty in his possession; and he has the opportunity and doubtless will immediately cause an investigation to be made, when this copy which the Senator has offered is printed, to ascertain whether it is a correct copy by comparison with the official text which he has.

These are the conditions that exist here. The President has indorsed this investigation. How are we to carry the investigation on? The Senate is endeavoring to get copies of this treaty. That is a part of the resolution itself of the Senator from Nebraska, endeavoring to get copies of the treaty which are in New York. One of them is presented here, and we are informed that it is a crime against humanity to have it printed!

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FALL. Just a moment. If there is a crime against humanity, I would be rather inclined to think that, in my judgment, it was entering upon the treaty. However, that is merely the judgment of one Senator. The treaty itself might be a crime against humanity, but the publicity of it could not be.

I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think it is fair to state that the investigation was for the purpose of getting the treaty or copies of the treaty? Was not the investigation for the purpose of ascertaining how the stolen copy came to this country?

Mr. FALL. Oh, certainly, certainly. That is one of the purposes of the investigation. The proceedings of the Foreign Relations Committee were open; a stenographer and newspaper men were in attendance; and therefore I am betraying no confidence at all in the statement which I have made. The Senator will have an opportunity to read the proceedings of the Foreign Relations Committee, which will be printed from time to time.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. FALL. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. Is it not to be conceded that if this alleged copy came into the hands of the representative of the newspaper as stated, it must have come to him with knowledge of the understanding that it was not to be made public until completed, and therefore is it not a breach of faith on his part to make it public or to communicate it to anyone else who might make it public, and is not the Senate in the position of being particeps criminis to that sort of breach of faith?

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I did not catch the last part of the Senator's question.

Mr. FLETCHER. Conceding that the alleged copy was not stolen, but was delivered to a newspaper correspondent, it must have been delivered with the knowledge that it was not to be made public or communicated to anyone else until it was finally completed.

Mr. FALL. Oh, no, Mr. President; I do not so understand at all. This is not an official copy of the treaty until it is transmitted to this body, as has been said by those who have been opposing its publication until it has been transmitted to this body by the President. Now, anyone who has an official copy of that treaty in his possession in the English text, the President says, did not obtain it by his authority or is not authorized to give publicity to it. We are simply publishing this treaty that the Senator has offered here for what it may be worth. The State Department is here to correct it, if in any respect it is incorrect and does not compare word for word with the official text which it has in its possession. I claim that the President has indorsed the action of those who have voted for the publication of this treaty, and necessarily so.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I would have moved to refer this matter to the Committee on Foreign Relations if I had had the slightest doubt that the motion would be defeated.

There was a public meeting of the Foreign Relations Committee this morning for the purpose of conducting hearings to determine whether or not there is an authentic copy of the treaty as far as it has progressed. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] was before that committee for the purpose of giving the committee information upon which to base that inquiry. In my opinion, it was the duty of the Senator from Idaho to present this alleged copy of the treaty to that committee if he intended to present it to this body, so that that committee might determine its authenticity. If he believes that this is an authentic copy of the treaty as it now exists, it should at least be submitted to the committee that now has under hearing the very question; and I want to say further, without any violation of the confidence of the committee, because it was all public from the very beginning, that the question came up as to whether or not the committee would do anything at this time that might lead to the publication of a copy of the treaty, and the committee decided not to do it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator will be reminded of the fact that the Senator from Idaho stated that the committee could not bind him by any such action.

Mr. PITTMAN. Then the Senator from Idaho is the only member of that committee who is justified in an affirmative vote, because the acting chairman of the committee, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], asked whether or not the subpœna duces tecum was intended to bring before the committee the copy of treaty alleged to be in existence in this country, and it was then decided that it was not wise to make public the treaty at the present time, if one did exist, by bringing it publicly before that committee, but that the committee would determine later, after ascertaining whether there was an authentic copy of the treaty in existence in this country, whether or not they would make it public. It was then that the Senator from Idaho stated that as an individual member of that committee he would not be bound by any such understanding; but he was the only Senator there who relieved himself from the consensus of opinion of the committee.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield a moment?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. FALL. Did not the Senator hear the statment made by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] that there was a copy here, and that it would be presented at 12 o'clock?

Mr. PITTMAN. I heard no such statement at all, and I think the record will bear me out that the Senator from Connecticut stated that on the meeting of the Senate he would state who did have a copy.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. PITTMAN. The reason why I would not think the Senator from Connecticut would come upon this floor and present a purported copy of the treaty, after that meeting which he attended, was because he stood silent when the chairman asked if it was the consensus of opinion that the subpœna duces tecum should not include the treaty, and continued to remain silent after the chairman declared such would be the order.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. And the chairman asked with regard to the understanding because it was suggested that the committee should decide whether or not any copy of the treaty should be made public before it was made public officially, and the Senator from Connecticut did not except himself from that understanding as did the Senator from Idaho. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not want the Senator to yield and I do not desire to interrupt him. I simply want to say that I will answer when he concludes his remarks.

Mr. PITTMAN. Very well. However, I think the record will bear me out in the statement that the question was deliberately suggested by the chairman, or rather the chairman asked of the committee, whether they intended to include in the subpœna duces tecum, which was intended to bring in all papers bearing on the possession of the copy of the purported treaty, the copy of the treaty itself, and if it was the intention of the committee to permit the alleged treaty to become public through such hearings. It was contended then by Senators present that to take that means of violating the agreement of the President of the United States would be improper.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, I think the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] was present and stated that he would not favor making the treaty public unless it was officially received from the President, if I recollect correctly the discussion in the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PITTMAN. But the record will bear me out, and it is a public record, that it was distinctly understood that we would subsequently determine as a committee whether or not publicity should be given to any copy of the treaty that the committee might uncover. In fact it was suggested at that very meeting that the first thing to determine was whether or not there was an authentic copy, then the committee would determine the advisability of making it public.

Now, in violation of that understanding several members of that committee who were parties to that understanding have come upon the floor here and have voted to make public what is claimed to be the very treaty that they said should not be made public until after the committee had an opportunity to pass upon it.

If the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has what he believes to be a copy of the treaty as it now exists in his possession, he should have presented it to the committee which was in session this morning for the very purpose of investigating the charges made by the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Massachusetts. Did he fail to present it to the committee because he was afraid the committee would not find it to be authentic? Did he fail to present it to the committee because he had an idea that it might divert attention from charges made by the Senator to some other instrument, or did he refuse to present it to the committee because, in his opinion, the committee had already declared that they would not make the instrument public at this time? If the latter was his excuse, then I will admit he excused himself under his statement, but if the latter was his excuse then the vote of every member of the Committee on Foreign Relations who was present on that occasion in favor of the publication of the treaty was a violation of the understanding we had less than two hours ago.

I hope there are Democrats on this side of the Chamber if there are not Republicans on the other side who, in view of the history of this transaction, will move to reconsider this matter. Having voted in the negative, I may not now under the rules.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, if it had been an original proposition to submit a treaty which was in course of negotiation for publication, I would have voted against it; but coming as it did after discussions that had been taking place from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Great Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico, with charges and countercharges, crimination and recrimination, by Democrats and Republicans and other citizens as well, it seems to me the people of America are entitled to know what it is all about and what is being put forth in New York and elsewhere as the treaty that is being negotiated by our representatives in Paris and those associated with them.

It is conceded on the floor of the Senate, Mr. President, that this is not an official paper; that it is not a completed treaty. It has been stated by the President in the cablegram that the official document has not been given out, so with the American people fully understanding that the document which has been ordered published is not an official document, I can not see how the proceedings at Paris can be interrupted or interfered with by the printing of what purports to be a copy of the treaty, and which is concededly not.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. Would not the Senator prefer, now that the committee is in session for the very purpose of ascertaining the authenticity of this paper, to have it referred to the committee to determine that fact?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is practically referred to the committee now. The whole subject matter has been referred to the committee and the committee has it within its power and it is a part of its duty, and I am sure with its membership it will do its duty, to ascertain the source from which this alleged document came. If it is a spurious document, or if it is a stolen one, or if some one on the inside has for a consideration in money or otherwise put it in improper hands, the committee will ascertain and report the facts.

I am unwilling to rest under the imputation, Mr. President, that the Senate by voting to print this document becomes a particeps criminis to a fraud or to a theft. It is, I think, pretty generally conceded that this treaty, as far as it has been agreed upon, has been made public in some parts of Europe, and particularly in Germany; and if it is being discussed by the people there intelligently with a record that purports to be partially official at least, why should not the American people be let into the same confidence of the powers that be as are the peoples over there?

I make no apology for my vote and I shall not make any for it in the Senate of the United States or elsewhere upon this or any other proposition involving the welfare of my country. I vote as my conscience dictates rather than as somebody would have me vote upon these great questions which involve the very life of this Republic. To my way of thinking, there has been no question before the American people since the adoption of the Constitution so important to America as is this proposed league of nations. I have been studying it as best I could, Mr. President, and have been undertaking to arrive at what it is right to do and as to what my conscience dictates should be done in the premises, and not what somebody wants me to do and not what it is best for my party or any party for me to do. I care not for party in this emergency. It is a national, rather, an international, question that is involved. When the time comes to vote upon it I hope I may be able to support the league of nations; but when it is construed in connection with the treaty between all the signatories, which is to be a part of it, and which nobody as yet knows much about, I may not be able to support it; and if I am not, I shall make no apology to anybody. I shall do at the proper time what seems to me to be right under all the circumstances and under my oath of office as a Senator of the United States.

As I understand it, the league of nations and the peace treaty are to be one instrument and are to be construed together. We know what the league or nations is standing alone, but only the Almighty himself knows what the league of nations is going to be when the peace treaty has been finally agreed upon and has become a part of the league. I have heretofore not said anything about it because the proceedings in Paris are kaleidoscopic. They may mean one thing to-day and are entirely changed to-morrow. So until the league of nations and the treaty have been duly prepared and submitted to the Senate no Senator can tell conscientiously and truly what his duty ought to be to the American people under his oath of office. So I shall reserve my judgment, Mr. President, until I can intelligently conclude from the paper itself and all the evidence available what that judgment should be.

Desiring, as I do, to support a league of nations which will assist in bringing about peace, I do not propose to commit myself absolutely and unqualifiedly until the representatives at the peace congress have themselves agreed and until I see what the terms of the treaty of peace are to be.

Mr. President, I had hoped when this war ended and the armistice was signed we would hear no more charges of disloyalty by any Member of the Senate or by anyone else against the Members of this body who were undertaking conscientiously to discharge their duty. But a distinguished Senator has suggested that the printing of this paper is aiding in German propaganda. What nonsense! Some of the Senators here who have voted to have the alleged treaty printed took quite an active part in seeking to destroy militarism in the German Empire, and it comes in very poor grace, it seems to me, to have anybody say that because some of us who were active in participation in that matter are voting now to have this document, which is recognized as not official, printed, we are undertaking to put forth German propaganda.

The American people are an intelligent people, and I honestly believe that if our representatives to the peace conference had taken all of America into their confidence from the start they would have been aided rather than injured in their efforts to negotiate a league of nations and a peace treaty.

Personally I think it is very unfortunate that the discussion of this matter has fallen into and along political lines, but it has. There is no use to close our eyes to the fact that pretty generally the Republicans are in opposition to the treaty while Democrats, without knowing what is in it, are supporting it, probably as an administration measure. I am sorry, Mr. President, that I can not accept everything that comes to us as an administration measure, simply because it is an administration measure. I hope I may be able to support the league of nations and the treaty of peace, but I shall determine my duty for myself when the whole and completed document is submitted here. I think the American people ought not to consider it as a political or party measure. I do not so consider it. I believe there are many—and a majority of our people—who will not so consider it. I hope it will be considered in a broad, statesmanlike way, and that when we come to vote we will not be influenced by passion or prejudice, or by the thought of party or partisan advantage. That whether it emanated from Democratic or Republican sources will have no part with us in reaching a wise conclusion. Let it be said when the league and the treaty come to us and have been ratified or repudiated, as the case may be, the American people will feel and know that the Senate considered only the welfare of their country in reaching their verdict.

I felt it incumbent upon me to say this much, because I repudiate wholly the suggestion that those Senators who have voted to print this unofficial document are undertaking to aid in any German propaganda, or that they are parties in any way to any wrong, if there has been any wrong, that has been perpetrated in procuring the document now under consideration. The welfare of our country, the fate of nations and of civilization itself, may be involved in what we are now doing, and everything ought to be done with deliberation and with the deepest sense of responsibility.

Mr. BRANDEGEE obtained the floor.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I would like to suggest to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] that my observation is that the Senators who are most forward in making imputations that other Senators are instigated by German propaganda are the same Senators who when the United States was actually at war with Germany were the last ones to support active war measures. One of them in particular, I remember, introduced a resolution here placing an embargo upon shipments of ammunition to those great nations that were fighting Germany and that afterwards became our allies in this war. Those who attempted to favor Germany in this way are the ones who now are so forward in charging other Senators with being influenced by Germany.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair must come in at this point. This is going beyond the rule.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. When I yielded, I supposed the Senator was going to ask a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. I know; but the Chair is getting alarmed, whether anybody else is or not. I want to call attention to the rule.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I did not intend to yield the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will permit the Chair to read the rule, which is as follows:

> No Senator in debate shall, directly or indirectly, by any form of words impute to another Senator or to other Senators any conduct or motive unworthy or unbecoming a Senator.

Let us not go beyond the rule.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, may I make a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator from Washington, if I am not by yielding to lose the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is not criticizing anything that has gone, but you are just getting to a point where you are going to break the rule.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am not going to proceed any further along that line or go beyond that point. But I was just going to make a parliamentary inquiry, since the Chair's ruling evidently has reference to my remarks. I ask whether it is a violation of a rule of the Senate to call attention to the fact that a Senator had introduced a resolution to place an embargo upon the shipment of ammunition to those nations which afterwards became our allies?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is not criticizing anything that has gone so far this morning, but it has just got to the point where we are going to have a row, and I am going to stop it before it starts.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am very glad to stop at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut will proceed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I am glad the Chair called the attention of the Senate to the rule, although I do not think the Senate of the United States ought to require such a rule, because, being a body of gentlemen, Senators ought not to be reflecting upon each other's motives, and generally when they do they do not believe the charges themselves. I disagree with the Chair, however, when it suggests that nothing has happened this morning that the Chair could criticize, because I think when the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] stood up here and accused Members of the Senate of being pro-German and cooperating with our enemies, that is a violation of the rule. But I care nothing about it, because I know he does not mean it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I meant exactly what I said. I do not need the Senator to vindicate me.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator is crazier, then, than I thought he was.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I did not charge anybody with being pro-German. I did not use that term.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Whatever term the Senator used.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator permit me to ask a question?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is it not a fact that Germany has used every effort to make the treaty public?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am not in the confidence of Germany and know nothing about it. The Senator from Nebraska can state. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The occupants of the galleries are not yet a part of the Senate and must be in order.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does not the Senator know that in Great Britain, in France, and in Italy there is a scrupulous observance of the promise that has been made not to give the treaty publicity, and that on the other hand Germany has not only given it the widest publicity possible in Germany, but has sent copies into neutral countries, and according to the press reports has even sent copies to Senators of the United States? When the Senate by a vote also declares that the treaty shall be made public, is it not doing exactly what the German Government is doing, and is it not doing exactly the opposite of what the nations associated with the United States are doing?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the Senator had made those remarks in the form of a motion, I should move that it be subdivided into four parts.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. He did not make a motion; he asked a question.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. He asked four questions in one, and I shall endeavor to answer them seriatim, one at a time, in my own way.

First, I do not know anything about what the German Government has done with the treaty or why they have done it or whether they have had it published or not. I know nothing about what has been done in France or England with the treaty, or whether it was published there. I know nothing about the treaty except what I have seen in the newspapers. I am not in touch with the administration in reference to this matter. I have been trying to get some information, groping in the dark about it. The minute anyone comes forward with something we are confronted with a determined effort to suppress it, even though it purports to be information, although we have just directed the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations to find out what we can about it. Does that answer the Senator's question?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Not at all.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Ask it again.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does the Senator question the universal statement in the past that Germany has used every effort to make this treaty public, not only in Germany but in other parts of the world?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not question it, I do not deny it, and I do not admit it, for I know nothing about it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then if the Senate of the United States takes that same course, is not the majority of the United States Senate cooperating with Germany in trying to throw a monkey wrench into the machinery for the benefit of Germany?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am not familiar with monkey wrenches or with Germany. I do not know what the result of the action of the Senate of the United States may be. All I know is that the President of the United States has sent a cablegram to Mr. Tumulty, who appears to be the conduit through which the executive department now deals with the legislative branch, congratulating the Senator from Nebraska on his efforts to ascertain how these alleged copies of the treaty have escaped from the rules which the President laid down for their control. He wants to go to the bottom of it, and he says if there is any official English text that has escaped his eagle eye it has been obtained by improper methods. I do not know anything about that. I do not know whether this is an official English text or not. The Senator from Nebraska the other day stated what I read from page 694 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

> Mr. HITCHCOCK. I can see no great moral boast in that—
> Speaking of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]—
> If he held the treaty in his hands he held stolen goods—goods probably secured by bribery.

I never have had the highest opinion of this administration, but never in my wildest fancies have I intimated that they could be bribed to give out a treaty. If there is any evidence of that, I hope the Senator from Nebraska will produce it before the committee which is investigating it.

Mr. President, what does this committee propose to do. I read from the resolution which the Senate passed:

> Particularly to ascertain and report to the Senate the names of the persons, corporations, or interests which have secured copies of said treaty, and from whom they were secured and by what method, and also to ascertain and report to the Senate in what manner and to what extent said interests are particularly interested in said treaty.

How can we perform that duty unless we have the treaty? We are instructed to find first who has it; second, what the interests of the parties are in the treaty. The Senator from Idaho promptly produced the treaty. It is the only one I know about. The Senators who clamored to investigate about the treaty promptly wanted it suppressed, when their own instructions are carried out without any effort on their part. The Senator from Nevada——

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; I do not yield. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] comes in here and berates the committee and berates the Senate because of this purported treaty which, if incorrect, can be denied in five minutes by the Secretary of State. He, the Secretary of State, says he has 35 originals down there; it would not take him very long to compare this with one of the 35 originals, and if this is not one of the originals he can say so, and nobody will be deceived.

The Senator from Nevada says this treaty should have been referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations so that they could state whether or not it was authentic before it was printed. How can we tell whether or not it is authentic? How can you establish the authenticity of a paper which purports to be a copy of another paper unless you see that other paper and compare it? We are not allowed to see the other paper!

The Senator from Nevada says that the Committee on Foreign Relations this morning, as will be disclosed by the record when these hearings are published—the newspaper correspondents were there, and a stenographer was there—voted not to make the treaty public.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator is in error. I did not say "voted."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator said it was the consensus of opinion, did he not?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; I spoke of the manner in which it was obtained.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The record will show what the committee did. I am not so confident of my mental superiority over that of the Senator from Nevada as to set up my judgment against his or my recollection against his. The record will show it. My recollection of what was said and done was that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], who was temporarily presiding over the committee, while we are indicting the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], our regular chairman, said, after we had passed the motion ordering the subpœnaing of certain persons and the production of certain papers, "the understanding of the Chair is that that includes the production by them of a copy of the treaty, if they have it." There was some informal discussion about that, and I said it did not seem to me to be necessary for them to produce their alleged copies of the treaty unless they wanted to do so, but if it became necessary at any time all we would have to do would be to issue an additional subpœna to them to bring the copies, if we wanted them. The question of making the treaty public was never mentioned in the committee.

Mr. PITTMAN. It was decided, was it not, not to include the treaty among the papers required to be produced under a subpœna duces tecum?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator rebuked me a minute ago by saying that it was decided. Nothing was decided.

Mr. PITTMAN. I say the chairman——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The consensus of opinion was that we should not include in the subpœna duces tecum any request for a copy of the treaty, as I understood it.

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; that was the understanding.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. We are agreed about that; so there is no rebuke about that, and there is no variation between the conduct of the Senate this morning in ordering some other alleged copy of the treaty to be published in the RECORD and in the action of the committee in deciding not to summon some other copy of the treaty from some other source.

Mr. President, the committee having sent to us in what appears to be a bona fide and legitimate way the purported copy of the treaty, it is manifestly just as impossible for the Committee on Foreign Relations to pronounce upon its authenticity as it would be for any Senator on this floor to do so, unless we have the authentic copy to compare it with. The State Department is full of them, as I have stated.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understood the Senator from Connecticut to say "in what appeared to be an authentic and correct way." Would he mind explaining to the Senate how it appears that it is either authentic or correct?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What I mean by that is, that from the statement of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] it appeared to me to be a bona fide and correct copy.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I heard nothing in the statement of the Senator from Idaho that even tended to show that it was either authentic or correct. He merely stated that he had gotten it from a newspaper, I believe, or some other source.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator from Mississippi does not always hear what is said.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I do not.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am not attempting to quote the statement of the Senator from Idaho verbatim. It is in the RECORD; though not yet printed, the stenographers have it; but I understood him to say that this copy of the treaty was one procured by represenatives of the Chicago Tribune in Paris or elsewhere in Europe—whether it was in Paris or not I do not remember—and that it was brought to this country directly to the Tribune.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I heard that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And I understood the Senator from Massachusetts to say, either on the floor or in conversation, that he had no doubt about its authenticity, because it looked just like the one he had seen over in New York. They may be all forgeries for aught I know. If they are, Mr. Polk will know it at once, and he can denounce them as such.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They may be copies made by some person from some instrument which he thought was the treaty and which may have been the treaty; I do not know.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It may have been so.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But to assert that this appears to be authentic and correct when there is no phenomenon and there are no phenomena to show its authenticity and correctness—it is the mental conclusion of the Senator from Idaho and the personal opinion of the Senator from Massachusetts—is drawing it pretty strong.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not ask the Senator from Mississippi to accept their opinions. All I say is that these copies turn up from time to time; that they look alike; that one page of them is printed in French and the other in English, and they appear to be off the same press. Of course, I have no doubt, Mr. President, that they were given out by the peace commission in Paris generally; I have no doubt many of them were brought to this country, and, I think, for perfectly legitimate purposes. I do not think there is any scandal about their being brought to this country.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If my friend will excuse me a moment—I very much dislike to interrupt the Senator when he is talking—the Senator knows that from old experience——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I know how miserable it makes the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But when the Senator says he has no doubt these documents were given out by the peace commission he undoubtedly does not mean that——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do mean it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Because the peace commission has said that it would not give them out. The President has entered into an agreement with France and England, through the committee of the peace commission, that they should not be given out. I suppose that the Senator means this: That perhaps some member of the peace commission or some official of the peace commission or some subordinate of the peace comission has given them out.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Now, the Senator has said what he supposes I mean and I will state what I do mean. I think I am the best judge of what I mean.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator is the best judge of what he means; but I do not know whether or not he is the best judge of what the circumstances mean.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not pretend to be. I will let the Senator be the judge of that. What I mean is this: I know nothing about it whatever and have no information from headquarters, so I am compelled to grope in the dark——

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is simply what the Senator is doing.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very likely. I am trying to get some light by having this alleged treaty printed, and I am using the best brains I have got to put myself in the other fellow's place over there and see what I should probably do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No man can use better brains than the Senator from Connecticut, even when he is groping in the dark.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What I suppose happened was this: That in concocting this tremendous treaty, involving the financing of Europe by America, the peace commissioners had to consult with the fellows who controlled finances and financial interests in order to get the money to finance the people they wanted to help.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We know that, because they had a regular finance committee.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Now, then, I suppose that in order for these financial interests to say whether they would undertake this great burden and put up the money and take the bonds of these countries, they wanted to know what the treaty provision was by which they should do it; whether they would be provided for if they put up the money. I suppose so, though I do not know anything about it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That supposition is exactly just.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think it was quite proper. I do not believe the President was going off in the dark to make a treaty out of his own head, without knowing whether the financial provisions of it could be carried out. I think probably copies of this treaty were given out—not published—but were handed by the peace commissioners or their agents to certain people for their perusal, and that they were not intended to be made public. That is my opinion; but it is a mere guess. The copies have, however, been given out very generally; and evidently the gentleman to whom they were given, being chosen by the President or his advisers with their usual judgment about the kind of men they would trust, being good judges of human nature, the copies got into the wrong hands; the recipients did not regard the confidence reposed in them, and copies of the treaty passed all around, I think, all over Europe, and in New York, too, and one of them turned up here in the hands of a newspaper man from Chicago. I do not know how he procured it over there. He may have bought it for 15 or 20 cents somewhere, or he may have found it there. Mr. Polk knows whether or not it is genuine, and will not have it in his hands five minutes before he will be able to give his expert opinion as Acting Secretary of State, having examined 35 more of them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If that be true, why did you not wait until Mr. Polk could tell you?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Because I did not have anything to do with it. The Senator from Idaho did, and I am not responsible for him.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I see. I did not know that the Senator from Connecticut did not have anything to do with it. I thought that he had a heart-to-heart conference with the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. He told me he had it, and that is what I meant when the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] asked me in the committee this morning if I would name just one copy in this country, and I told him I would at 12 o'clock, because I knew that the Senator from Idaho was going to fish it right out here and hand it over.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And you were going to name at 12 o'clock what the Senator from Idaho stated he had?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; I was going to name the man whom I thought had one copy, and that was the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, I see——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am glad that the Senator does.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That the Senator from Idaho would have it at 12 o'clock?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. He would.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Connecticut did not refer, then, to the man who gave a copy to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I did not, because I did not know his name.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand the Senator now; and I really owe the Senator an apology, because I thought he was in the absolute confidence of the leader of the majority on the Republican side and also the leader of the minority party on the Republican side——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And on the Democratic side.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And that he would know beforehand just what they were going to do. I knew that the Senator from Connecticut was the most reliable partisan in the United States in his party and perhaps in the United States of any party, except myself.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Well, the Senator and I never have had any serious differences.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thought that they could rely upon the Senator from Connecticut and that perhaps he was consulted beforehand and knew something about it. I beg the Senator's pardon for thinking so.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator need not do so. I did know about it; I plead guilty to the impeachment.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. Possibly there is a difference of opinion between the Senator and myself on a certain subject. I think we are agreed on the method by which we determined that we should not bring this treaty before the committee. Do I understand the Senator to say that at that time there was no discussion as to the propriety of making the treaty public by bringing it before the committee?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I say I do not remember it; there may have been. My attention may have been diverted.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have a very distinct recollection that the propriety of it was discussed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not care whether it was or not, myself; but, if it pleases the Senator to have my opinion about it, I have given it to him.

Mr. President, I apologize to the Senate for having made any remarks at all on this question, because it is a post-mortem; the thing is done by a vote of the Senate of 2 to 1; it is in the RECORD; and all of this talking about whether or not it ought to have been done or whether two-thirds of the Senate ought to yield their notions of propriety to one-third is pure leather and prunella and amounts to nothing. So I apologize to the Senate and take my seat.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I seem to be one of those who offended the wisdom of the Foreign Relations Committee. I really believe that if I had known that the Foreign Relations Committee was opposed to printing this treaty it would have been a long time before I would have voted to print it; but there was no debate, and when questions come up suddenly all a Senator can do is to do that which seems to him to be right.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The name of the Senator from Arizona is first on the roll call.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; and it is just natural for me to do right, and I somehow do it without reflection. It seemed this way to me: The financial interests have, as they always do, obtained control of a few copies of the treaty and, thus knowing what bonds would be stabilized and what bonds would be not stabilized, began a system of flotation and speculation and gambling to the tune of millions of dollars, and, by the nine gods, what Wall Street is entitled to have the American people are entitled to have. That is my reason for having voted to make the treaty public. I have no excuse to offer here or elsewhere for that vote, and I would slap the face of a man outside of the Senate who challenged me for that vote.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, as a new Senator I should like the privilege of explaining my vote. I voted aye on the motion of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] on the assumption that the practice in this body was that no Senator would offer to have printed in the public RECORD a document which he did not think was of assistance to his associates in forming sound judgments on public questions or helpful in forming public opinion outside. Therefore I thought it was the courteous thing to do to vote in the affirmative and to assume that the motive of the mover was proper and in the public interest. If there is behind this motion any motive to humiliate or embarrass the representatives of the United States Government in Paris at the present time, I am not in sympathy with it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, originally I offered the resolution asking the Secretary of State to furnish the Senate a copy of this treaty, and, because I originally presented the resolution and have had little opportunity heretofore to state my reasons for it, just for an instant I beg you to bear with me.

The resolution was offered not upon any theory of interfering with any negotiations in Paris, not for the purpose of embarrassing any of the representatives of the United States, not from any partisan viewpoint at all; but it was offered upon the theory of government that ever I have had, and the theory of government that I ever shall have while I am in public office. It was offered because when a part of the people—a very small part of the people of the United States—had this treaty in their possession, all the people of the United States were entitled to have this treaty in their possession as well.

I was shocked, I was astounded, I was astonished when I found any opposition to that very simple resolution. The infamy in this matter is not in asking that all our people should have what Wall Street has, but the infamy in it is in endeavoring to keep secret from all the people of the United States what Wall Street has.

Mr. President, I am sick and tired, for one, of hearing statements about the German propaganda, "throwing monkey wrenches into the machinery," and the like. I have always known that the most recent convert is always the most vociferous, but when it is stated on the floor of the Senate that there was any design on the part of any man, so far as I am aware, on my part, least of all, "to throw monkey wrenches into the machinery" at Paris, or to interfere in any aspect with what was transpiring in the peace congress, such a statement is utterly without foundation, known by the man who made it to be utterly without foundation, and made in pretense and hypocrisy only, and in no other fashion, and for no other reason at all.

Mr. President, let us look for an instant at the facts in this case. Here is a treaty completed across the water, a treaty that has been handed to the enemy. That treaty has been given to the enemy, and that treaty having been given to the enemy, a synopsis has been given by our own agents unto our people. After that, the synopsis presumably being a synopsis that was accurate, the Secretary of State of the United States printed that synopsis and delivered it officially to various people who inquired for it. Then all neutral countries, we are informed, have complete copies of this particular treaty; and then it developed in the course of debate that there were copies of the treaty in this country and among certain individuals or gentlemen or financial interests, however you wish to term it, and being utilized by them.

All these are admitted facts; and from them what flows? If they are facts—and I take it that nobody here will deny that they are facts to-day—if you believe in democracy, if you think the American people yet are free, if you believe that the people of the United States yet want their liberty of expression and their freedom of action, when every country on earth has this treaty and when it is in the hands of financial men in New York City, if you believe in democracy and not in autocracy, upon what theory do you keep it from the rest of the people of the United States?

It is not a question of constitutional authority to act upon a treaty. It is not a question of diplomacy or of interfering with diplomatic action. It is not a question of fiduciary or confidential relation at all. It is not a question, indeed, of in any way or in any fashion interfering with those who are acting for us at Paris to-day. It is simply in the higher obligation and duty we owe—our obligation and duty in its last analysis—to the people of the United States of America. Shall we give to all of the people of the United States of America what a few of them have obtained in one manner or another, I care not what, but what the very few have obtained and what is in their possession to-day?

I regret that the President felt that he could not give out the treaty; but that ends the discussion so far as he is concerned. I question not him or his motives at all. That is not the point; but in a free Government like ours, when we know that the treaty is in the hands of men in Wall Street, upon what theory do you justify yourselves to your people of America in saying that they shall not have the same privilege? And, Mr. President, as to the question of the right to have this document, the right exists exactly as if any other document were at stake, any other matter that had been given out in part, and all of which we desired.

When this administration gave out to the people of the United States a synopsis, the administration committed all the heinous sins that have been described by the gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber. If this treaty were to be kept secret, if it were not to be delivered unto our people at all, if it were a matter of such transcendent importance that no man on earth should know of it except "the big four" who sit over in Paris marking out the boundaries of the world—if it were of that character, then, of course, it could have been retained in secrecy by them, and the confidential and fiduciary relation might have attached, and there might have been some sort of foundation for the argument that is made here.

But when this administration gave out to the people of America what purported to be an honest synopsis of the treaty this administration itself relieved us and itself of any confidential or any fiduciary relation, and gave at that very time the right to the American people to the entire and to the whole document. They gave us a synopsis, presumably to give us accurate and honest information. If they gave us an honest synopsis, then, Mr. President, there can be no harm in seeing the document itself. If they gave us a dishonest synopsis, then we, as men representing here the American people, ought to get the document itself and learn exactly what it is. But when they gave out the information, at that very moment they gave us the right of inquiry and the right to the particular matter from which it emanated, of which they said it was a correct part.

I admire the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] for his declaration to-day. To-day the reason this treaty ought to be published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, in a nutshell he has stated. The reason is because finally, in the minds of some men here, the paramount obligation that we owe is to the people of the United States; and when a few of the people of the United States have the treaty, all the people of the United States are entitled to it and to every part of it.

Mr. BECKHAM and Mr. HITCHCOCK addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALSH of Montana in the chair). The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BECKHAM. Mr. President, I was not in the Senate Chamber until at the close of the roll call on the motion in reference to the publication of this treaty, or purported treaty, in the RECORD. When I came in there had been, as I understand, no discussion of it, and I voted under a misapprehension. I was under the impression, from some information, that possibly the treaty had been published in this country and that there was no objection to its being published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. But I have listened very attentively to the discussion of this matter since the vote was taken, and I believe that in the light of what has taken place in the Foreign Relations Committee and the investigation which it is about to make we make a mistake, we lower the dignity of the Senate, in undertaking to publish without delay what is alleged to be the treaty framed there in Paris. I think it is a reflection not only upon our delegates to that conference, but upon all of the conferees. I think, too, that we should at least wait a reasonable time, until we can hear from the President in response to the resolution which recently passed the Senate, calling upon him for a copy of the treaty. We might publish this, and in the course of a short while we might find out that a different document is the real treaty. If it is going to be published in the newspapers so soon, the people will see it. But I do not believe, after what I have listened to this morning, that it is wise or proper that the Senate should by this motion insist upon the publication of this so-called treaty; and I shall, therefore, enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which that motion was adopted.

Mr. POINDEXTER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LODGE. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I made a motion to lay on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized.

Mr. LODGE. The Chair will not allow me to make the motion?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the only virtue in the argument of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], and in the remarks by him, lies in the suggestion that what Wall Street has secured the rest of the country should have. I agree to that general proposition; but the newspapers of the country are attending to that. One great paper in New York, the Times, and another one in Chicago, the Tribune, have already begun, and will undoubtedly at once complete, the publication of this treaty. It is going to the public. It has already, indeed, become public. There remains nothing that the Senate can do to add materially to its publicity. The publication in the RECORD is an insignificant affair; but the very gravamen of the charge against the Senate of the United States is that it is officially proposing to do exactly what the German Government has done, and that is the charge I make. The Senate of the United States is in the attitude of deserting the Governments with which this Government has been associated in this war and in this negotiation. The Senate of the United States is in the attitude of officially perpetrating a breach of the agreement made by the President of the United States with the other Nations with which we have been associated in this war. The Senate of the United States is putting itself in the attitude of a Bolshevik organization, running amuck here in the treaty negotiations. That is what the Senate of the United States is doing by authorizing an official publication of what purports to be the treaty.

As a matter of fact, we know that it is not the treaty. We know that it was the copy originally agreed upon by the victorious nations as a demand presented to Germany. We know that for several weeks the German representatives have been resisting that demand, and that already they have secured some modifications of that demand—modifications which have been agreed to. We know that other modifications are under consideration; and yet the Senate of the United States proposes, by an official publication, to give out to the world what Germany has given out, and what Germany wants to give out.

Mr. President, this treaty, when it is read by all the people in the United States, is not going to change their view. It is largely a matter in which the American Republic has no interest. The dispute over there between our Government—the United States—Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan on one side and Germany on the other relates very largely to the relations between Germany and France. We are not directly concerned in them; and the reason for suppression, the reason for keeping the tentative treaty secret at the time, until Germany had acted, was for the purpose of promoting the signing of the treaty. The reason that Germany sought to give publicity to it was for the purpose of making trouble in France, and trouble in Great Britain, and trouble in the near-by countries when the negotiators made concessions to the German demands. Germany had every interest in doing what the representatives of Great Britain, France, the United States, Italy, and Japan agreed not to do. Germany was interested in publicity. Our representatives and those of the other friendly countries were interested in keeping their agreement to themselves until Germany had acted.

The Senate of the United States can go on record in conflict with the President; but when it goes on record in conflict with the President it goes on record in conflict with the other nations associated with the United States. It goes on record as being in concurrence with Germany. It goes on record as practically running amuck in the peace negotiations over there. It goes on record as aiding Germany in the contention she is making. Now, the Senate can do that. It virtually has done it. I do not myself think it is going to be a matter of such tremendous importance, because sufficient time has already elapsed until it may almost be said that the treaty is ready for final signing. I think an exaggerated importance has been given to the objection to publicity. The suggestion was made by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] that what Wall Street knew the rest of the people of the United States have a right to know. They have, and they are going to get it through the newspapers, where they generally get their information; but the Senate of the United States is going to put itself on record before the world as doing the very thing that Germany wants done. The Senate of the United States, as a part of the Government of the United States, is going on record as being in disagreement with its friends in the late war and in concurrence with its enemy in the late war.

Now, the Senate can do that. Maybe the Senators will feel entirely happy over doing that; but what motive is there for doing it? There will be no publicity gained by doing it. Publicity is already secured—secured by newspapers that are in the business of making things public, regardless of consequences.

The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] never seems to be capable of understanding the facts connected with the synopsis of the treaty that was published. He seems to be utterly incapable, after all that has been laid before him, of appreciating the fact that the synopsis was given out by all of the nations associated with the United States in this war; that it was given out in Great Britain, it was given out in France, it was given out in Italy, as well as in the United States. He has assumed that it was only given out for the purpose of fooling the American people, but it was given out because the nations associated with us agreed with us that some statement should be made to the world—not to the United States alone, but to the world—of the things proper to be published as the general outline of the treaty.

That synopsis did not include everything. It did not include some of these delicate questions between France and Germany. What do we care whether they are in there or not? To put them in there and to make them public, to make them a subject of public agitation in the condition of Europe now, which borders on lawlessness, which threatens revolution, would have endangered the treaty; and yet the Senator seems to be possessed of the idea that it was an attempt to suppress information from the American people while it was given to the rest of the world.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. What was it intended for?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It was intended to give to the people of the world an outline of the general terms of the treaty.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Thereby giving them an honest outline?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. An honest outline so far as it went.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Then your secrecy was ended when you gave them the synopsis of the treaty.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There was a great deal more publicity given this treaty than ever occurred in the whole history of the world before.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I am not questioning that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is the first instance in history in which an attempt has been made to give to the world information about a treaty not yet finished.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. But when you gave the information, then you gave the treaty, and then all of the stuff that you talked about this treaty and its secrecy was at an end. Otherwise you should not have given out the synopsis.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, Mr. President, I do not suppose the Senator from California ever will understand the thing. He seems to be determined not to understand it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. He probably has a "pygmy mind."

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, of course I do not understand it as the Senator from Nebraska understands it; and thank God I do not understand it as the Senator from Nebraska understands it!

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator from California has repeatedly asserted, here in the Senate and down in the committee, and, I believe, also in interviews, that this was given out for the purpose of deceiving the American public.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Oh, no; now, Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. He has never seemed to appreciate the fact——

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will yield in a moment—that this was a document given out——

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I want to correct a misstatement.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, the Senator can correct it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. No such statement was made by the Senator from California, and I trust that the Senator from Nebraska, with that peculiar acumen and mental analysis which he possesses, will refrain from making a misstatement of that sort.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The stenographic report of the proceedings of the committee this morning will show that in his language before the committee the Senator from California repeated what I have heard him say elsewhere, which clearly implied that the synopsis given out was for the American people. He did not seem to know that it was given to Great Britain. He did not seem to know that it was given to France. He did not seem to know that it was given to all of the associated nations for the purpose of giving to the world all about this treaty that those who were negotiating thought it proper to announce to the world at that time. He has always made a point, here and elsewhere, of assuming that it was some imposition upon the American people and that they were being treated differently from the people elsewhere in the world.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. When the people of America——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from California desist for a moment until the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business? It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 120) to repeal chapter 154 of the act of the second session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, being the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to authorize the President in time of war to supervise or take possession and assume control of any telegraph, telephone, marine cable, or radio system or systems, or any part thereof, and to operate the same in such manner as may be needful or desirable for the duration of the war, and to provide just compensation therefor," approved July 16, 1918.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I rise just long enough to ask whether it is the desire of those who are engaged in this debate to continue the discussion? The unfinished business I would be very glad to take up, but I realize that if once taken up the debate can continue upon this subject that has been before us in the earlier hours of the day.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think it will not be necessary to lay aside the unfinished business. The Senator from Kentucky has entered his motion for a reconsideration, and that will go over until another day.

Mr. LODGE. No; Mr. President, I shall be forced to move to lay aside the unfinished business, because I propose to have a vote on the motion to reconsider. I do not propose to have the voice of the Senate and the American people smothered here to-day if I can help it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That discussion I will leave to the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Massachusetts. I only express my——

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska will state it.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to inquire whether there is not a motion pending to lay the motion of the Senator from Kentucky on the table?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will advise the Senator from Nebraska that there was such a motion pending at the hour of 2 o'clock, but it was displaced by the unfinished business.

Mr. NORRIS. The motion is not debatable. Why does not the Chair put the question on the motion?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There has been no motion to lay on the table.

Mr. LODGE. I made the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will be very glad to be advised, but the Chair is of the opinion that there is no motion pending to lay on the table.

Mr. LODGE. No; it was not received.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending motion was the motion of the Senator from Kentucky to reconsider the vote by which the treaty was ordered to be printed.

Mr. NORRIS. Then the Chair wants to change his answer to the parliamentary inquiry I made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the Senator from Nebraska to inquire whether a motion to reconsider was not made.

Mr. NORRIS. No; my inquiry was whether there was not a motion pending to lay the motion of the Senator from Kentucky on the table, and whether that motion is debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair answers that there was not.

Mr. SWANSON. I understand that the unfinished business comes up, and the only way that can be displaced is by a motion to take up something else, and that motion is debatable. If the Senator from Massachusetts wants to move to displace the unfinished business and take up something else he is privileged to do so.

Mr. LODGE. I am going to do so.

Mr. SWANSON. Then if the Senator moves to take up something else that motion is debatable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor at the present time. He yielded to the Senator from Iowa. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire to say that if it is the pleasure of the Members on both sides of the Chamber to continue at the present time the consideration of the subject which has been up this morning I intend to ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. I do not want that measure to lose its place as the unfinished business.

Mr. SWANSON. I object to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There has been no request made yet, the Chair will advise the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. CUMMINS. In order to bring the matter to a point, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. SWANSON. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate now proceed to consider——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] has the floor.

Mr. CUMMINS. He is now discussing the unfinished business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor and will proceed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, we seem to have a good deal of unfinished business before the Senate, rather more than usual at this time.

I do not know how the leaders on the other side of this Chamber are going to justify before an intelligent American public the attitude which they are now taking. I understand that they are moved partly by political considerations and partly by personal considerations to start a warfare on the President of the United States; that they propose to do whatever they can do to discredit him in the work in which he is engaged in Paris. I shall be interested in seeing what the outcome will be and what verdict the American people will render on the motley leadership to be seen on the other side of the Chamber, all designed, however, for the same purpose. One Republican leadership declares, as their associates have heretofore declared, that they believe in a league of nations, but they propose to have their own amendments adopted to this treaty, even though it results in destroying the chance of any league of nations at all. Those Senators know very well that there is only one league of nations before the world to-day. They know very well that all preconceived notions, all special hobbies, all particular theories are now at last, after months of labor, merged into this particular league. They know, or they ought to know, because the people of the United States know, that if this league is defeated there will be no league at all. They ought to know that if they carry out their purpose to amend this treaty they will prolong the condition of war, they will delay the settlement of peace, they will keep capital on the anxious seat, and they will keep labor in unemployment. And yet those Senators, whose real purpose it is to defeat the league, stand before the country at the head of the leading faction of the Republican Party in the Senate and declare that they propose to amend the treaty, no matter even though those results follow.

The other leadership of the Republican Party—that represented by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]—has at least the virtue of candor and courage. It holds forth no pretense to the country that it favors a league. It stands boldly by the proposition that the United States should hold aloof from any association of nations with the design of preserving the peace of the world. Under the leadership of the Senator from Idaho those Republicans go before the country, or propose to go before the country, and, if necessary, they propose to organize a party on the theory that the United States may remain a hermit among the nations; that the United States may be sufficient unto itself; and that the United States has no interest in what happens throughout the rest of the world. They propose to say to the American people the old order of things must be renewed; this peace is only a truce; the old order of war in the world is to remain; every nation must prepare for war in the future as in the past; the idea of international peace and international justice is an iridescent dream. They propose to say to the American people, "You must prepare for enormous appropriations for war; you must prepare for a great Navy and a great Army, because future wars will come." At least they are candid, at least they are sincere, at least they are courageous. With that brand of Republican leadership I can have no sympathy, but for it I can at least have respect. That position means something; and that leadership of the Senator from Idaho is a leadership which can be understood; it is a leadership that can be defended; it is a leadership that can be vindicated, although it is going to be rejected promptly by the American people.

But that other leadership—the leadership which is seeking in covert ways to cripple the negotiations in Paris, which is seeking in covert ways to introduce amendments to this league which will destroy it—is something which can not be defended before the American people. Men can not long in insincerity and in pretense make any case before the American people.

Mr. President, I am not going to discuss the league of nations here to-day, but I shall watch with a good deal of interest to see which leadership in the Republican Party is going to be accepted by the rank and file of the party. There are, fortunately, Republicans who take a still different position. There are Republicans who, while they do not entirely approve every article in this league of nations, yet propose to support it. They think they could draw a better league constitution, but at the same time they recognize that the issue is this league or none. They know that the issue before the American people is whether we shall have war on the future program or whether we shall assist in organizing the world for peace. Those Republicans may stand here in the Senate without recognized leadership, but I believe there are enough of them to defeat any effort to kill this league by amendment. They will stand as the representatives of the great rank and file of Republicans generally who welcome this united effort of 14 nations of the world to organize the world for future peace.

I shall watch the dubious struggle with interest, but I tell you, Senators, the Republican Party has reached the parting of the ways. You can not stand before the American people as the pretended advocates of a league of nations at the same time that you slaughter the only possible league of nations to be had. Neither can you induce the American people to follow you if you take the position that there shall be no league of nations whatever. The American people want to join the movement of the world for the purpose of organizing for international peace. They may criticize the President for the methods that he has adopted, they may criticize the President for some things that he has done, but the American people, when he brings back that league as a part of this peace treaty, are going to be in favor of adopting it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If they will be in favor of adopting it, why does the Senator object to printing it so that they can read it?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The league of nations has been printed, as the Senator from Washington very well knows. It has been officially printed and is before the country, and it is really almost the only part of the treaty in which the United States is interested.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But, Mr. President, it has not been printed in connection with the document of which it constitutes a part.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; it has not been printed in connection with something else.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There is no possibility of understanding its full import——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am talking now about the league of nations, and I am not objecting to the publicity that is given to this treaty.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not agree with the Senator, if he will permit me, in the statement that we have no concern in the adjustment of the terms of peace in Europe. I think we have some concern, but I think that Europe has more concern in it than we have. If the Senator thinks we have no concern in it, he ought to advise the President of the United States not to spend his entire time dictating the terms of peace.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I ask the Senator from Nebraska a question?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I shall be glad to answer it.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator has upon very many occasions recently talked about leaders and leadership in his rather futile attempt to classify the Senators upon this side of the Chamber. Does he recognize or does he not recognize that the Senators upon this side of the Chamber will do exactly what each of them thinks he ought to do and vote as he thinks he ought to vote? Does he assume that they will be sincere or does he assume that they are insincere? I would like to know, in view of the remarks of the Senator, whether he grants to Members on this side of the Chamber any honesty whatever either of purpose or in conduct?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am very willing to grant it to the Senator from Iowa to the fullest degree. I have not a doubt that he will continue the uniform record which he has made as a public servant in many years of valuable public service and do exactly what he believes to be right. I am not referring to him individually, I will say, but I will also say that it is evident there is a settled purpose in the leadership upon the opposite side of the Chamber to embarrass the President of the United States. There is evidently a settled purpose here to attempt to make a political issue out of the league of nations. If it fails it will only be because the Senators find that the American people are not going to follow their leadership. It will only be because they realize that they are going to split their own party by doing it. When I say "they" I do not mean every Senator. I mean the controlling interests over on the Republican side which filled the Committee on Foreign Relations with Senators practically pledged to oppose the league of nations and practically pledged to bring an amendment out of the Foreign Relations Committee.

Do Senators think I have not talked with Republicans? I know Republicans on the other side of this Chamber who feel just as I feel, indignant that agreement with the leaders on the treaty should have been made a test to decide whether a Senator should go on the Foreign Relations Committee or not. I am not the only indignant one. There are Republican Senators on the other side of this Chamber, and a number of them, indignant that their personal views on the league of nations should have been inquired into, and it should have been made necessary for them to pledge themselves on an issue which should be decided upon its merits and not on political considerations.

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. FALL. In filling the vacancies on the Democratic side it was not necessary to make inquiries or ascertain how any Democrat would vote, I presume?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There were no vacancies on the Democratic side.

Mr. FALL. In cutting off those who were left off and in seeking to put others on, may I ask the Senator what policy was suggested?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There was no policy. Simply those lacking in seniority were dropped off. There was no such condition that I know of; no question of that sort raised.

Mr. FALL. The Senator did seek to have another member on the committee, did he not?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator from New Mexico knows the reason. It was because one Senator had been dropped off of both the big committees that he had been on.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I ask the Senator from Nebraska another question? The Senator evidently believes there is great discord upon the Republican side with regard to this subject and unanimity upon the Democratic side.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Not entire unanimity.

Mr. CUMMINS. But great unanimity?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There is great unanimity among the American people.

Mr. CUMMINS. There is more unanimity among the Senators upon the Democratic side than among those on this side of the Chamber?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have made no such statement.

Mr. CUMMINS. Why is there great unanimity upon the Democratic side and great discord upon the Republican side? Does that indicate greater independence or less independence upon the Democratic side?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not know that I am prepared to answer that question. The Republican Party has been split in prior times into several parts on great issues. It was split upon the tariff issue. The Senator from Iowa was the distinguished leader of what was then called the minority of the Republican Party. But, as a matter of fact, at the present time the purpose of the recognized dominant Republican leadership on that side of the Chamber is to kill the league of nations, if possible, and to kill it by indirection. I say that I have much more admiration for the courage and real leadership of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], who stands out and admits he is against the league of nations; that he wants the world organized for war; that he wants to make war; that he wants the United States to refuse to join any international movement for the preservation of peace. That is real leadership. That makes an issue. That is not the leadership I am complaining of here, which seeks to avoid what is the real question in the public mind. The question in the public mind to-day and the question that is agitating the people is whether we are going to organize the world for peace. We can only organize it for peace by accepting this treaty.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, unlike the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and unlike the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], I do not view this as a party question. The Senator from Massachusetts has already indicated that he did view it as a party question by issuing a pronunciamento to his followers upon two different occasions to wait until they could hear further from some indefinite source, supposed to be a Republican caucus. The Senator from Idaho has indicated his view that this ought to be a party question by contending that the Republican Party ought to throw itself as a party into the breach against the covenant of peace. If I am wrong about either one of these statements, I should like to be corrected right now while I am on my feet. [A pause.]

Mr. President, there was a time in the history of the United States prior to this when a great President of the United States, who had been also a great southerner and leader of the armies of the Colonies in their revolt against Great Britain, had a history written of him by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. The Senator from Massachusetts is uniformly accorded the praise of being a very learned and very scholarly man, and what he says and what he quotes is to be received with due accord by lesser men. I am sorry to see the Senator from Massachusetts, after a conversation with the Senator from Idaho—apparently an intense conversation—has disappeared from the Chamber.

At this previous period Gen. George Washington, of the Revolution, and President George Washington, of Virginia and of the American Union, has this said about him by the Senator from Massachusetts. I am quoting from volume 2 of the Life of George Washington, by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]:

> In fact, his general view of the opposition was marked by that perfect clearness which was characteristic of all his opinions when he had fully formed them. In July, 1793, he wrote to Henry Lee,

These are the words of Washington which I am about to quote:

> That there are in this as well as in all other countries discontented characters, I well know.

Of course, George had no regard for the Bolsheviki or the Irish-American vote or the German-American vote, but with his usual foresight he foresaw things of their ilk.

> That there are in this as well as in all other countries discontented characters, I well know; as also that these characters are actuated by very different views; some good, from an opinion that the general measures of the Government are impure; some bad, and, if I might be allowed to use so harsh an expression, diabolical—

Think of that adjective coming from the serene Father of his County; diabolic! It sounds like the Wilsonphobia of to-day—> inasmuch as they are not only meant to impede the measures of the Government generally, but more especially as a great means toward the accomplishment of it, to destroy the confidence which it is necessary for the people to place, until they have unequivocal proof of demerit, in their public servants.

Mr. President, if Gen. George Washington, afterwards President, had had in immediate contemplation the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Idaho, he could not better have expressed himself when describing their conduct toward and their words about the present Chief Magistrate, to wit:

> Not only meant to impede the measures of the Government generally, but more especially as a great means toward the accomplishment of it, to destroy the confidence which it is necessary for the people to place, until they have unequivocal proof of demerit, in their public servants.

What are these men, united only on this issue, trying to do? "Not only to impede the measures of the Government generally," because the Government in matters of negotiation of treaties is constituted of the Executive, but more especially, to quote the language of George Washington:

> As a great means toward the accomplishment of it, to destroy the confidence which it is necessary for the people to place, until they have unequivocal proof of demerit, in their public servants.

The present Chief Magistrate of the United States is Woodrow Wilson, elected by the people, in whom sovereignty dwells. These men have been engaged for days and weeks and months in trying to destroy the confidence the American people ought to have in him as their representative. Without waiting until they have "unequivocal proof of demerit," to quote the language of George Washington, they and their foolish followers have been nagging, have been bedeviling, have been on the outside taking advantage of every little uncrossed "t" or undotted "i," or a "q" not followed by a "u," in order to arouse distrust of our representative in Europe—our representative, whether we are Republicans or not; my representative, our representative; the representative of all of us, elected by us to bear our standard abroad. Where did you get your authority to represent the American people in matters of negotiation—from the State of Idaho? Not a bit. She never had any. If you had been from the old State of Virginia, I could have told you that even she never had any. No State in this Union ever had any control of any foreign relations. No Senator or ambassador from a State ever had any. You have full power to make or to amend or to modify a treaty, but you have no power to negotiate one at all.

I will not enter again into the wearisome business of quoting the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], former Senator Spooner, President Taft, and George Washington upon that question. That is too clearly settled for dispute by any man with the intelligence of a Bronx Hill goat, who recognizes no higher ambition in life than eating a tin can.

What is your right to interfere with the negotiation of a treaty? Whence proceeds it? From your State and from the Nation or from the Constitution? It proceeds from no whence. Of course, you have the general right of an American citizen to express your views; that is a different proposition; but you force upon the Senate now, with a partisan majority and with a few men on this side of the Chamber who are seeking reelection and think it is popular, an official utterance of the Senate of the United States as a body interfering with the negotiation powers of the President. But I believe I will go on and quote the balance of what George Washington had to say. George Washington continued:

> In this right I consider myself whilst I am an occupant of office, and if they were to go further and call me their slave during this period, I would not dispute the point.

Friends, do you appreciate the full pathos of that? That comes from George Washington.

> If they were to go further and call me their slave during this period, I would not dispute the point.

It is the habit of Senators and Presidents to call themselves public "servants," but George Washington is the only one of us who ever consented to be called a public slave, and he did it out of intellectual humility and the great magnanimity and modesty that made up the greatness of the man. I do not do it; you do not do it. I am not the slave of Mississippi; I am not the slave of the American people; I am not the slave of American public opinion. I am its servant—its hired servant, if you will—with the right to quit the job whenever I get ready. But such was the pathos of the situation presented to George Washington under circumstances like those which now face Mr. Wilson that he confesses himself a public slave.

> If they were to go further and call me their slave during this period, I would not dispute the point.

He further says:

> But in what will this abuse terminate?

What is the abuse to which he refers? It is the abuse of the interference of other people with the constitutional right of the Executive to negotiate with foreign countries. He further says:

> For I have a consolation within me that no earthly effort can deprive me of, and that is that neither ambition nor interested motives have influenced my conduct.

Will the Senator from Idaho say, will the Senator from Massachusetts, who has retired from the Chamber, say that either "ambition or interested motives" have influenced Woodrow Wilson's conduct? Will they dare face the American people with that assertion? Will the two wings of the Republican Party coalesce with that assertion? They dare not; and neither one of them dares by itself to make it. George Washington goes on further:

The arrows of malevolence, therefore, however barbed and well pointed—

Are there any two men in the Senate that are more capable of better "barbing and well pointing an arrow" than the leader of the majority of the Republican side and the leader of the minority upon that side—both probably candidates for the Presidency?

The arrows of malevolence, therefore, however barbed and well pointed, never can reach the most vulnerable part of me, though whilst I am up as a mark they will be continually aimed.

So much for George Washington.

Now I come to the lesser light—the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. Perhaps I ought to apologize for saying "the lesser light," because when he undertook to write a biography of George Washington, in a great number of particulars he made himself the greater light. He was descended from the Cabots and Lodges and the old Federalists in Massachusetts; and their chief aim in life was to keep the Irish from getting control in Massachusetts when they began to come in there very early, which heredity was very much at variance, by the way, with the vote he cast here the other day. But the Senator—the lesser light—says of George Washington:

He was not much given, however, to talking about his assailants.

That is Woodrow Wilson again, is it not? He did become human once when he defied that infernal Irish-American in New York and told him that "he knew more about disloyal votes in America than he himself did." He became human again when he refused to receive a leader of the Irish-Americans who called on him to give him instruction and advice, and who previously had by language insulted him. I wish he would become human oftener. I like for a man to become human every now and then and lose his temper.

Thomas Jefferson said of George Washington that he was very human after all; that now and then he got into a towering passion, and somebody said about him that upon the field of Germantown he "swore like an angel of the Lord." A man ought now and then to swear like an angel of the Lord. My only quarrel with Woodrow Wilson is that he does not do it oftener, better, and more strongly and more virulently, especially when he represents the American people and his opponents represent all of the hyphenates in America—all of the enemy hyphenates in America.

You have not yet introduced any resolution against Japan providing for the independence of Korea, lately conquered and very much oppressed. Why? Because you know Great Britain will be good humored with you and Japan will not be, and because there are a lot of Irish-American votes in America, and there are no Korean votes in America. That is the honest God's truth about you. But to go on with "the lesser light." LODGE says of George Washington:

He was not much given, however, to talking about his assailants. If he said anything, it was usually in the way of contemptuous sarcasm, as when he wrote to Morris: "The affairs of this country can not go amiss. There are so many watchful guardians of them and such infallible guides that one is at no loss for a director at every turn."

Oh, they come from Massachusetts—these infallible guides—they come from Idaho; they come from Missouri; they come from all around the country, as you know. They are such "infallible guides" that "one is at no loss for a director at every turn." One may be at a bit of a loss about following the directions if he is a good American, an unhyphenated patriot, and devoted to his own country, without any regard to a "fatherland" in Europe—if he is just an American and nothing more, and spews out hyphens.

Washington continues:

But of these matters I shall say little.

That is the end of the quotation from Washington. Then says "the lesser light"—and I apologize for the phrase:

If these attacks had any effect on him, it was only to make him more determined in carrying out his purposes.

I guess that is what you mean when you say Wilson has got a "stiff, long lower jaw," that he is "stubborn" and does not listen to what you are saying. Who else is listening to it? Do you imagine France is listening to it? Do you imagine Great Britain is listening to it? Do you imagine Italy is listening to it? Germany is listening to it, and Germany is making the most out of it that she can, with the hope of getting better terms—poor, foolish Germany, catching at straws.

Mr. President, there is not a great deal of much importance connected with what I have just read, except the fact that it comes from the Senator from Massachusetts. If the Senator from Idaho had been a great scholar and had written a great many books of one sort or another, I expect perhaps I would have found something from him to quote. I have served with the Senator from Idaho for a long time, and have very high regard for him; in fact, personally, I am very fond of him.

I do not want to put myself in the attitude of a preacher and of reading him a lecture. God knows I have got no right to take that attitude toward any human being on the face of the earth; but I would in a friendly way counsel him to consider more the atmosphere of the world and the atmosphere of the United States and a little bit less the atmosphere of the Washington Post and Washington Republican bosses and of the Senate Chamber.

Sometime ago the Senator from Idaho said that ex-President of the United States Taft was a sort of walking corpse. Taft came back in his inimitable, good-natured way and said "yes"; he recognized that, but he was trying to keep from having more walking corpses on the surface of the earth. I would advise the Senator from Idaho that, if his real ambition is to be President of the United States, he had better study the opinion of the people of the United States and not the opinion merely of the partisan majority of the Senate of the United States at this time. Even that will change before the vote is cast, because the people will by then be heard from, and even Senators are just politicians.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Mississippi would not want me to take the advice of ex-President Taft as to how to become President, would he?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, the advice of the ex-President as to how to become President would be very bad advice; but the advice or the example of the Senator from Idaho as to how to be the next President would be infinitely worse advice.

Now, Mr. President, I ask to have inserted as a part of my remarks an editorial from the St. Louis Daily Globe-Democrat of Sunday morning, May 18, entitled "America and article 10."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The editorial referred to is as follows:

AMERICA AND ARTICLE 10.

The one provision on which such American opposition to the covenant of the league of nations as now remains is based is that of article 10. This article reads as follows:

"The members of the league undertake to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the league. In case of any such aggression or in case of any threat or danger of such aggression the council shall advise upon the means by which this obligation shall be fulfilled."

It is claimed by some that this provision will increase rather than diminish the probability of war, that it will draw us into war against our will and judgment, and that it will prevent the extension of national boundaries.

If this or any other provision of the covenant would increase war, it is safe to say that no nation and few individuals would favor it—not now, at any rate, after the experience of the last four years. But the sole purpose of the league of nations is to prevent war, or, at least, to diminish it as far as is humanly possible, and this section is considered necessary to the achievement of that purpose. Many amendments were made to the covenant as a result of American opposition, but article 10, although special stress was laid upon it by the opposition, was not touched. No concession was made to the demands of American critics as to this section, because it was considered vital to the existence of the league and therefore vital to the attainment of its design, the prevention of war. Why is it considered vital? Because any association of nations to promote peace and who intend, as a means to that end, to reduce their armament, their war power, must have some assurance of mutual protection. If they voluntarily weaken their defenses there must be some understanding among them to prevent such weakening from imperiling any of their number. The situation of the United States and Great Britain is such that they could probably take care of themselves under any circumstances, but this is true of no others. If, on the other hand, they have such pledges of support, then they can feel that their safety is relatively insured and their stability established, and they can enter upon an era of peace unfearing any outward aggression. No nation having any reason to fear an enemy, actual or possible, and there are now few that do not, will pledge itself to disarmament and avoidance of war unless some substitute is provided of a protective nature. The continental nations of Europe have always had that fear constantly before them, and no league of peace involving disarmament is possible that does not remove that fear, at least to a large extent, for these nations simply will not enter one without some such security as is offered by article 10. We, 3,000 miles from any enemy that might endanger us, can say we do not need it, and perhaps we do not, but it is essential to them and to the organization of any effective league of peace. That is why article 10 has not been changed. France in particular must look upon it as her chief safeguard if her desire for a special treaty is not attained.

But is this section likely to draw us into war? Consider first the purpose of this covenant—the promotion of peace by the prevention of war. Is war to be prevented by increasing the risk of it? The nations of Europe are more deeply concerned in the prevention of war than we are. They know more about it, have had a longer experience with its horrors. They know, too well, also, that a small spark is likely to kindle a great conflagration. They do not want war to start. Is it at all reasonable to assume then, that these nations are willing to approve an agreement that will promote war? If this section would draw us into war it would draw them in much more quickly and involve them much more seriously if it were in Europe. If this were probable is it imaginable that the high representatives of these nations would not only approve of this article but insist upon its retention? These men we may presume represent the highest qualities of intelligence, patriotism, and statesmanship in their respective countries. To charge them with favoring an agreement that would increase the risk of war is to charge them with an imbecility worse than treason to their people.

No; the purpose of this article, as of the whole covenant, is to prevent war. If there had been such an agreement in existence in 1914 there would have been no war. Germany would not have dared to begin a war with the knowledge that all the other nations, and particularly the United States and Great Britain, were leagued against her in such a purpose. There was much of madness in the conduct of Germany, but Germany was not that mad. If Germany, with all her power, the greatest war power ever developed by any people, would not have dared this, what nation would dare? Where is the country within the league or out of it that would engage in war against a member of the league with such an overwhelming force potentially against it? The mere moral power of this agreement is quite sufficient to deter any nation from war without first complying with the procedure of arbitration or conciliation required in this covenant.

Article 10 is the basic section of the association of nations, the preliminary assurance of mutual support against external aggression threatening territorial integrity or loss of sovereignty, and of mutual respect for such integrity and sovereignty. That is to say, the members will not only themselves respect the sovereign rights of one another but will protect them from aggression by others. There is no probability of aggression or interference without some basis or excuse for action in a dispute. The action of the league and its members in regard to all disputes is set forth in subsequent articles of the covenant, which provide for the course of action in case of violation of the rules of procedure by members of the league in their relations with one another. These articles do not apply, with the exception of 17, to countries not members. Every conceivable contingency within the league is provided for in these articles. Article 10 is a general, comprehensive section, and is designed to provide for possible emergencies not covered in the detailed provisions of the subsequent articles, such a great emergency, perhaps, as that which arose in 1914, although even that began with a dispute.

External aggression must come either from within or from without the league. If a member of the league is attacked by another member of the league in disregard of its covenants, the course of action by the league itself is set forth in article 16. If a nation outside the league refuses, upon invitation, to accept the obligations of membership for the purpose of the dispute which it has with such member and resorts to war, it is directed in article 17 that the provisions of article 16 shall likewise be applied against it. That article provides, first, for the severance of trade and financial relations with the offending nation, the prohibition of all intercourse between the nationals of the members of the league and those of the offending State, and the prevention of all financial, commercial, or personal intercourse between the nationals of the offending State and the nationals of any other State whatsoever. That, in brief, is an economic and social boycott, followed by a general blockade. The pressure of such an economic isolation is something no nation would like to contemplate, and no nation would lightly risk the loss it would involve. But if military action still were needed, the council would recommend to the Governments the forces to be contributed. The Governments would decide for themselves as to the merits of the council's recommendation.

Now, it is clearly to be seen that any aggression, actual or threatened, from within the league or without, is covered in articles 11 to 17 and full provision made therein for the course of action to be taken by the respective members of the league. Therefore, any action of war based specifically and exclusively upon article 10 must spring from acts or circumstances not contemplated or foreseen in the formulation of these other articles, acts that are entirely outside their provisions. A sudden and unexpected attack by one nation upon another, a member of the league, so sudden that no opportunity could be given to interpose the arbitration or conciliation measures, would come under this article. Such an attack is less likely to occur, with the nations combined to crush it, than any other. But if this or any other emergency should arise, not specifically covered in the agreement and which threatened or perpetrated external aggression upon any member of the league, then the members would stand together under article 10. In this aspect it is simply a provision for the exceptional, unexpected, and unforeseen hostility.

Article 10, it is apparent, has several purposes and functions. It is, first of all, the fundamental agreement of mutual support in case of attack from without. It is the foundation upon which the other articles relating to international disputes is laid. There would be no league without it, for many of the nations concerned would not enter into an association that called for disarmament unless some such pledge were made, just as a man whose life is threatened is unwilling to give up his arms unless assured that he will be protected in other ways. If the plans of disarmament are carried out to the satisfaction of the countries and made universal, the time will come when such an agreement as this will be superfluous, for the fear which demands it now will be removed. But under present conditions, and the terror of Germany's sudden and prodigious attack still in the minds of the world, such an understanding is an essential basis for a peace that can be felt to be secure. This is particularly true because of the new countries that are being created as a result of the war and whose integrity and sovereignty are in special need of exterior support. The respect of sovereignty is another important feature. All nations are jealous of their sovereign rights as nations, particularly their right to conduct their own affairs, and this is a proper agreement to respect those rights.

But more than all this, article 10 is the preliminary assertion of solidarity upon which articles 11 to 17 are based and which in a way encompasses them. It establishes a principle; they define its application. It is a mistake to consider article 10 as something that stands alone. Nor is it less a part of the two articles which precede it, those relating to disarmament. In itself it calls for no action by the league or the members of the league unless some extraordinary emergency arises for which no other provision is made in the covenant. In that remote exigency the council is directed to advise upon the means by which the obligations under it may be fulfilled. The council can only advise. It rests upon the respective Governments themselves to decide how they will fulfill their obligations under it. The advice of the council must be by unanimous agreement of its members, and the United States will be a member. No advice as to the course of action will therefore be given that would be considered unjust to the United States by the representative of our Government. Probably no advice will be given by the council until after consultation with the respective Governments represented in the council. This consultation would seem to be essential in important matters, for this is a league of nations, not a superstate, and the members of the council are primarily but representatives of the nations that are given the predominating influence. Inasmuch as these nations have the greatest power, both in themselves and in the league, their responsibilities will be the greater, and they will endeavor to reach an agreement among themselves as to what action should be taken in case of such an extraordinary emergency as would fall upon article 10 alone. Each Government must be its own judge as to the manner in which it will fulfill its obligation, and the character and extent of its support will depend upon the circumstances of the case, the greatness of the emergency, and the degree of its own danger. That danger would be measured to a large extent by proximity, and it is reasonable to assume that the countries nearest the seat of trouble would be first to go to the aid of the one attacked. But somehow all would help, if the help of all were seen to be necessary, and it is this assurance that is required to give cohesion and stability to the association, and which alone can provide the moral influence, which may become compulsory, that must be provided for in the absence of a permanent international police force.

To summarize: Article 10 is the necessary binding of the nations into a unified and potential force for mutual respect and protection. The fulfillment of all ordinary obligations in the pledge it involves is provided for in other articles. It is only in exceptional circumstances, not otherwise provided for, that action under it specifically would be appealed for. The occurrence of such circumstances is highly improbable, but if they should develop each nation would be the judge of its obligations under the article. Good faith would require the support it pledges, but whether that support would be economic alone, or both economic and military, would depend upon the nature of the case and the understanding reached by the respective Governments.

Mr. Taft, Mr. Root, and Mr. Hughes, the three leading Republicans of the country, discussed this article at length before the covenant was revised. Mr. Hughes, the least friendly of the three, opposed it, but said that "certainly each power will be the judge of what in good faith it should do. In the case of the United States the guaranty will not be made good except by the action of Congress, and it will be for Congress to decide whether we are bound and what we shall undertake." Mr. Root believes the article necessary to the solution of the reconstruction problems and the maintenance of the stability of the reconstruction. "The allied nations in their council," he said, "must determine the lines of reconstruction. Their determination must be enforced. They may make mistakes. Doubtless they will, but there must be decision, and decision must be enforced. Under these circumstances the United States can not quit. It must go on to the performance of its duty, and the immediate aspect of article 10 is an agreement to do that."

He thought, however, that it should not be made permanent and suggested an amendment permitting any party, after five years, to terminate its obligation under it upon one year's notice. If within five years this provision would seem to be unnecessary, because conditions had become stable and the fear that now makes it necessary had passed away, the revision of the covenant has made amendment to that effect possible. And, besides, the revised covenant permits any nation to withdraw upon two years' notice if it is found to be onerous or unsatisfactory. Mr. Taft finds no objection to article 10, although he had suggested that it might be better to show distinctly the distribution of obligation under it. He assumes, however, that distribution will be arranged by the council and the respective Governments. "The fact that the council is to advise what means shall be taken to fulfill the obligation shows," he says, "that they are to be such as each nation shall deem proper and fair under the circumstances considering its remoteness from the country and the fact that nearer presence of other nations should induce them to furnish the required military force."

Now, as to the claim that it will prevent the territorial development of nations or the assistance of a nation desiring to help the people of another struggling for freedom. The United States is living evidence that war is not essential to territorial expansion and development. We added Florida and Louisiana Purchase and Alaska to our domain by peaceable means. There is nothing in article 10 to prevent such territorial changes. Nor is there anything to prevent changes in form or character of any government. It proposes no interference with peoples in their internal affairs. If a part of a nation should desire to separate from the rest and set up an independent government, there is nothing in this article or elsewhere in the covenant calling for hostile action by the league or any of its members. The possibility that we, for example, might be prevented from going to the rescue of a people seeking their independence is not a persuasive objection. We have had many opportunities in the past, but only once in all history have we taken up arms in such a cause, and there is not the slightest probability of another case similar to Cuba arising in this hemisphere. All the people in the western world are now free. Although we have had profound sympathy for the struggles for freedom occurring from time to time in the Eastern Hemisphere, we have never once even thought of going to war for them. As to the claim set up by one or two objectors that this would constitute an impious limitation of the Almighty, we are disposed to believe that no association of men can in any way limit His power.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I now ask to have inserted as a part of my remarks an editorial from the same paper of May 25 entitled "Reason or passion," an editorial paying some attention to the attempted effort of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] to arouse the feeling of the South against the colored majority, as he alleges, in the league of nations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial referred to is as follows:

REASON OR PASSION.

Senator REED'S speech on the treaty is not an appeal to reason but an appeal to prejudice. His experience as a politician has taught him that there is nothing so responsive to the influence of rhetoric as prejudice. But if this great matter is to be settled rightly, it must be settled rationally. Passion is a power for good if it is founded upon truth and restrained by reason, but it is an unmitigated evil if it is without either truth or reason. The question before the United States Senate is the most important one that has ever been presented to that body for its approval. There has been nothing comparable with it since the adoption of the Constitution. It should be considered, therefore, with the analytical perception, calm judgment, and the honesty and patriotism of true statesmanship. It is essential that it be discussed honestly if the people are to form opinion that is based upon truth, and opinion that is not based upon truth is not the opinion that should govern conduct and action in the United States of America.

Senator REED'S speech is for the deliberate purpose of arousing the racial prejudice that is instinctive in nearly all of us. He pictures a world governed by black, yellow, and brown races. "This is a colored league of nations," he says. "That is to say, the majority of the nations composing the league do not belong to the white race of men. On the contrary, they are a conglomerate of the black, yellow, brown, and red races, frequently so intermixed and commingled as to constitute an unclassified mongrel breed." What is the truth as to this? Of the 32 nations that are set down as original members of the league of nations only 7 are not white—India, China, Haiti, Hedjaz, Japan, Liberia, and Siam, and the Arabians of Hedjaz, we think, would strenuously object to the classification of a Semitic race as not white. Of the 13 nations invited to accede to the covenant only 1, Persia, could be placed in Senator REED'S category of color, and that is a debatable classification for Persia. So, in fact, out of 45 nations altogether that are recognized by the covenant only 8—only 7, if we eliminate Hedjaz—are colored nations. The nations that are white, by any standard of ethnology, are the United States, Belgium, Great Britain, Canada, Australia, South Africa, New Zealand, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, France, Greece, Guatemala, Honduras, Italy, Nicaragua, Panama, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Roumania, Serbia, Uruguay, Argentina, Chile, Colombia, Denmark, Netherlands, Norway, Paraguay, Salvador, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, and Venezuela. Where are the colored nations in this list, which, with the 8 previously mentioned, is the complete roll of the nations entering or invited to enter the league?

Starting with such a basis of untruth Senator REED proceeds to elaborate by misrepresentation of the principle, long fixed in international law, of the equality of States. This does not mean that States are equal in dignity, importance, or power, but that each possesses the same number of sovereign rights and powers. That is to say, the essential rights of one nation, however small, are the same as the rights of any other nation, however great. That is a principle the United States has always asserted and defended. It is the principle upon which the Monroe doctrine is founded, and any association of States would be impossible without its recognition. In every conference of States for the promotion of international understandings that has ever been held the rule of equality of States has been operative. In all such conferences decisions are reached by unanimous agreement, and only by unanimous agreement, just as the treaty now before us has been formulated by the unanimous agreement of the representatives of the 32 nations at the peace conference. So it will be in the league of nations. It is expressly stated in the covenant that all decisions shall be by unanimous agreement of the council or the assembly, except in a few specified cases of procedure. A majority of votes, therefore, has no significance whatever. No combination of States for voting purposes can have any power when a single vote is supreme. For example, the United States, under the provisions of this covenant, can stand alone, with its single vote, against all the other nations of the world. It could have no more power with 40 votes than it has with one when any number of votes short of the entire number means no more than one. But Senator REED endeavors to convey the impression that the league is to be controlled by the number of votes, like a legislative assembly. This is as absurd as it is untrue. America nor England nor France nor even Liberia would think for a moment of entering into an association where it could be dominated by the votes of others. No such domination is possible over any nation under the covenant of the league. When this is understood Senator REED'S racial comparisons are seen to be wholly irrelevant.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, nothing was ever more stupid than that appeal of the Senator from Missouri. There is not a man in the United States that will respond more quickly than I to an appeal to race supremacy, race integrity, race purity, and to making this country a white man's country all over; but when the Senator went on to treat the Senator from North Carolina, the Senator from South Carolina, the Senator from Louisiana, and me as if we were veritable asses he went just a little bit too far. He comes from a State that does not disfranchise Negroes by any pretext of constitutional disqualification for the suffrage; he comes from a State which does not disfranchise illiterates by any disqualification for the suffrage; and yet he went on here for half an hour trying to arouse the prejudice of the southern people on the race issue and upon the illiteracy question, when he knew as well as I know and as well as you know that the difference was this: In the internal and domestic administration of affairs the qualification of the suffrage is a privilege extended in the interests of society within the country. He knew as well as I know that in international affairs the white man is entitled to govern the white man's country, the brown man the brown man's country, and the black man the black man's country, and that question does not come into it except in so far as the white man and the brown man and the black man may want to secure each his own supremacy in his own country and to secure national world justice for all.

Mr. President, I do not know how the Senator from Missouri voted the other day upon the proposition of my colleague [Mr. HARRISON] to limit woman suffrage to white women. I suppose he voted with us; I suppose his political interest in Missouri was to vote with us; but he comes from a State that never made that distinction; he comes from a State that never had a literacy provision. What right did he have to stand here and make that appeal to us upon the ground of illiteracy and the balance of it?

And that is not all. His statement that a majority of the nations represented in the league of nations were colored was not even correct. He had to fudge like all the world to make it appear correct. For example, he represented Cuba as being a colored country. Cuba has 66 per cent white population; Mississippi has less than 50 per cent. I suppose he would deny Mississippi a right——

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; for a question.

Mr. REED. For a correction.

Mr. WILLIAMS. For a question or a correction; yes.

Mr. REED. If the Senator had read what I said, he would know that I frankly stated in my speech the percentage of both races in Cuba.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator quoted a lot of things from the Encyclopedia Brittanica—came very near republishing it—and I presume he quoted that; it appears in the Encyclopedia Brittanica at any rate; but when he was making his general remarks I do not remember his mentioning it. However, he may have done so.

Mr. REED. It is there clearly and explicitly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; it amounts to a quotation from the Encyclopedia Brittanica.

Mr. REED. Not as a quotation, but as my own comment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That may be so.

Mr. REED. That is all I want to say to the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And did the Senator notice the fact that Mississippi, South Carolina, and Louisiana have a less percentage of white population than Cuba? I do not think he did.

Mr. REED. No; I do not know that I did.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The truth is that Mississippi, Louisiana, and South Carolina are parts of a white man's country, and whether they accidentally or incidentally have a numerical majority of Negroes makes no difference. The truth is that California is a white man's country, and however much the Chinese and Japanese may give her trouble she proposes to remain a white man's country, as a part of a white man's country. The Senator knew all that.

The Senator knew another thing. He knew that not a single move could be taken that would affect the interests of the United States of America in the league of peace, or in the council of the league, except upon a few unimportant matters of parliamentary and administrative procedure, without a unanimous vote. He knew that. He knew that we had an eternal veto upon the entire proceedings.

He knew another thing. He knew that, even if the league of nations had not given us a veto, our vote—great, popular, strong, and military as we are—would have constituted a veto.

He knew another thing. He knew that while Great Britain, Canada, Australia, and South Africa were represented they were not represented as parts of the British Kingdom, but as parts of the self-governing British Empire; and he knew, as well as I know and as well as you know, that in a very great number of questions affecting the United States of America Canada and Australia would vote against Great Britain, and have voted against her hitherto.

He knew, as I know and you know, that when it comes to the question of admission of Hindoos and Japanese and Chinese, Canada and Australia have blocked the wheels of parliamentary legislation in Great Britain, and that Great Britain has recognized the substantial nationality of all of the self-governing English-speaking provinces of Great Britain. He knew, as I know, that Canada and Australia and South Africa have asserted the right in connection with the foreign relations of the British Empire not to go into a war in which Great Britain was involved unless their own parliaments so decided. If he did not know that, he is lamentably ignorant.

Then he dwelt—I do not know how long—upon admitting Cuba and admitting Nicaragua and admitting a couple of other South American States. He seems to be ignorant of the fact that, for fear lest Great Britain had too much advantage in connection with the separate and independent votes of Canada, New Zealand, Australia, and South Africa—frequently differing with her—it was thought well to put in a lot of our American dependencies that we could control.

Now, Mr. President, I ask to insert as a part of my remarks an editorial from some paper—I have forgotten which, but I believe the New York World, although I do not remember exactly—headed "Politics and the covenant."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

The editorial referred to is as follows:

POLITICS AND THE COVENANT.

In discussing the ratification of the peace treaty Tuesday we said that "it is unthinkable that it should be considered in any other than the broadest and most unbiased spirit of patriotism and humanity. No personal or partisan feeling should be permitted to affect the judgment in any way whatsoever." We were speaking of the whole treaty, but we think it no less important that the provisions for a league of nations be considered with the same largeness. This paper has long maintained that this is not a partisan question, and any attempt to make it a partisan question would be disastrous as well as essentially wrong. It would be wrong because it is a great forward movement for America and for all mankind. It would be wrong because it is the goal toward which American principle, American diplomacy, and American influence upon international relations have been trending ever since the Jay treaty was signed by George Washington in 1794. America, more than all other nations put together, has been developing the principle and extending the practice of international arbitration through more than a century, and the league of nations is but the consequence, the some time inevitable consequence, of American history; it is but the organization of the world for the general and complete application of the principle and policy that America individually has continuously and persistently advocated and applied. The league of nations is essentially an American ideal realized through the pressure of a universal calamity that has convinced all peoples of the necessity of international cooperation for the preservation of peace.

To attempt to block such a movement for partisan reasons is profoundly wrong, we repeat. And it would be disastrous to the party, for it has back of it a public opinion so vast and so earnest, so determined that the experience of the last four years shall not be repeated if it is humanly possible to prevent it, that any such attempt would be utterly futile. The civilized world supports it, demands it; the people of the United States demand it. It is entirely too great a matter to be an issue in party politics. The personalities of the moment, without exception, are but incidental to it. The prejudices of the moment will soon be forgotten. We stand before the door of a new era. What would America say, what would the world say, what would the future say, if with this great opportunity we refused to enter because of personal dislike or of partisan prejudice? It is not a question of supporting or opposing Wilson; it is a question of fulfilling the manifest destiny of America as the leader of mankind in its struggle for freedom and progress.

But aside from all this, it is not a party question because it is peculiarly a nonpartisan development of American principles. It is the result, as we have said, of a century of growing experience to which successive administrations have contributed without regard to party. And it has been given concrete form in the forge of war through the influence of men, Republicans and Democrats, who were united for this end, not as partisans but as Americans who realized the necessity and the opportunity. Of the 120 men who formed the provisional committee that called the national conference for the creation of a League to Enforce Peace in 1915, men who represented the entire country, men of great eminence as statesmen, educators, clergymen, lawyers, editors, and business men, the majority were Republicans. Out of that memorable conference in Independence Hall at Philadelphia, on June 17, 1915, grew the present covenant of the league of nations. There was organized and inaugurated the great movement which aroused the earnest thought and purpose first of America and then of England. They were not politicians who met at Independence Hall, although many of them had held, or were then holding, high office in their respective parties. They were broad-minded, patriotic citizens who sought to extend established American principles to the whole world and thereby to prevent, if possible, the repetition of such a calamity as that which was appalling civilization. Republicans and Democrats, though a majority were Republicans, worked together to advance this cause. The movement had been advancing a year before President Wilson began to give expression to his interest. He did not originate the idea, nor has he ever claimed to have done so. But he saw in it, as others had seen, the remedy for the great affliction, and he began to use the powers of his high office to press it upon the attention of the Governments. And no one objected. Through the three and a half years that intervened between June, 1915, and the armistice in November, 1918, while this movement was constantly growing in power, while the President was urging it on every occasion, not a voice was raised against it. Upon what basis of right can there be any partisan movement against it at this late hour? It should be considered wholly and absolutely on its merits, both by Republicans and by Democrats, not as a Wilson document but as an American document, and, through America, a world document, upon which the nations hope to found a higher and better civilization. It is not perfect. No one claims that it is. But it is a great beginning, and it should be altered only in the light of a world experience still to come.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the leader of the majority faction of the Republican majority, "ariz in his place," to quote the language of Private John Allen, here two or three weeks or months ago during the closing days of the last session to make, as John Allen said, "a few onnecessary remarks" about the fact that there was no mention of the Monroe doctrine in the covenant for the preservation of peace amongst the nations of the earth. He grew eloquent—I take that back; the Senator from Massachusetts never was eloquent for a minute in his life—but he grew rabid; he grew metaphysical; he grew strident; he grew very earnest, and denounced the treaty because there was no mention in it of the Monroe doctrine. I am violating no confidence when I say that he was present, as I was, at a meeting at the White House, because the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] brought it nearly all out some time ago. When the President was asked why there was no mention of the Monroe doctrine in the covenant of the league of peace, he responded in substance—although I am not even pretending to quote his exact language—that he supposed that there could be mention of it were it thought desirable, but that he had not thought it necessary; that the league did not refer to any mere "policies," just as it did not refer to any mere "domestic" questions. That was about what he said, was it not, I will ask the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It was.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But at any rate the Senator from Massachusetts came in a few days and literally made the air blue with apprehension as to what was going to happen to us when Europe got hold of the Monroe doctrine, on the ground that it was not mentioned in the treaty.

Some time after that I went home to Mississippi. I went out on the plantation, culled my flowers, attended to my vegetables, played with my grandchildren, and made but one speech. Meanwhile, between those events, the President of the United States secured a recognition of the Monroe doctrine in haec verba in the treaty of peace. In making that speech I said: The Senator from Massachusetts made all of this trouble about that, and in his discussion with the president of Harvard, Mr. Lowell, one of his chief objections was that there was no exclusion of the Monroe doctrine from the operations of the league of nations. Then I offered to bet $5 to two doughnuts that the fact that the President had brought it within the provisions of the league of nations and expressly excluded it would make no difference with the Senator from Massachusetts. That was not gambling; that was betting on a certainty, because I knew the Senator from Massachusetts, and I knew that he woke up every morning, as some newspaper said, with the idea of reading the morning news, and when he found out which side of a new phase Wilson was on he took the other side, to make the most political capital out of it that he could.

Do you know, that is one of the queer effects of Republican leadership. The Senator from Massachusetts was not always that way. He used to say that "politics stopped at the coast," and "never went any further"; but the minute he was made political leader over there his objection to the exclusion of the mention of the Monroe doctrine increased to virulence when he was faced with the inclusion of it.

So he made not an eloquent speech, because the Senator from Massachusetts has no imagination; he has only a reasoning capacity, and a very highly respectable reasoning capacity, and a very highly respectable historical information, which enables him to make a very clear statement of something, but he can not put any heart and soul into it, because he has no Celtic imagination. He has pure Anglo-Saxon, Teutonic, exhaustive, and exhausting methods. But he comes back to the Senate later on and he gives the President Cain because he has put the Monroe doctrine into the league of nations.

The President came back to us the other time at the White House, and said to us: "In recognizing the principles of the league of nations I have secured the application of the Monroe doctrine to the entire world." That was not sufficient for the Senator from Massachusetts, so he quarreled with him. Now he comes back with the Monroe doctrine expressly excluded, and the Senator almost swells himself up—if he had been a poser and an actor he would have swelled himself up, but to do him justice he is never either; just a plain, ordinary man of good scholarly and historical ability, with plain, good common sense, and a very wary, cool-headed, and adroit politician—but he came in here, "swelling himself up" as nearly as he could, and he said: "The Monroe doctrine is not a regional question. It is a question that no country in the world is entitled to decide or pass on, or interpret, or perhaps even mention, except ourselves." Well, if that be true, why did he quarrel about not putting it in the first draft of the league of nations? That was my view. That is my view yet. It ought never to have been mentioned. The very nature of it and the nature of the proposed league and our past utterances all excluded it.

He makes fun of the phrase "a regional question." Well, it is "regional," and not less regional because it is ours and Great Britain's utterance, nor any the less "regional" because it includes and applies to a whole continent. This continent after all is not all of the earth, but only a part or a "region" of it, nor have we ever contended that the Monroe doctrine applies outside of this continent—this hemisphere.

Why did he quarrel about the nonmention of it at first? Simply because Wilson was President and a Democrat. Why does he quarrel now when it is mentioned? Simply because Wilson is President and is a Democrat.

"Politics stops at the seacoast." Does it? Is the Senator from Massachusetts illustrating that principle right now? Can you find a single thing that the President of the United States can do that he will approve of? I defy you. Of course, while the war was going on he was like all others, simply an American. We wanted to be. Those few people in the United States who did not want to be had to be; but he wanted to be. It was like his vote upon the Irish resolution the other day. Do any of you believe that that ingenious explanation of his was anything but disingenuous? Can you imagine that all the Cabots and all the Lodges in years past have not hated the Irish, and that the Irish have not hated them, principally because the Irish were Democrats? Do you imagine that the Senator from Massachusetts has any less sympathy for the people of Ulster—Protestants and English and Scotch—than I have? Do you imagine that he loves the Celtic Irish any better than I? Half my friends are Irish.

Now I come to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. He is of a different type. He does not pretend to be a Brahmin. He would acknowledge himself not quite a paragon but an ordinary, common citizen. He would not base his right to express public opinion either upon his scholarship or upon his pedigree.

Take him all around, I love him; I think he is one of the most lovable fellows I have ever met. Take him all around, he is sincere and honest, too; and he is sincere in the position he has taken in this matter, and honest about it, only he is wrong. The only trouble is that he is a Prussian "junker" at heart and does not know it—let us say, rather, an American "junker."

I do not mean by that that he sympathized with the Germans in the war. I do not mean by that that the Germans could have gotten any more help from him than from me—not a particle; but his idea of State sovereignty is exactly the same as that of Bismarck and as that of Kaiser Wilhelm and as that of the Prussian junkers. His position is that there must be no limitation upon the sovereignty of a country, its independent sovereignty. He nods his head in approval. I knew he was honest, and I knew I was honest, and I knew that I could not misrepresent him.

Now, what was the whole Prussian State sovereignty idea? It was that a State had a right to do whatever a State chose to do, and that there could be no limitation and ought not to be any limitation upon the sovereignty and the power and the might of the State except its inability to physically execute its decrees. Is not that right? I ask the Senator from Idaho, is not that a correct statement of the Prussian position so far as he understands it?

Mr. BORAH. I rather think that is correct. It is also George Washington's view.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Ah! Now the Senator is trying to bring in poor old George as an ally of the Prussian junker. [Laughter.] George is dead, and he can not deny it; but if George were alive he would deny it every minute of his life, because George was so diffident as to the sovereign rights of a country that he executed the Jay treaty, and the people in that day contended that that was a surrender of the rights of Congress and of the sovereignty of the United States. But let that pass.

The Senator confesses that the position which I have attributed to him and which I have attributed to the Prussian junkers is not only his position but he contends that it was George Washington's position. Mr. President, no country ever entered into a treaty with the smallest other country in the world without surrendering or limiting the exercise of a part of its sovereignty.

What is sovereignty as defined in international law? It is the unlimited power of a State to direct its own destiny in its own pathway, according to its own will. When we entered into an agreement with Mexico that we might pursue bandits and marauders across the Rio Grande into Mexico and capture them, Mexico surrendered or limited a part of her sovereignty; and when we agreed that Mexican troops might pursue bandits into our territory we surrendered or limited a part of our sovereignty, and in each case an essential of sovereignty. Under the international definition of sovereignty, when I make an agreement with myself or with a friend not to smoke a cigar for a week I surrender a part of my individual sovereignty; but in a real sense whenever a man or a nation agrees not to do a thing it is as high an assertion of national or of independent sovereignty as leaving itself or himself free to do the thing. The agreement has its initiative in self-limitation, the highest form of self-assertion or sovereignty or free will. To agree to keep the peace of the world under the dictates of Jesus Christ, the Prince of Peace, to agree to recognize as best you can the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, and try to settle differences by arbitration and by peaceful solution rather than by mitrailleuses and chassepots and Springfield rifles is to that extent, of course, a surrender of the sovereignty or a limitation upon the sovereignty of each country that agrees to the arrangement—an agreement to agree without resort to throat cutting or poison gas. If I had a dispute with the Senator from Utah to-day about a land title and we agreed to leave it to a court of justice instead of fighting it out upon the public highway, it would be a surrender of his original right and my original right to do as each one of us saw fit.

Ah, but gentlemen tell me that in the course of time it may appear that under the covenant of peace the United States might be forced to do something that it did not want to do.

Under the judgment of the justice of the peace or of the court, I or the Senator from Utah might be forced to do something that he or I did not want to do; but the world has agreed that in the settlement of individual controversies it is better to run the risk of the court's making a mistake than it is to leave men to cut one another's throats, and the settlement of individual controversies is of less importance than the solution of national and international questions by arbitration; because if the Senator from Utah and I agree to cut one another's throats it does not affect anybody but the Senator from Utah and me and our wives and our children; but when two nations go in to cut one another's throats it cuts the throats of all, everybody—the people that did not want it as well as the people that did want it—the women and the children and the nuns and the priests and the preachers and the lawyers and the beggars upon the streets, and everybody in the world.

I can not understand the lack of imagination in a man. I can not understand the lack of vision of a man, who wants to go back to 1913. Victor Berger, or whatever his name is, who was elected as a Socialist from the Milwaukee district, told the public that it was a lie that we went to war "to make the world safe for democracy." Maybe he is right. Some things that have been going on in Paris here lately rather make me think that maybe he is. Instead of meeting there with common accord to secure the peace of the world, instead of thinking about the men and the women and the children and the churches and the schools and the highways and the public buildings and all of the accumulations of civilization that peace has built up, men came there quarrelling about Fiume and came there quarrelling about a few islands upon the Adriatic coast, and about some coal fields in the Saar district, and about what should be the proper boundaries between Poland and Czechoslovakia, when every one of them has gotten more out of the war than they ever hoped to get since the day they were born.

Do you know, fellow Senators, I sometimes think that if I had been Wilson, at Paris, the time would have been reached several times when I would have said: "I came here in the name of the American people, in the name of their traditions, and in the name of their ideals and of a common humanity, to help make a better world. You are narrow and provincial and selfish, and you are seeking money and you are seeking territory. You are going back to the Borah-Prussian-junker doctrine of unlimited sovereignty, and the right upon the part of Italy to stand out against the world for a little thing like Fiume, upon the part of France to stand out against the world for a little thing like the amount of reparation, the attempted assertion for a little while of the right of Poland to take not only access to the sea but government and control of it. I am tired. I am going back to America, and Europe can settle her infernal selfish difficulties as she blank pleases. If there is any country in the world that can stand by itself in its wealth, in its size, in its resources, in its capacity to put armed men in the Army and the Navy, it is my country. We are pretty far off from you. Go to the dickens with your European affairs. I am going to join BORAH and the Prussian junkers and contend for unlimited American sovereignty and preparation for universal war—universal preparation for war during peace times."

Do you want to go back to 1913? You can not go back to it the way you were at that time. If you do not secure a covenant for peace amongst the civilized nations of the world, if you do not secure a measure of disarmanent, if you do not secure some means whereby you can settle by arbitration international differences of every sort, then still, notwithstanding it all, the old time of American isolation has passed, and you and I must prepare the best army and the best navy on this globe. Are you willing to do it?

I have heard a lot of talk about preparation for war and all that, and a lot of criticism of the fact that the English and we were unready. We were the great unready nation, but we were unready of a set purpose. We thought it was better to strain every muscle and every nerve and every thought and every soul sentiment of the people to meet a great emergency when the emergency came than it was to keep prepared, by countless and incalculable burdens upon the people, during all the time when the emergency was not present. We were wise. The war has proven that we were wise. The English-speaking race to-day dominates—not by its navy, not by its military force, but by its common sense and its statesmanship and its commercialism and its literature this entire world; and to what does it owe it? It owes it to the fact that Great Britain was an island and we were an island continent, and that during peace times, at any rate, we could leave the industries of the people unburdened and untrammeled. Schoolhouses went up, cathedrals and churches, highways, philanthropic associations, everything in the world that sums up civilization.

What is civilization? It is the massing together at a given time of the accumulations of the past. How does a man differ from the brutes of the field? Simply by the fact that from one generation to another he can accumulate. The cat and the dog and the tiger and the lion start where their forefathers started. We start upon the shoulders of our forefathers; and all that accumulation, from generation to generation, spells civilization. Man is the only monument-building creature, because he is the only one that considers the past. He is the only creature that dreams of the future and "has visions," because he is the only one that thinks of the future to any great extent. And here step in the Prussian and American junkers, including my good, dear friend from Idaho, and they tell us, "Do not, above all things in the world, let there be even a suspicion of the limitation of your sovereignty," as if a voluntary limitation were any less an act of sovereignty than the failure to make a limitation.

What is the difference between a savage and a civilized man? One puts limitations upon his individual sovereignty, and the other does not. What is the difference between a civilized nation and a savage or barbarous nation like Turkey? One puts limitations—whether by unwritten law, as in Great Britain, or by written law, as here—upon its free action and the other does not; and of all the men who have stood in this Chamber, in eloquent words and in eloquent thought approving and applauding the idea of putting a self-limit upon the operation of National Government, the Senator from Idaho stands at the front. The Constitution of the United States is nothing but the people's self-limitation upon their dual agencies of Government.

I listened to him the other day when he was defending the Constitution, and went over to him after it was over and said: "BORAH, old fellow, you have made mighty near a good old-fashioned Democratic speech." He has stood all the time for a self-limited Government, constitutionally limited by the people, who are the ultimate sovereigns, in the interest of the people whose future is at stake; and yet, when it comes to international affairs, he wants the United States left free to do whatever in the dickens it pleases; and he now nods his head at me in approval of that. That is all the German junker wanted. He wanted Germany left free to do whatever in the dickens it pleased. That is all that Turkey wanted, and that is all that Alexander the Great wanted, and that is all that Nero wanted, and that is all that any savage ever wanted since the world began—just to be left free to do whatever in the dickens he pleased. So the Senator is advocating the cause of a savage and a barbarous and a Nero-like Government, a Turkish and a Prussian Government transferred to the United States. He wants a people who, of their own free will, limit their power of operation within their own territory, expressing that voice in the Constitution as a limitation upon executive, judiciary, and legislative, to be still left free, outside of its borders, to do whatever it pleases, without any limitation.

Now, my friends, there are limitations which civilized men can not ignore, outside of treaties. The Senator from Idaho, if he had been a German, I suppose, even with his ideas of unlimited sovereignty, never would have agreed that Germany should invade Belgium and march over her prostrate body in order to be able to take France in the flank; but in order that he may measure up to his full ideals and his full notions he ought to have thought that, because it was a part of the rights of Germany as a full, unlimited sovereignty, and a full, unlimited sovereignty is bound by nothing except its own measure of its own will and power. Yet the Senator from Idaho must confess that even a full, unlimited sovereignty is bound by some ideas of ethics and right.

He will agree to that, I know; so he will agree to at least that self-limitation upon government that a nation should never do wrong just because it has might. The Senator agrees to that, does he not? I thought so; he bows in acquiescence. I knew it. The minute he bows in acquiescence to that he bows in acquiescence to the idea that a nation ought to limit its sovereignty in the cause of right as against its power or might. Then his whole argument sinks to the ground, and the whole Prussian junker argument sinks to the ground. If we be bound as a nation by certain laws of ethics which are recognized, then we can be more sacredly bound by putting those laws of ethics, voluntarily and beforehand, in writing in the shape of a treaty, or world treaty or league.

Mr. President, I have not talked much about this business, because I wanted to wait until we had it before us in the proper way, and I am not talking about the details of the treaty yet, because I want to wait.

There are two classes of people in the world, and however unworthy I may be—and I know my own unworthiness better than anybody else except God—I belong to one of them. I do not belong to the class of legalists who can see nothing in the present and hope for nothing in the future except as based upon a precedent in the past. I belong to that class of men who dream, and who are not ashamed of dreaming; who dream of a better world and want it, and, in so far as they are worthy to pray to God at all, pray to Him for it, a world where not only individual men shall govern themselves, though in my own case I may have failed, but where communities shall govern themselves, and where nations shall govern themselves, and where, above all things in the world, humanity all over the world shall govern itself by common concert of action and common accord between nations in behalf of the right and justice and peace.

As some of you know, I have quoted frequently the words of Thomas Jefferson, "My passion is peace." But, my friends, it never was peace against might; it never was peace against the assertion upon the part of any man or any nation, not even the United States, to control its own destiny as it pleased, regardless of the destiny and the welfare and the peace and the happiness of the world. If right acknowledge might and lie down before, then there is nothing left but might, not even God's might, but brute's might.

Oh, you tell me, now, then, if this peace goes into effect the United States might be forced to do something it does not want to do. It has, in the first place, a veto power, and if the public opinion of the world became so powerful that that veto power did not count, then the United States ought to be made to do what common humanity and common sense and the interests of the world demand. That time will never come. There is no fear of it. I have no fear at all of the world running up against the United States.

Oh, you tell me the United States has only one vote. Yes; Mississippi has only two votes in this body. Somebody might say for that reason Mississippi would be forever barred; but if Mississippi has any sense at all she will find some representatives from other States who agree with her every now and then, and whenever she is right she will find a majority in most cases.

We first have in the council the veto power, and, in the next place, if we did not have it we have the decently expressed opinion of decent people of the world on our side when right. What does the Senator want? Is he going back to old-time days when we talked about "a manifest destiny"? I think he is. A manifest destiny to spread ourselves all over Central and South America? I do not know. But I never found any destiny in the world which was manifest except this:

Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he reap.

If you sow the seeds of might and power and empire and unlimited sovereignty, the chances are that you will reap a harvest of that sort raised on some other people's field, not on your own; and if you sow seeds of accord, harmony, peace, self-limitation, then of those seeds some day you will reap the harvest, not only on other people's fields but upon your own. It is an awfully nice thing to reap the harvest that you planted, and it is the only destiny that I know of that is both good and manifest.

How long are you going to take to subject Central and South America to North American destinies? A great deal depends upon the answer to that question. Within 200 years from now the majority of the Western Hemisphere will be Spanish and Portugese speaking people. What do you want to do with them? Do you want to be left free to do whatever you please with them? I do not know that that is in the Senator's thought at all, I hope it is not; but I do know it has been in the thought of a great many people.

Mr. President, I wish that I had the gift of tongues; I wish that I had the persuasive voice of Thomas Jefferson; I wish that I had the calm, cool impressive voice of the President of the United States. I have not either. All I can say is that I spew out, as far as I am concerned, the idea that this Government representing these United States desires to reserve to itself any power whatsoever to execute the cause of might against the cause of right. It may be replied that the American people never would want to do it. I do not think they would myself, but if the reply be right, then the counter reply comes in: "Then if they never want to do it why reserve the so-called right?"—in other words, why not voluntarily limit our might?

There are men opposed to this league who pretend they are opposed to it because of special provisions in it which they want amended. The Senator from Massachusetts is one of those. Most of the provisions he wanted amended were amended according to his ideas, but he is opposing it yet. Then there are men honest and steadfast in their ways, like the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], who are opposed to all covenants, to all leagues of peace.

Their honesty I can fully recognize, their intellectual integrity I rather admire, but their wisdom I can not perceive, because if they be right with regard to nations in international affairs the same principle would be right as regards individual affairs and as regards affairs between States in the American Union. How can a man stand opposed to all possible covenants of peace except upon one ground, and that is that he believes a covenant would more nearly lead to war than it would to peace itself? The Senator has expressed that view, I think.

But how can a thing constructed for the purpose of keeping peace have a tendency to produce discord? If he and I entered into an agreement to leave all future disputes to arbitrators, would he contend with me that that would be a cause of dispute between him and me greater than we could have had without the agreement? It might not always keep the peace between us if either of us lost our temper extremely, but it at least would have the tendency of keeping the peace.

Mr. President, when you think of the men who have died upon the battle fields with their eyes unclosed, glaring and fleering at the sunlight and the moonlight, arms torn and gone, legs twisted and torn, gassed and yet living; when you think of the women at home mourning for them, when you think of the children left fatherless and without much of a mother's care, because the mother is disheartened and can not give them the old care, is there anything in the world even promising some relief from that sort of thing that you and I are not prepared to embrace if we can?

I thank God that my boys came back without a scratch, I thank God that they did their duty, and I thank God that we are not amongst the number of those who are mourning. But all the same I know those who are mourning.

There is nothing in the world more pathetic, there is nothing more tragic, there is nothing more insane and idiotic—and I use the words advisedly—than war. There never was a just war on both sides since the world began. Somebody was wrong somewhere. All we ask is that there shall be some impartial tribunal to determine who is wrong and to enforce the decent opinion of the world upon the wrongdoer. The Senator steps in the arena and talks about "the sovereignty of this Nation." Who gave this Government sovereignty? The people. Who decided to divide the sovereignty between our dual sets of government? The people. How did they do it? Through the voice of the Constitution. What was the voice of the Constitution? Self-limitation upon the sovereignty of the States and the sovereignty of individuals. Self-limitation, not outside limitation. That is all a treaty, or a world treaty, or league is. And yet when the State of Mississippi has a suit with the State of Idaho it becomes outside limitation in a certain sense by the decision of the Supreme Court. But was it the surrender of any essential right of sovereignty upon the part of either? No. Why not? Because each consented to it, each agreed to it. In other words, because the so-called limitation of sovereignty was an assertion in the highest degree of sovereignty.

Mr. President, I reckon I have talked enough.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I move to lay upon the table the motion of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] to reconsider the motion by which the Senate voted to print the treaty.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The unfinished business is before the Senate, I believe.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understood there was a motion made to reconsider the vote.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; that motion is not pending at the present time.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If it is not pending, I still have the floor, and I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I move that we take up for consideration the motion of the Senator from Idaho to print the treaty. That is the matter which was before the Senate, I understand, when the unfinished business came up.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Beckham	Harris	Moses	Simmons
Borah	Harrison	Nelson	Smith, Ariz.
Brandegee	Hitchcock	New	Smith, Md.
Capper	Johnson, Calif.	Newberry	Smoot
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Spencer
Cummins	Kellogg	Nugent	Stanley
Dial	Kendrick	Overman	Sterling
Dillingham	Kenyon	Page	Sutherland
Edge	Keyes	Phelan	Swanson
Elkins	King	Phipps	Thomas
Fall	Kirby	Pittman	Trammell
Fernald	Knox	Poindexter	Wadsworth
Fletcher	Lodge	Pomerene	Walsh, Mass.
France	McCumber	Ransdell	Walsh, Mont.
Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Reed	Warren
Hale	McLean	Robinson	Watson
Harding	McNary	Sheppard	Williams

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-eight Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. BORAH. I have the floor. I was in possession of the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The last business was the calling of the roll. No one had the floor.

Mr. BORAH. I do not understand that a roll call takes a Senator from the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Idaho did not even yield to the Senator from Nebraska. The Senator from Nebraska rose upon the floor of the Senate and suggested the absence of a quorum. He did not even address the Chair. I make the point of order that the Senator from Idaho has the floor.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not want to have any controversy about it. If the Senator from Idaho desires the floor, I am very glad to yield to him.

Mr. BORAH. I feel that in all fairness and as I understand the rules I had the floor.

Mr. McKELLAR. Perhaps that is so. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the able Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] stated that his principal objection to the publication of this document is its lack of authenticity, that no one can know definitely whether it is the treaty or not. I feel that an examination of this copy of the treaty will convince the Senate that it is authentic, and I know of no way by which to bring its terms and its conditions and its authenticity before the Senate except to read the document. No Senator will doubt its authenticity if he will follow me.

After reading for several minutes Mr. BORAH was interrupted by Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I desire to raise a point of order against the reading of this document.

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator permit me to complete the sentence I was reading?

Mr. SWANSON. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALSH of Montana in the chair). The Senator from Virginia will state his point of order.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator said he would wait until I finish reading the sentence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order having been raised, the Senator from Virginia will state his point of order.

Mr. SWANSON. Under Rule XXXVI, section 3, which reads:

All confidential communications made by the President of the United States to the Senate shall be by the Senators and the officers of the Senate kept secret; and all treaties which may be laid before the Senate, and all remarks, votes, and proceedings thereon, shall also be kept secret until the Senate shall by their resolution take off the injunction of secrecy, or unless the same shall be considered in open executive session.

The Senator states that this is a treaty. So it is required by the rule that it shall be laid before the Senate——

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator accept the fact that it is a treaty?

Mr. SWANSON. I can not accept it; but the Senator states on his authority, whatever it is, that he is about to lay it before the Senate as a treaty, and under the rule to which I have referred it can only be considered in open session by a vote of the Senate. I think the Senator is evidently violating clearly a rule of the Senate. I submit for the consideration of the Chair Rule XXXVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, page 41 of the Senate Manual.

Mr. BORAH. This is not a confidential communication—far from it.

Mr. SWANSON. This rule says: "And all treaties which may be laid before the Senate."

The Senator says he lays before the Senate a treaty.

Mr. BORAH. I do not contend that I am laying before the Senate a treaty. I contend I am laying before the Senate a treaty which has been proposed to the German Government. It is not a treaty; neither has it been communicated to the Senate under that rule by the President.

Mr. SWANSON. The rule refers to any treaty laid before the Senate by anyone. It does not say "by the President" or any remarks thereon. I know the Senator does not want to violate a rule of the Senate unless the Senate gives him authority to do so.

Mr. BORAH. I will merely say that this treaty is going to the public. There is no mistake about that. It will be there to-morrow morning. I await the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair before ruling would like to have from the Senator from Idaho an expression of his view concerning the language of the rule.

Mr. BORAH. I understand the objection is based upon paragraph 3 of Rule XXXVI, which reads as follows:

3. All confidential communications made by the President of the United States to the Senate shall be by the Senators and the officers of the Senate kept secret—

I do not understand, I do not believe that this comes under that provision. This is not a communication made by the President.

Mr. SWANSON. It is not claimed that it comes under that provision.

Mr. BORAH. It continues:

and all treaties which may be laid before the Senate, and all remarks, votes, and proceedings thereon shall also be kept secret, until the Senate shall, by their resolution, take off the injunction of secrecy, or unless the same shall be considered in open executive session.

Mr. President, I do not contend that this instrument which I am presenting to the Senate is a signed treaty which has been transmitted to the Senate by anyone. I claim that it is a copy of the proposed treaty which has been submitted to the German Government, but which has not yet been signed either by the German Government or by anyone else so as to constitute in any sense a treaty as referred to in the rule. I am willing to take the Chair's ruling.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to suggest to the Chair, in addition to what the Senator from Idaho has said, that this identical document which the Senator is reading was by vote of the Senate this very day ordered to be printed in the RECORD; so there can not be any such thing as an injunction of secrecy now imposed on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the vote heretofore taken would not be persuasive upon this question, and, moreover, that vote has been rendered nugatory; at least its effect has been suspended by the pendency of the motion to reconsider. Will the Senator from Idaho give a little more enlightenment on the subject of subdivision 3 of the rule, which reads:

All confidential communications made by the President of the United States to the Senate shall be by the Senators and the officers of the Senate kept secret.

That obviously refers to communications submitted by the President. This is not such a communication. Now, however, the rule begins to relate to something else which comes before the Senate in some other way than by being submitted by the President. Obviously the President might submit a treaty in accordance with the first paragraph of the subdivision; but he has not done so. It is quite apparently contemplated, therefore, that a treaty may come before the Senate in some way other than by being submitted by the President.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, this is not a treaty; it has not been executed. It has been said upon the floor this morning by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], who I presume is as familiar as anyone with the situation, that there have been changes made in the treaty; so that this particular document never will be the treaty which will be before the Senate. I am not contending that it is the treaty which will ultimately come before the Senate for ratification by the Senate. What I am contending is that it is the document which was proposed by the Versailles conference to the German Government. Whether or not it will ever be a treaty is a wholly different proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. So the Chair understands the Senator from Idaho to contend that the document in question does not fall under the provision of this rule, because it is not a treaty as the word "treaty" is used in the rule?

Mr. BORAH. That is my contention.

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator from Idaho yield to me a moment?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. FALL. Would it come under the rule as a treaty otherwise laid before the Senate? The rule, of course, contemplates the submission first of the treaty to the Senate, and provides for secrecy. Then it speaks of the laying of the treaty before the Senate and provides for secrecy. That means, of course, that when a committee has reported back the treaty and it goes on the calendar, it shall not be laid before the Senate in the open public session of the Senate unless the Senate so orders. It does not apply to a state of affairs such as this.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair inquire further of the Senator from Idaho if that is the case, is it not equally so that no document is really a treaty until after it receives the approval of the Senate? Is it not only then that it becomes a treaty?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, this it not a treaty, as I contend, at all; for it has not been approved by the German people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is what the Chair desires to know from the Senator. When, in the opinion of the Senator, does a document really become a treaty?

Mr. BORAH. Under this rule, I should say it becomes a treaty whenever the President—the executive department—has completed his or their portion of the negotiation of the treaty and sends it here. Then it is a treaty under the rule of the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BORAH. Yes. When the document has been signed by the Executive and sent here, it is a treaty under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then, if the contention of the Senator is correct, why the necessity of the second subdivision of the paragraph of the rule? Such a treaty would come within the first part of the paragraph, which reads:

All confidential communications made by the President of the United States to the Senate shall be by the Senators and the officers of the Senate kept secret.

Such a treaty as the Senator suggests comes directly within that paragraph, and all the rest of it would be surplusage.

Mr. BORAH. No. There may be many confidential communications which are not treaties, and the first clause of the rule refers to any confidential communication which may be sent by the President, it may be about something else.

Mr. SWANSON. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. BORAH. In just a moment. Then the rule provides:

And all treaties which may be laid before the Senate—

That contemplates, in the first place, a treaty, and, in the second place, after it has been laid before the Senate, presumably by authorities authorized to lay it before the Senate——

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, it seems to me exactly the reverse. If the Senator reads the first clause of Rule XXXVII, he will find it provides:

When a treaty shall be laid before the Senate for ratification, it shall be read a first time.

And so forth. Consequently the rule seems to contemplate two kinds of treaties, one made by the President for ratification and the other which comes here as this one comes here. You can not publish the treaty until you have the secrecy removed.

Mr. BORAH. But this is not a treaty at all, in the sense in which the rule speaks of a treaty. It is simply a document which was proposed to the German people, and which will now never become a treaty until it has been signed or accepted by the German people. It may be changed in the most radical particulars prior to that time; indeed, we know that there have been some changes if the press dispatches be correct. So it is not a treaty as the word is used in the rules of the Senate.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I only want to suggest that it is the well-understood rule of diplomatic procedure, and it is adopted and accepted by all of the countries of the world, that a document becomes a treaty the moment it is signed by the parties. It is only evidence of negotiations until that period. When it is signed it becomes a treaty—an existing treaty—between the two countries.

The next step is the exchange of ratifications, which is merely an office that is performed for the purpose of putting the treaty into force. The treaty exists; it is the agreement between the two countries, but it does not go into effect; it lies dormant until the ratifications are exchanged. It is for the purpose of obtaining our advice and consent to the ratification of the treaty that the Constitution requires that it be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the rule never contemplated the presentation in this form of such a document as is now tendered for the RECORD, and he overrules the point of order.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, before the Senator from Idaho proceeds, I desire to ask him if the document from which he is reading purports to be signed?

Mr. BORAH. No; it does not.

Mr. BORAH resumed the reading, and was interrupted by

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I call the attention of the Chair to Rule XI, which reads as follows:

When the reading of a paper is called for, and objected to, it shall be determined by a vote of the Senate without debate.

I object to the reading of this document, and I insist that Rule XI is applicable. It would be utterly futile to adopt a rule of that character if it only——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the point is to be determined without debate, I think.

Mr. BORAH. Permit me to say, however, that I understand that rule applies to matters which it is asked to have read by the Secretary.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I insist, Mr. President, that it does not apply to that alone, because, if it did, the rule would be an utterly futile one. A Senator asks that a paper be read from the desk; objection is made, and he reads it himself. The rule was intended——

Mr. LODGE. I make the point of order that the question must be determined without debate.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The rule was contemplated to apply to just such a case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will settle it. The question is, Shall the reading proceed?

Mr. WALSH of Montana, Mr. LODGE, and Mr. SMOOT called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as heretofore, I vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], and vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I should like to inquire if the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. STERLING. I have a pair with the Senator from South Carolina, and therefore withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WILLIAMS (after having voted in the negative). I failed to note that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], with whom I have a pair, is not present. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], and vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], which I have previously announced, to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], and vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], and vote "yea."

Mr. KING. I wish to announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] are detained from the Senate on public business.

Mr. HARRIS. My colleague, the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], is absent on account of a death in his family.

Mr. LODGE. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY]; and

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON].

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 24, as follows:

YEAS—42.

Borah	Frelinghuysen	McNary	Pomerene
Brandegee	Hale	Moses	Reed
Capper	Harding	Myers	Sherman
Chamberlain	Johnson, Calif.	Nelson	Smoot
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	New	Spencer
Dillingham	Kellogg	Newberry	Sutherland
Edge	Kenyon	Norris	Wadsworth
Elkins	Keyes	Overman	Warren
Fall	Knox	Page	Watson
Fernald	Lodge	Phipps
France	McLean	Poindexter

NAYS—24.

Beckham	Harrison	McKellar	Stanley
Culberson	Hitchcock	Nugent	Swanson
Dial	Jones, N. Mex.	Pittman	Underwood
Fletcher	Kendrick	Robinson	Walsh, Mass.
Gay	Kirby	Sheppard	Walsh, Mont.
Harris	McCumber	Simmons	Williams

NOT VOTING—30.

Ashurst	Gronna	Owen	Smith, S. C.
Ball	Henderson	Penrose	Sterling
Bankhead	Johnson, S. Dak.	Phelan	Thomas
Calder	King	Ransdell	Townsend
Colt	La Follette	Shields	Trammell
Curtis	Lenroot	Smith, Ariz.	Wolcott
Gerry	McCormick	Smith, Ga.
Gore	Martin	Smith, Md.

So the question was determined in the affirmative.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho will proceed.

Mr. BORAH resumed the reading of the treaty and was interrupted by

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. Under Rule XIX, section 1, it is provided:

> No Senator shall speak more than twice upon any one question in debate on the same day without the leave of the Senate, which shall be determined without debate.

I make the point of order that the Senator is now speaking for the second time.

Mr. SMOOT. He has a right to speak the second time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. PHELAN. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BORAH resumed the reading, and was interrupted by

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, without taking the Senator from the floor, I should like to make a request for unanimous consent, which I think will be agreeable to the Senator, if I may make that request without taking the Senator from the floor.

Mr. BORAH. Would that take me from the floor, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. If anybody raises the question, it will.

Mr. NELSON. I suppose I can state what my request will be without that being done.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. My request is that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that a direct vote be had upon the motion to reconsider the motion of the Senator from Idaho to print this document in the RECORD.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I should like to have that done, but I do not want to lose the floor, and if that unanimous-consent request is submitted and objected to, that will take me off the floor.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I think that can be accomplished by adding "and that the consideration of the application for unanimous consent shall not operate to deprive the Senator from Idaho of the floor."

Mr. BORAH. Very well.

Mr. NORRIS. Is that going to be done without debate?

Mr. NELSON. My request is that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that a vote be had without debate upon the motion to reconsider the motion of the Senator from Idaho to print this document in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, as far as I can speak for those here, I think that will be entirely satisfactory. We objected very seriously when the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] made a bona fide motion to reconsider, and a disposition was shown to lay that motion on the table. If we can have a direct vote on that question, we are willing to have it without any debate.

Mr. LODGE. Without debate?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Without debate.

Mr. BORAH. That is, that the vote shall be taken upon the motion of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] to reconsider?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; that is it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. As the Chair understands, the proposition is that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside; that by unanimous consent, and without debate the vote be taken upon the motion of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM.] to reconsider; and that such action will not lose the floor to the Senator from Idaho. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. NORRIS. I suggest the absence of a quorum, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that is in direct violation of the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. NORRIS. It is only done for the purpose of getting Senators here.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator calls for the yeas and nays, they will come in.

Mr. NORRIS. It will take just twice as long. However, I call for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The vote is being taken on the motion to reconsider?

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the motion to reconsider.

Mr. LODGE. Those against reconsideration will vote "nay," then.

The Secretary resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Because of my general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], who is not in his seat, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as before and vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] and vote "nay."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Georgia was called). The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] is detained from the Senate by death in his family.

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I announce that I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). In the absence of my pair, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], I withhold my vote.

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT]. In his absence, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HARDING (after having voted in the negative). I have already cast my vote in the negative before I was aware of the absence of the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Alabama to the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] and vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and vote "nay."

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand that the Senator from Vermont has transferred his pair to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE].

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then I am at liberty to vote, and I vote "yea."

Mr. KING. I desire to announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] are detained on public business.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON].

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 41, as follows:

YEAS—26.

Beckham	Hitchcock	Overman	Stanley
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Phelan	Swanson
Dial	Kendrick	Pittman	Trammell
Fletcher	King	Robinson	Walsh, Mont.
Gay	Kirby	Sheppard	Williams
Harris	McKellar	Simmons
Harrison	Nugent	Smith, Ariz.

NAYS—41.

Borah	Gronna	Lodge	Reed
Capper	Hale	McLean	Sherman
Chamberlain	Harding	McNary	Smoot
Cummins	Johnson, Calif.	Nelson	Spencer
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	New	Sutherland
Dillingham	Kellogg	Newberry	Wadsworth

NOT VOTING—29.

Ashurst	Gore	Owen	Thomas

Colt	Martin	Smith, Md.
Fernald	Moses	Smith, S. C.
Gerry	Myers	Sterling

So the motion to reconsider was rejected.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there are a number of maps in this proposed treaty, which I presume can not go in the RECORD. At least, I understand that the rule is that they can not, so I will not ask that the maps be printed in the RECORD. Later, I will see if we can have the proposed treaty printed as a Senate document with the maps.

The proposed treaty is as follows:

CONDITIONS OF PEACE

The United States of America, the British Empire, France, Italy and Japan,

These Powers being described in the present Treaty as the Principal Allied and Associated Powers,

Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, China, Cuba, Ecuador, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, the Hedjaz, Honduras, Liberia, Nicaragua, Panama, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Roumania, the Serb-Croat and Slovene State, Siam, Tchecko-Slovakia and Uruguay,

These Powers constituting with the Principal Powers mentioned above, the Allied and Associated Powers, of the one part;

And Germany.

of the other part;

Bearing in mind that on the request of the Imperial German Government an armistice was granted on November 11, 1918 to Germany by the Principal Allied and Associated Powers in order that a Treaty of Peace might be concluded with her, and

The Allied and Associated Powers being equally desirous that the war in which they were successively involved directly or indirectly and which originated in the declaration of war by Austria-Hungary on July 28, 1914 against Serbia, the declaration of war by Germany against Russia on August 1, 1914 and against France on August 3, 1914, and in the invasion of Belgium, should be replaced by a firm, just and durable peace.

For this purpose the High Contracting Parties represented as follows:

The President of the United States of America, by:

The Honourable Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States, acting in his own name and by his own proper authority;

The Honourable Robert Lansing, Secretary of State;

The Honourable Henry White, formerly Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States at Rome and Paris;

The Honourable Edward M. House;

General Tasker H. Bliss, Military Representative of the United States on the Supreme War Council;

His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British Dominions Beyond the Seas, Emperor of India, by:

The Right Honourable David Lloyd George, M. P., First Lord of His Treasury and Prime Minister;

The Right Honourable Andrew Bonar Law, M. P., His Lord Privy Seal;

The Right Honourable Viscount Milner, G. C. B., G. C. M. G., His Secretary of State for the Colonies;

The Right Honourable Arthur James Balfour, O. M., M. P., His Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs;

The Right Honourable George Nicoll Barnes, M. P., Minister without portfolio; for the Dominion of Canada, by:

The Right Honourable Sir Robert Laird Borden, G. C. M. G., Prime Minister;

The Right Honourable Sir George Eulas Foster, G. C. M. G., Minister of Trade and Commerce; for the Commonwealth of Australia, by:

The Right Honourable William Morris Hughes, Attorney General and Prime Minister;

The Right Honourable Sir Joseph Cook, G. C. M. G., Minister for the Navy; for the Union of South Africa, by:

General the Right Honourable Louis Botha, Prime Minister;

Lieutenant General the Right Honourable Jan Christiaan Smuts, K. C., Minister of Defence; for the Dominion of New Zealand, by:

The Right Honourable W. F. Massey, Minister of Labour and Prime Minister; for India, by:
The Right Honourable Edwin Samuel Montagu, M. P., His Secretary of State for India;
Major General His Highness Maharaja Sir Ganga Singh Bahadur, Maharaja of Bikaner, G. C. S. I., G. C. I. E., G. C. V. O., K. C. B., A. D. C.;
The President of the French Republic, by:
Mr. Georges Clemenceau, President of the Council, Minister of War;
Mr. Pichon, Minister of Foreign Affairs;
Mr. L.-L. Klotz, Minister of Finance;
Mr. André Tardieu, Commissary General for Franco-American Military Affairs;
Mr. Jules Cambon, Ambassador of France.
His Majesty the King of Italy, by:
Mr. V. E. Orlando, President of the Council of Ministers;
Baron S. Sonnino, Minister of Foreign Affairs;
Marquis G. F. Salvago Raggi, Senator of the Kingdom, formerly Ambassador of His Majesty the King of Italy at Paris;
Mr. A. Salandra, Deputy, formerly President of the Council of Ministers;
Mr. S. Barzilai, Deputy, formerly Minister;
His Majesty the Emperor of Japan, by:
Marquis Saïonzi, formerly President of the Council of Ministers;
Baron Makino, formerly Minister of Foreign Affairs, Member of the Diplomatic Council;
Viscount Chinda, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of H. M. the Emperor of Japan at London;
Mr. K. Matsui, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of H. M. the Emperor of Japan at Paris;
Mr. H. Ijuin, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of H. M. the Emperor of Japan at Rome;
His Majesty the King of the Belgians, by:
Mr. Hymans, Minister of Foreign Affairs, Minister of State;
Mr. van den Heuvel, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of H. M. the King of the Belgians, Minister of State;
Mr. Vandervelde, Minister of Justice, Minister of State;

Acting in the name of the German Empire and of each and every component State,

Who having communicated their full powers found in good and due form have agreed as follows:

From the coming into force of the present Treaty the state of war will terminate. From that moment and subject to the provisions of this Treaty official relations with Germany, and with any of the German States, will be resumed by the Allied and Associated Powers.

PART I.

THE COVENANT OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

The High Contracting Parties,

In order to promote international co-operation and to achieve international peace and security by the acceptance of obligations not to resort to war, by the prescription of open, just and honourable relations between nations, by the firm establishment of the understandings of international law as the actual rule of conduct among Governments, and by the maintenance of justice and a scrupulous respect for all treaty obligations in the dealings of organised peoples with one another,

Agree to this Covenant of the League of Nations.

ARTICLE 1.

The original Members of the League of Nations shall be those of the Signatories which are named in the Annex to this Covenant and also such of those other States named in the Annex as shall accede without reservation to this Covenant. Such accession shall be effected by a Declaration deposited with the Secretariat within two months of the coming into force of the Covenant. Notice thereof shall be sent to all other Members of the League.

Any fully self-governing State, Dominion or Colony not named in the Annex may become a Member of the League if its admission is agreed to by two-thirds of the Assembly, provided that it shall give effective guarantees of its sincere intention to observe its international obligations, and shall accept such regulations as may be prescribed by the League in regard to its military and naval forces and armaments.

Any Member of the League may, after two years' notice of its intention so to do, withdraw from the League, provided that all its international obligations and all its obligations under this Covenant shall have been fulfilled at the time of its withdrawal.

ARTICLE 2.

The action of the League under this covenant shall be effected through the instrumentality of an Assembly and of a Council, with a permanent Secretariat.

ARTICLE 3.

The Assembly shall consist of Representatives of the Members of the League.

The Assembly shall meet at stated intervals and from time to time as occasion may require at the Seat of the League or at such other place as may be decided upon.

The Assembly may deal at its meetings with any matter within the sphere of action of the League or affecting the peace of the world.

At meetings of the Assembly each Member of the League shall have one vote, and may have not more than three Representatives.

ARTICLE 4.

The Council shall consist of Representatives of the Principal Allied and Associated Powers, together with Representatives of four other Members of the League. These four Members of the League shall be selected by the Assembly from time to time in its discretion. Until the appointment of the Representatives of the four Members of the League first selected by the Assembly, Representatives of Belgium, Brazil, Spain and Greece shall be members of the Council.

With the approval of the majority of the Assembly, the Council may name additional Members of the League whose Representatives shall always be members of the Council; the Council with like approval may increase the number of Members of the League to be selected by the Assembly for representation on the Council.

The Council shall meet from time to time as occasion may require, and at least once a year, at the Seat of the League, or at such other place as may be decided upon.

The Council may deal at its meetings with any matter within the sphere of action of the League or affecting the peace of the world.

Any Member of the League not represented on the Council shall be invited to send a Representative to sit as a member at any meeting of the Council during the consideration of matters specially affecting the interests of that Member of the League.

At meetings of the Council, each Member of the League represented on the Council shall have one vote, and may have not more than one Representative.

ARTICLE 5.

Except where otherwise expressly provided in this Covenant or by the terms of the present Treaty, decisions at any meeting of the Assembly or of the Council shall require the agreement of all the Members of the League represented at the meeting.

All matters of procedure at meetings of the Assembly or of the Council, including the appointment of Committees to investigate particular matters, shall be regulated by the Assembly or by the Council and may be decided by a majority of the Members of the League represented at the meeting.

The first meeting of the Assembly and the first meeting of the Council shall be summoned by the President of the United States of America.

ARTICLE 6.

The permanent Secretariat shall be established at the Seat of the League. The Secretariat shall comprise a Secretary General and such secretaries and staff as may be required.

The first Secretary General shall be the person named in the Annex; thereafter the Secretary General shall be appointed by the Council with the approval of the majority of the Assembly.

The secretaries and staff of the Secretariat shall be appointed by the Secretary General with the approval of the Council.

The Secretary General shall act in that capacity at all meetings of the Assembly and of the Council.

The expenses of the Secretariat shall be borne by the Members of the League in accordance with the apportionment of the expenses of the International Bureau of the Universal Postal Union.

ARTICLE 7.

The Seat of the League is established at Geneva.

The Council may at any time decide that the Seat of the League shall be established elsewhere.

All positions under or in connection with the League, including the Secretariat, shall be open equally to men and women.

Representatives of the Members of the League and officials of the League when engaged on the business of the League shall enjoy diplomatic privileges and immunities.

The buildings and other property occupied by the League or its officials or by Representatives attending its meetings shall be inviolable.

ARTICLE 8.

The Members of the League recognise that the maintenance of peace requires the reduction of national armaments to the lowest point consistent with national safety and the enforcement by common action of international obligations.

The Council, taking account of the geographical situation and circumstances of each State, shall formulate plans for such reduction for the consideration and action of the several Governments.

Such plans shall be subject to reconsideration and revision at least every ten years.

After these plans shall have been adopted by the several Governments, the limits of armaments therein fixed shall not be exceeded without the concurrence of the council.

The Members of the League agree that the manufacture by private enterprise of munitions and implements of war is open to grave objections. The Council shall advise how the evil effects attendant upon such manufacture can be prevented, due regard being had to the necessities of those Members of the League which are not able to manufacture the munitions and implements of war necessary for their safety.

The Members of the League undertake to interchange full and frank information as to the scale of their armaments, their military and naval programmes and the condition of such of their industries as are adaptable to war-like purposes.

ARTICLE 9.

A permanent Commission shall be constituted to advise the Council on the execution of the provisions of Articles 1 and 8 and on military and naval questions generally.

ARTICLE 10.

The Members of the League undertake to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all Members of the League. In case of any such aggression or in case of any threat or danger of such aggression the Council shall advise upon the means by which this obligation shall be fulfilled.

ARTICLE 11.

Any war or threat of war, whether immediately affecting any of the Members of the League or not, is hereby declared a matter of concern to the whole League, and the League shall take any action that may be deemed wise and effectual to safeguard the peace of nations. In case any such emergency should arise the Secretary General shall on the request of any Member of the League forthwith summon a meeting of the Council.

It is also declared to be the friendly right of each Member of the League to bring to the attention of the Assembly or of the Council any circumstance whatever affecting international relations which threatens to disturb international peace or the good understanding between nations upon which peace depends.

ARTICLE 12.

The Members of the League agree that if there should arise between them any dispute likely to lead to a rupture, they will submit the matter either to arbitration or to inquiry by the Council, and they agree in no case to resort to war until three months after the award by the arbitrators or the report by the Council.

In any case under this Article the award of the arbitrators shall be made within a reasonable time, and the report of the Council shall be made within six months after the submission of the dispute.

ARTICLE 13.

The Members of the League agree that whenever any dispute shall arise between them which they recognise to be suitable for submission to arbitration and which cannot be satisfactorily settled by diplomacy, they will submit the whole subject-matter to arbitration.

Disputes as to the interpretation of a treaty, as to any question of international law, as to the existence of any fact which if established would constitute a breach of any international obligation, or as to the extent and nature of the reparation to be made for any such breach, are declared to be among those which are generally suitable for submission to arbitration.

For the consideration of any such dispute the court of Arbitration to which the case is referred shall be the court agreed on by the parties to the dispute or stipulated in any convention existing between them.

The Members of the League agree that they will carry out in full good faith any award that may be rendered, and that they will not resort to war against a Member of the League which complies therewith. In the event of any failure to carry out such an award, the Council shall propose what steps should be taken to give effect thereto.

ARTICLE 14.

The Council shall formulate and submit to the Members of the League for adoption plans for the establishment of a Permanent Court of International Justice. The Court shall be competent to hear and determine any dispute of an international character which the parties thereto submit to it. The Court may also give an advisory opinion upon any dispute or question referred to it by the Council or by the Assembly.

ARTICLE 15.

If there should arise between Members of the League any dispute likely to lead to a rupture, which is not submitted to arbitration in accordance with Article 13, the Members of the League agree that they will submit the matter to the Council. Any party to the dispute may effect such submission by giving notice of the existence of the dispute to the Secretary General, who will make all necessary arrangements for a full investigation and consideration thereof.

For this purpose the parties to the dispute will communicate to the Secretary General, as promptly as possible, statements of their case with all the relevant facts and papers, and the Council may forthwith direct the publication thereof.

The Council shall endeavour to effect a settlement of the dispute, and if such efforts are successful, a statement shall be made public giving such facts and explanations regarding the dispute and the terms of settlement thereof as the Council may deem appropriate.

If the dispute is not thus settled, the Council either unanimously or by a majority vote shall make and publish a report containing a statement of the facts of the dispute and the recommendations which are deemed just and proper in regard thereto.

Any Member of the League represented on the Council may make public a statement of the facts of the dispute and of its conclusions regarding the same.

If a report by the Council is unanimously agreed to by the Members thereof other than the Representatives of one or more of the parties to the dispute, the Members of the League agree that they will not go to war with any party to the dispute which complies with the recommendations of the report.

If the Council fails to reach a report which is unanimously agreed to by the Members thereof, other than the Representatives of one or more of the parties to the dispute, the Members of the League reserve to themselves the right to take such action as they shall consider necessary for the maintenance of right and justice.

If the dispute between the parties is claimed by one of them, and is found by the Council, to arise out of a matter which by international law is solely within the domestic jurisdiction of that party, the Council shall so report, and shall make no recommendation as to its settlement.

The Council may in any case under this Article refer the dispute to the Assembly. The dispute shall be so referred at the request of either party to the dispute, provided that such request be made within fourteen days after the submission of the dispute to the Council.

In any case referred to the Assembly all the provisions of this Article and of Article 12 relating to the action and powers of the Council shall apply to the action and powers of the Assembly, provided that a report made by the Assembly, if concurred in by the Representatives of those Members of the League represented on the Council and of a majority of the other Members of the League, exclusive in each case of the Representatives of the parties to the dispute, shall have the same force as a report by the Council concurred in by all the members thereof other than the Representatives of one or more of the parties to the dispute.

ARTICLE 16.

Should any Member of the League resort to war in disregard of its covenants under Articles 12, 13 or 15, it shall ipso facto be deemed to have committed an act of war against all other Members of the League, which hereby undertake immediately to subject it to the severance of all trade or financial relations, the prohibition of all intercourse between their nationals and the nationals of the covenant-breaking State, and the prevention of all financial, commercial or personal intercourse between the nationals of the covenant-breaking State and the nationals of any other State, whether a Member of the League or not.

It shall be the duty of the Council in such case to recommend to the several Governments concerned what effective military or naval force the Members of the League shall severally contribute to the armed forces to be used to protect the covenants of the League.

The Members of the League agree, further, that they will mutually support one another in the financial and economic measures which are taken under this Article, in order to minimise the loss and inconvenience resulting from the above measures, and that they will mutually support one another in resisting any special measures aimed at one of their number by the covenant-breaking State, and that they will take the necessary steps to afford passage through their territory to the forces of any of the Members of the League which are co-operating to protect the covenants of the League.

Any Member of the League which has violated any covenant of the League may be declared to be no longer a Member of the League by a vote of the Council concurred in by the Representatives of all the other Members of the League represented thereon.

ARTICLE 17.

In the event of a dispute between a Member of the League and a State which is not a Member of the League, or between States not Members of the League, the State or States not Members of the League shall be invited to accept the obligations of membership in the League for the purposes of such dispute, upon such conditions as the Council may deem just. If such invitation is accepted, the provisions of Articles 12 to 16 inclusive shall be applied with such modifications as may be deemed necessary by the Council.

Upon such invitation being given the Council shall immediately institute an inquiry into the circumstances of the dispute and recommend such action as may seem best and most effectual in the circumstances.

If a State so invited shall refuse to accept the obligations of membership in the League for the purposes of such dispute, and shall resort to war against a Member of the League, the provisions of Article 16 shall be applicable as against the State taking such action.

If both parties of the dispute when so invited refuse to accept the obligations of membership in the League for the purposes of such dispute, the Council may take such measures and make such recommendations as will prevent hostilities and will result in the settlement of the dispute.

ARTICLE 18.

Every treaty or international engagement entered into hereafter by any Member of the League shall be forthwith registered with the Secretariat and shall as soon as possible be published by it. No such treaty or international engagement shall be binding until so registered.

ARTICLE 19.

The Assembly may from time to time advise the reconsideration by Members of the League of treaties which have become inapplicable and the consideration of international conditions whose continuance might endanger the peace of the world.

ARTICLE 20.

The Members of the League severally agree that this Covenant is accepted as abrogating all obligations or understandings inter se which are inconsistent with the terms thereof, and solemnly undertake that they will not hereafter enter into any engagements inconsistent with the terms thereof.

In case any Member of the League shall, before becoming a Member of the League, have undertaken any obligations inconsistent with the terms of this Covenant, it shall be the duty of such Member to take immediate steps to procure its release from such obligations.

ARTICLE 21.

Nothing in this Covenant shall be deemed to affect the validity of international engagements, such as treaties of arbitration or regional understandings like the Monroe doctrine, for securing the maintenance of peace.

ARTICLE 22.

To those colonies and territories which as a consequence of the late war have ceased to be under the sovereignty of the States which formerly governed them and which are inhabited by peoples not yet able to stand by themselves under the strenuout conditions of the modern world, there should be applied the principle that the well-being and development of such peoples form a sacred trust of civilisation and that securities for the performance of this trust should be embodied in this Covenant.

The best method of giving practical effect to this principle is that the tutelage of such peoples should be entrusted to advanced nations who by reason of their resources, their experience or the geographical position can best undertake this responsibility, and who are willing to accept it, and that this tutelage should be exercised by them as Mandatories on behalf of the League.

The character of the mandate must differ according to the stage of the development of the people, the geographical situation of the territory, its economic conditions and other similar circumstances.

Certain communities formerly belonging to the Turkish Empire have reached a stage of development where their existence as independent nations can be provisionally recognised subject to the rendering of administrative advice and assistance by a Mandatory until such time as they are able to stand alone. The wishes of these communities must be a principal consideration in the selection of the Mandatory.

Other peoples, especially those of Central Africa, are at such a stage that the Mandatory must be responsible for the administration of the territory under conditions which will guarantee freedom of conscience and religion, subject only to the maintenance of public order and morals, the prohibition of abuses such as the slave trade, the arms traffic and the liquor traffic, and the prevention of the establishment of fortifications or military and naval bases and of military training of the natives for other than police purposes and the defence of territory, and will also secure equal opportunities for the trade and commerce of other Members of the League.

There are territories, such as South-West Africa and certain of the South Pacific Islands, which, owing to the sparseness of their population, or their small size, or their remoteness from the centres of civilisation, or their geographical contiguity to the territory of the Mandatory, and other circumstances, can be best administered under the laws of the Mandatory as integral portions of its territory, subject to the safeguards above mentioned in the interests of the indigenous population.

In every case of mandate, the Mandatory shall render to the Council an annual report in reference to the territory committed to its charge.

The degree of authority, control, or administration to be exercised by the Mandatory shall, if not previously agreed upon by the Members of the League, be explicitly defined in each case by the Council.

A permanent Commission shall be constituted to receive and examine the annual reports of the Mandatories and to advise the Council on all matters relating to the observance of the mandates.

ARTICLE 23.

Subject to and in accordance with the provisions of international conventions existing or hereafter to be agreed upon, the Members of the League:

(a) will endeavour to secure and maintain fair and humane conditions of labour for men, women, and children, both in their own countries and in all countries to which their commercial and industrial relations extend, and for that purpose will establish and maintain the necessary international organisations;

(b) undertake to secure just treatment of the native inhabitants of territories under their control;

(c) will entrust the League with the general supervision over the execution of agreements with regard to the traffic in women and children, and the traffic in opium and other dangerous drugs;

(d) will entrust the League with the general supervision of the trade in arms and ammunition with the countries in which the control of this traffic is necessary in the common interest;

(e) will make provision to secure and maintain freedom of communications and of transit and equitable treatment for the commerce of all Members of the League. In this connection, the special necessities of the regions devastated during the war of 1914–1918 shall be borne in mind;

(f) will endeavour to take steps in matters of international concern for the prevention and control of disease.

ARTICLE 24.

There shall be placed under the direction of the League all international bureaux already established by general treaties if the parties to such treaties consent. All such international bureaux and all commissions for the regulation of matters of international interest hereafter constituted shall be placed under the direction of the League.

In all matters of international interest which are regulated by general conventions but which are not placed under the control of international bureaux or commissions, the Secretariat of the League shall, subject to the consent of the Council and if desired by the parties, collect and distribute all relevant information and shall render any other assistance which may be necessary or desirable.

The Council may include as part of the expenses of the Secretariat the expenses of any bureau or commission which is placed under the direction of the League.

ARTICLE 25.

The Members of the League agree to encourage and promote the establisment and co-operation of duly authorised voluntary national Red Cross organisations having as purposes the improvement of health, the prevention of disease and the mitigation of suffering throughout the world.

ARTICLE 26.

Amendments to this Covenant will take effect when ratified by the Members of the League whose Representatives compose the Council and by a majority of the Members of the League whose Representatives compose the Assembly.

No such amendment shall bind any Member of the League which signifies its dissent therefrom, but in that case it shall cease to be a Member of the League.

PART II.

BOUNDARIES OF GERMANY.

ARTICLE 27.

The boundaries of Germany will be determined as follows:

1. With Belgium:

From the point common to the three frontiers of Belgium, Holland and Germany and in a southerly direction:

the north-eastern boundary of the former territory of neutral Moresnet, then the eastern boundary of the Kreis of Eupen, then the frontier between Belgium and the Kreis of Montjoie, then the north-eastern and eastern boundary of the Kreis of Malmédy to its junction with the frontier of Luxemburg.

2. With Luxemburg:

The frontier of the 3rd August, 1914, to its junction with the frontier of France of the 18th July, 1870.

3. With France:

The frontier of the 18th July, 1870, from Luxemburg to Switzerland with the reservations made in Article 48 of Section IV (Saar Basin) of Part III.

4. With Switzerland:
The present frontier.
5. With Austria:
The frontier of the 3rd August, 1914, from Switzerland to Tchecko-Slovakia is hereinafter defined.
6. With Tchecko-Slovakia:
The frontier of the 3rd August, 1914, between Germany and Austria from its junction with the old administrative boundary separating Bohemia and the province of Upper Austria to the point north of the salient of the old province of Austrian Silesia situated at about 8 kilometres east of Neustadt.
7. With Poland:
From the point defined above in a northerly direction to the point of the salient of the eastern boundary of the Kreis of Falkenberg, which is about 3 kilometres east of Puschine:
a line to be fixed on the ground passing east of ZÜLZ:
thence the eastern boundary of the Kreis of Falkenberg, then the boundary between Upper and Middle Silesia, then the western boundary of Posnania to the Bartsch, then the course of this river downstream, then the boundary between the Kreise of Guhrau and of Glogau in a northerly direction, then the boundary of Posnania in a north-easterly direction to its junction with the boundary between the Kreise of Lissa and Fraustadt; thence in a north-westerly direction to a point to be chosen on the road between the villages of Unruhstadt and Kopnitz:
a line to be fixed on the ground passing west of Geyrsdorf, Brenno, Fehlen, Altkloster, Klebel, and east of Ulbersdor, Buchwaldf, Ilgen, Weine, Lupitze, Schwenten; thence in a northerly direction to the northernmost point of Lake Chlop:
a line to be fixed on the ground following the median line of the lakes; the town and the station of Bentschen however (including the junction of the lines Schwiebus-Bentschen and Züllichau-Bentschen) remaining in Polish territory;
thence in an north-north-easterly direction to the point of junction of the boundaries of the Kreise of Schwerin, Birnbaum and Meseritz:
a line to be fixed on the ground passing east of Betsche; thence in a northerly direction the boundary separating the Kreise of Schwerin and Birnbaum, then in an easterly direction the northern boundary of the Regierungsbezirk of Posen, then in a north-easterly direction the boundary between the Kreise of Filehne and Czarnikau, then the course of the Netze up-stream, then in a northerly direction the eastern boundary of the Kreis of Czarnikau to its junction with the northern boundary of Posnania; thence in a north-easterly direction to a point on the frontier of Posnania situated at the extremity of the salient at about 5 kilometres west-north-west of Schneidemühl:
a line to be fixed on the ground;
thence the frontier of Posnania to its junction with the boundary between the Kreise of Flatow and of Deutschkrone; thence in a north-easterly direction to point 205 (about 5 kilometres west-north-west of Konitz):
a line to be fixed on the ground approximately parallel to the railway Schneidemühl-Konitz and about 8 kilometres west of it and passing to the west of Annafeld, Gresonse, Friedland, Steinborn, Jenznik, Niesewanz and east of Sakollno, Wengerz, Gursen, Radawnitz, Lanken, Damnitz, Schlochau (leaving in German territory the Hammerstein-Schlochau-Prechlau railway), Lichtenhagen, Richnau; thence in a northerly direction the boundary between the Kreise of Konitz and Schlochau, then the boundary of West Prussia to the northern extremity of the salient about 8 kilometres south-east of Lauenburg; thence in a northerly direction to the Baltic Sea:
a line to be fixed on the ground, passing east of the villages of Hohenfelde, Saulin, Chottschow, following the median line of the lakes situated east of those places, and through point 32 about 5 kilometres north-north-west of Ossecken.
8. With Denmark:
The frontier as it will be fixed in accordance with Articles 109 and 110 of Part III, Section XII (Schleswig).

ARTICLE 28.

The boundaries of East Prussia, with the reservations made in Articles 94 and 96 of Section IX (East Prussia) of Part III will be determined as follows:
from a point on the coast of the Baltic Sea about 1½ kilometres north of Pröbbernau Church in a direction of about 159° East from true North:
a line to be fixed on the ground for about 2 kilometres; thence in a straight line to the light at the bend of the Elbinger Channel in approximately latitude 54° 19½′ North, longitude 19° 26′ East of Greenwich; thence to the easternmost mouth of the Nogat River at a bearing of approximately 209° East from true North;
thence up the course of the Nogat River to the point where the latter leaves the Vistula (Weichsel); thence up the principal channel of navigation of the Vistula, then the southern boundary of the Kreis of Marienwerder, then that of the Kreis of Rosenberg eastwards to the point where it meets the old boundary of East Prussia; thence the old boundary between East and West Prussia, then the boundary between the Kreise of Osterode and Neidenburg, then the course of the river Skottau down-stream, then the course of the Neide up-stream to a point situated about 5 kilometres west of Bialutten being the nearest point to the old frontier of Russia; thence in an easterly direction to a point immediately south of the intersection of the road Neidenburg-Mlava with the old frontier of Russia:
a line to be fixed on the ground passing north of Bialutten; thence the old frontier of Russia to a point east of Schmallenigken, then the principal channel of navigation of the Niemen (Memel) downstream, then the Skierwieth arm of the delta to the Kurisches Haff; thence a straight line to the point where the eastern shore of the Kurische Nehrung meets the administrative boundary about 4 kilometres south-west of Nidden; thence this administrative boundary to the western shore of the Kurische Nehrung.

ARTICLE 29.

The boundaries as described above are drawn in red on a one-in-a-million map which is annexed to the present Treaty (Map No. 1.)
In the case of any discrepancies between the text of the Treaty and this map or any other map which may be annexed, the text will be final.

ARTICLE 30.

In the case of boundaries which are defined by a waterway, the terms "course" and "channel" used in the present Treaty signify: in the case of non-navigable rivers, the median line of the waterway or of its principal arm, and, in the case of navigable rivers, the median line of the principal channel of navigation. It will rest with the Boundary Commissions provided by the present Treaty to specify in each case whether the frontier line shall follow any changes of the course or channel which may take place or whether it shall be definitely fixed by the position of the course or channel at the time when the present Treaty comes into force.

PART III.

POLITICAL CLAUSES FOR EUROPE.

Section I. Belgium.

ARTICLE 31.

Germany, recognizing that the Treaties of April 19, 1839, which established the status of Belgium before the war, no longer conform to the requirements of the situation, consents to the abrogation of the said treaties and undertakes immediately to recognize and to observe whatever conventions may be entered into by the Principal Allied and Associated Powers, or by any of them, in concert with the Governments of Belgium and of the Netherlands, to replace the said Treaties of 1839. If her formal adhesion should be required to such conventions or to any of their stipulations, Germany undertakes immediately to give it.

ARTICLE 32.

Germany recognizes the full sovereignty of Belgium over the whole of the contested territory of Moresnet (called Moresnet neutre).

ARTICLE 33.

Germany renounces in favour of Belgium all rights and title over the territory of Prussian Moresnet situated on the west of the road from Liège to Aix-la-Chapelle; the road will belong to Belgium where it bounds this territory.

ARTICLE 34.

Germany renounces in favour of Belgium all rights and title over the territory comprising the whole of the Kreise of Eupen and of Malmédy.
During the six months after the coming into force of this Treaty, registers will be opened by the Belgium Authorities at Eupen and Malmédy in which the inhabitants of the above territory will be entitled to record in writing a desire to see the whole or part of it remain under German sovereignty.

The results of this public expression of opinion will be communicated by the Belgian Government to the League of Nations, and Belgium undertakes to accept the decision of the League.

ARTICLE 35.

A Commission of seven persons, five of whom will be appointed by the Principal Allied and Associated Powers, one by Germany and one by Belgium, will be set up fifteen days after the coming into force of the present Treaty to settle on the spot the new frontier line between Belgium and Germany, taking into account the economic factors and the means of communication.

Decisions will be taken by a majority and will be binding on the parties concerned.

ARTICLE 36.

When the transfer of the sovereignty over the territories referred to above has become definitive, German nationals habitually resident in the territories will definitively acquire Belgian nationality ipso facto, and will lose their German nationality.

Nevertheless German nationals who become resident in the territories after the 1st August, 1914, shall not obtain Belgian nationality without a permit from the Belgian Government.

ARTICLE 37.

Within the two years following the definitive transfer of the sovereignty over the territories assigned to Belgium under the present Treaty, German nationals over 18 years of age habitually resident in those territories will be entitled to opt for German nationality.

Option by a husband will cover his wife, and option by parents will cover their children under 18 years of age.

Persons who have exercised the above right to opt must within the ensuing twelve months transfer their place of residence to Germany.

They will be entitled to retain their immovable property in the territories acquired by Belgium. They may carry with them their movable property of every description. No export or import duties may be imposed upon them in connection with the removal of such property.

ARTICLE 38.

The German Government will hand over without delay to the Belgian Government the archives, registers, plans, title deeds and documents of every kind concerning the civil, military, financial, judicial or other administrations in the territory transferred to Belgian sovereignty.

The German Government will likewise restore to the Belgian Government the archives and documents of every kind carried off during the war by the German authorities from the Belgian public administrations, in particular from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs at Brussels.

ARTICLE 39.

The proportion and nature of the financial liabilities of Germany and of Prussia which Belgium will have to bear on account of the territories ceded to her shall be fixed in conformity with Article, 254 and 256 of Part IX (Financial Clauses) of the present Treaty.

Section II. Luxemburg.

ARTICLE 40.

With regard to the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg, Germany renounces the benefit of all the provisions inserted in her favour in the treaties of February 8, 1842, April 2, 1847, October 20–25, 1865, August 18, 1866, February 21 and May 11, 1867, May 10, 1871, June 11, 1872, and November 11, 1902, and in all conventions consequent upon such treaties.

Germany recognizes that the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg ceased to form part of the German Zollverein as from January 1, 1919, renounces all rights to the exploitation of the railways, adheres to the termination of the régime of neutrality of the Grand Duchy, and accepts in advance all international arrangements which may be concluded by the Allied and Associated Powers relating to the Grand Duchy.

ARTICLE 41.

Germany undertakes to grant to the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg, when a demand to that effect is made to her by the Principal Allied and Associated Powers, the rights and advantages stipulated in favour of such Powers or their nationals in the present Treaty with regard to economic questions, to questions relative to transport and to aerial navigation.

Section III. Left bank of the Rhine.

ARTICLE 42.

Germany is forbidden to maintain or construct any fortifications either on the left bank of the Rhine or on the right bank to the west of a line drawn 50 kilometres to the East of the Rhine.

ARTICLE 43.

In the area defined above the maintenance and the assembly of armed forces, either permanently or temporarily, and military manœuvres of any kind, as well as the upkeep of all permanent works for mobilization are in the same way forbidden.

ARTICLE 44.

In case Germany violates in any manner whatever the provisions of Articles 42 and 43, she shall be regarded as committing a hostile act against the Powers signatory of the present Treaty and as calculated to disturb the peace of the world.

Section IV. Saar Basin.

ARTICLE 45.

As compensation for the destruction of the coal-mines in the north of France and as part payment towards the total reparation due from Germany for the damage resulting from the war, Germany cedes to France in full and absolute possession, with exclusive rights of exploitation, unencumbered and free from all debts and charges of any kind, the coal-mines situated in the Saar Basin as defined in Article 48.

ARTICLE 46.

In order to assure the rights and welfare of the population and to guarantee to France complete freedom in working the mines, Germany agrees to the provisions of Chapters I and II of the Annex hereto.

ARTICLE 47.

In order to make in due time permanent provision for the government of the Saar Basin in accordance with the wishes of the population, France and Germany agree to the provisions of Chapter III of the Annex hereto.

ARTICLE 48.

The boundaries of the territory of the Saar Basin, as dealt with in the present stipulations, will be fixed as follows:—

On the south and south-west: by the frontier of France as fixed by the present Treaty.

On the north-west and north: by a line following the northern administrative boundary of the Kreis of Merzig from the point where it leaves the French frontier to the point where it meets the administrative boundary separating the commune of Saarhölzbach from the commune of Britten; following this communal boundary southwards and reaching the administrative boundary of the canton of Merzig so as to include in the territory of the Saar Basin the canton of Mettlach, with the exception of the commune of Britten; following successively the northern administrative limits of the cantons of Merzig and Haustadt, which are incorporated in the aforesaid Saar Basin, then successively the administrative boundaries separating the Kreise of Sarrelouis, Ottweiler, and Saint-Wendel from the Kreise of Merzig, Trèves (Trier), and the Principality of Birkenfeld as far as a point situated about 500 metres north of the village of Furschweiler (viz., the highest point of the Metzelberg).

On the north-east and east: from the last point defined above to a point about 3½ kilometres east-north-east of Saint-Wendel:

a line to be fixed on the ground passing east of Furschweiler, west of Roschberg, east of points 418, 329 (south of Roschberg), west of Leitersweiler, north-east of point 464, and following the line of the crest southwards to its junction with the administrative boundary of the Kreis of Kusel; thence in a southerly direction the boundary of the Kreis of Kusel, then the boundary of the Kreis of Homburg towards the south-south-east to a point situated about 1,000 metres west of Dunzweiler; thence to a point about 1 kilometre south of Hornbach:

a line to be fixed on the ground passing through point 424 (about 1,000 metres south-east of Dunzweiler), point 363 (Fuchs Berg), point 322 (south-west of Waldmohr), then east of Jägersburg and Erbach, then encircling Homburg, passes through the points 361 (about 2½ kilometres north-east by east of that town), 342 (about 2 kilometres south-east of that town), 347 (Schreiners Berg), 356, 350 (about 1½ kilometres south-east of Schwarzenbach), then passing east of Einöd, south-east of points 322 and 333, about 2 kilometres east of Webenheim, about 2 kilometres east of Mimbach, passing east of the plateau which is traversed by the road from Mimbach to Böckweiler (so as to include this road in the territory of the Saar Basin), passing immediately north of the junction of the roads from Böckweiler and Altheim situated about 2 kilometres north of Altheim, then passing south of Ringweilderhof and north of point 322, rejoining the frontier of France at the angle which it makes about 1 kilometre south of Hornbach (see Map No. 2 scale 1/100,000 annexed to the present Treaty).

A Commission composed of five members, one appointed by France, one by Germany, and three by the Council of the League of Nations, which will select nationals of other Powers, will be constituted within fifteen days from the coming into force of the present Treaty, to trace on the spot the frontier line described above.

In those parts of the preceding line which do not coincide with administration boundaries, the Commission will endeavour to keep to the line indicated, while taking into consideration, so far as is possible, local economic interests and existing communal boundaries.

The decisions of this Commission will be taken by a majority, and will be binding on the parties concerned.

ARTICLE 49.

Germany renounces in favour of the League of Nations, in the capacity of trustee, the government of the territory defined above.

At the end of fifteen years from the coming into force of the present Treaty the inhabitants of the said territory shall be called upon to indicate the sovereignty under which they desire to be placed.

ARTICLE 50.

The stipulations under which the cession of the mines in the Saar Basin shall be carried out, together with the measures intended to guarantee the rights and the well-being of the inhabitants and the government of the territory, as well as the conditions in accordance with which the plebiscite hereinbefore provided for is to be made, are laid down in the Annex hereto. This Annex shall be considered as an integral part of the present Treaty, and Germany declares her adherence to it.

ANNEX.

In accordance with the provisions of Articles 45 to 50 of the present Treaty, the stipulations under which the cession by Germany to France of the mines of the Saar Basin will be effected, as well as the measures intended to ensure respect for the rights and well-being of the population and the government of the territory, and the conditions in which the inhabitants will be called upon to indicate the sovereignty under which they may wish to be placed, have been laid down as follows:—

Chapter I. Cession and exploitation of mining property.

1.

From the date of the coming into force of the present Treaty, all the deposits of coal situated within the Saar Basin as defined in Article 48 of the said Treaty, become the complete and absolute property of the French State.

The French State will have the right of working or not working the said mines, or of transferring to a third party the right of working them, without having to obtain any previous authorisation or to fulfil any formalities.

The French State may always require that the German mining laws and regulations referred to below shall be applied in order to ensure the determination of its rights.

2.

The right of ownership of the French State will apply not only to the deposits which are free and for which concessions have not yet been granted, but also to the deposits for which concessions have already been granted, whoever may be the present proprietors, irrespective of whether they belong to the Prussian State, to the Bavarian State, to other States or bodies, to companies or to individuals, whether they have been worked or not, or whether a right of exploitation distinct from the right of the owners of the surface of the soil has or has not been recognized.

3.

As far as concerns the mines which are being worked, the transfer of the ownership to the French State will apply to all the accessories and subsidiaries of the said mines, in particular to their plant and equipment both on and below the surface, to their extracting machinery, their plants for transforming coal into electric power, coke and by-products, their workshops, means of communication, electric lines, plant for catching and distributing water, land, buildings such as offices, managers', employees' and workmen's dwellings, schools, hospitals, and dispensaries, their stocks and supplies of every description, their archives and plans, and in general everything which those who own or exploit the mines possess or enjoy for the purpose of exploiting the mines and their accessories and subsidiaries.

The transfer will apply also to the debts owing for products delivered before the entry into possession by the French State, and after the signature of the present Treaty, and to deposits of money made by customers, whose rights will be guaranteed by the French State.

The French State will acquire the property free and clear of all debts and charges. Nevertheless, the rights acquired, or in course of being acquired, by the employees of the mines and their accessories and subsidiaries at the date of the coming into force of the present Treaty, in connection with pensions for old age or disability, will not be affected. In return, Germany must pay over to the French State a sum representing the actuarial amounts to which the said employes are entitled.

5.

The value of the property thus ceded to the French State will be determined by the Reparation Commission referred to in Article 233 of Part VIII (Reparations) of the present Treaty.

This value shall be credited to Germany in part payment of the amount due for reparation.

It will be for Germany to indemnify the proprietors or parties concerned, whoever they may be.

6.

No tariff shall be established on the German railways and canals which may directly or indirectly discriminate to the prejudice of the transport of the personnel or products of the mines and their accessories or subsidiaries, or of the material necessary to their exploitation. Such transport shall enjoy all the rights and privileges which any international railway conventions may guarantee to similar products of French origin.

7.

The equipment and personnel necessary to ensure the despatch and transport of the products of the mines and their accessories and subsidiaries, as well as the carriage of workmen and employees, will be provided by the local railway administration of the Basin.

8.

No obstacle shall be placed in the way of such improvements of railways or waterways as the French State may judge necessary to assure the despatch and the transport of the products of the mines and their accessories and subsidiaries, such as double trackage, enlargement of stations, and construction of yards and appurtenances. The distribution of expenses will, in the event of disagreement, be submitted to arbitration.

The French State may also establish any new means of communication, such as roads, electric lines and telephone connections which it may consider necessary for the exploitation of the mines.

It may exploit freely and without any restrictions the means of communication of which it may become the owner, particularly those connecting the mines and their accessories and subsidiaries with the means of communication situated in French territory.

The French State shall always be entitled to demand the application of the German mining laws and regulations in force on the 11th November, 1918, excepting provisions adopted exclusively in view of the state of war, with a view to the acquisition of such land as it may judge necessary for the exploitation of the mines and their accessories and subsidiaries.

The payment for damage caused to immovable property by the working of the said mines and their accessories and subsidiaries shall be made in accordance with the German mining laws and regulations above referred to.

10.

Every person whom the French State may substitute for itself as regards the whole or part of its rights to the exploitation of the mines and their accessories and subsidiaries shall enjoy the benefit of the privileges provided in this Annex.

11.

The mines and other immovable property which become the property of the French State may never be made the subject of measures of forfeiture, forced sale, expropriation or requisition, nor of any other measure affecting the right of property.

The personnel and the plant connected with the exploitation of these mines or their accessories and subsidiaries, as well as the product extracted from the mines or manufactured in their accessories and subsidiaries, may not at any time be made the subject of any measures of requisition.

12.

The exploitation of the mines and their accessories and subsidiaries, which become the property of the French State, will continue, subject to the provisions of paragraph 23 below, to be subject to the régime established by the German laws and regulations in force on the 11th November, 1918, excepting provisions adopted exclusively in view of the state of war.

The rights of the workmen shall be similarly maintained, subject to the provisions of the said paragraph 23, as established on the 11th November, 1918, by the German laws and regulations above referred to.

No impediment shall be placed in the way of the introduction or employment in the mines and their accessories and subsidiaries of workmen from without the Basin.

The employees and workmen of French nationality shall have the right to belong to French labour unions.

13.

The amount contributed by the mines and their accessories and subsidiaries, either to the local budget of the territory of the Saar Basin or to the communal funds, shall be fixed with due regard to the ratio of the value of the mines to the total taxable wealth of the Basin.

14.

The French State shall always have the right of establishing and maintaining, as incidental to the mines, primary or technical schools for its employees and their children, and of causing instruction therein to be given in the French language, in accordance with such curriculum and by such teachers as it may select.

It shall also have the right to establish and maintain hospitals, dipensaries, workmen's houses and gardens and other charitable and social institutions.

The French State shall enjoy complete liberty with respect to the distribution, despatch and sale prices of the products of the mines and their accessories and subsidiaries.

Nevertheless, whatever may be the total product of the mines, the French Government undertakes that the requirements of local consumption for industrial and domestic purposes shall always be satisfied in the proportion existing in 1913 between the amount consumed locally and the total output of the Saar Basin.

Chapter II. Government of the territory of the Saar Basin.

16.

The Government of the territory of the Saar Basin will be entrusted to a Commission representing the League of Nations.

17.

The Governing Commission provided for by paragraph 16 shall consist of five members chosen by the Council of the League of Nations, and will include one citizen of France, one native inhabitant of the Saar Basin, not a citizen of France, and three members belonging to three countries other than France or Germany.

The members of the Governing Commission shall be appointed for one year and may be re-appointed. They can be removed by the Council of the League of Nations, which will provide for their replacement.

The members of the Governing Commission will be entitled to a salary which will be fixed by the Council of the League of Nations, and charged on the local revenues.

18.

The Chairman of the Governing Commission shall be appointed for one year from among the members of the Commission by the Council of the League of Nations and may be re-appointed.

The Chairman will act as the executive of the Commission.

19.

Within the territory of the Saar Basin the Governing Commission shall have all the powers of government hitherto belonging to the German Empire, Prussia, or Bavaria, including the appointment and dismissal of officials, and the creation of such administrative and representative bodies as it may deem necessary.

It shall have full powers to administer and operate the railways, canals, and the different public services.

Its decisions shall be taken by a majority.

20.

Germany will place at the disposal of the Governing Commission all official documents and archives under the control of Germany, of any German State, or of any local authority, which relate to the territory of the Saar Basin or to the rights of the inhabitants thereof.

21.

It will be the duty of the Governing Commission to ensure, by such means and under such conditions as it may deem suitable, the protection abroad of the interests of the inhabitants of the territory of the Saar Basin.

22.

The Governing Commission shall have the full right of user of all property, other than mines, belonging, both in public and in private domain, to the Imperial German Government, or the Government of any German State, in the territory of the Saar Basin.

As regards the railways an equitable apportionment of rolling stock shall be made by a mixed Commission on which the Government of the territory of the Saar Basin and the German railways are represented.

Persons, goods, vessels, carriages, wagons and mails coming from or going to the Saar Basin shall enjoy all the rights and privileges relating to transit and transport which are specified in the provisions of Part XII (Ports, Waterways, Railways) of the present Treaty.

The laws and regulations in force on November 11th, 1918, in the territory of the Saar Basin (except those enacted in consequence of the state of war) shall continue to apply.

If, for general reasons or to bring these laws and regulations into accord with the provisions of the present Treaty, it is necessary to introduce modifications, these shall be decided on, and put into effect by the Governing Commission, after consultation with the elected representatives of the inhabitants in such a manner as the Commission may determine.

No modification may be made in the legal régime for the exploitation of the mines, provided for in paragraph 12, without the French State being previously consulted, unless such modification results from a general regulation respecting labour adopted by the League of Nations.

In fixing the conditions and hours of labour for men, women and children, the Governing Commission is to take into consideration the wishes expressed by the local labour organisations, as well as the principles adopted by the League of Nations.

24.

Subject to the provisions of §4 no rights of the inhabitants of the Saar Basin acquired or in process of acquisition at the date of the coming into force of this Treaty, in respect of any insurance system of Germany or in respect of any pension of any kind, are affected by any of the provisions of the present Treaty.

Germany and the Government of the territory of the Saar Basin will preserve and continue all of the aforesaid rights.

25.

The civil and criminal courts existing in the territory of the Saar Basin shall continue.

A civil and criminal court will be established by the Governing Commission to hear appeals from the decisions of the said courts and to decide matters for which these courts are not competent.

The Governing Commission will be responsible for settling the organisation and jurisdiction of the said court.

Justice will be rendered in the name of the Governing Commission.

26.

The Governing Commission will alone have the power of levying taxes and dues in the territory of the Saar Basin.

These taxes and dues will be exclusively applied to the needs of the territory.

The fiscal system existing on November 11th, 1918, will be maintained as far as possible and no new tax except customs duties may be imposed without previously consulting the elected representatives of the inhabitants.

27.

The present stipulations will not affect the existing nationality of the inhabitants of the territory of the Saar Basin.

No hindrance shall be placed in the way of those who wish to acquire a different nationality, but in such case the acquisition of the new nationality will involve the loss of any other.

28.

Under the control of the Governing Commission the inhabitants will retain their local assemblies, their religious liberties, their schools and their language.

The right of voting will not be exercised for any assemblies other than the local assemblies, and will belong to every inhabitant over the age of twenty years, without distinction of sex.

29.

Any of the inhabitants of the Saar Basin who may desire to leave the territory will have full liberty to retain in it their immovable property or to sell it at fair prices, and to remove their movable property free of any charges.

30.

There will be no military service, whether compulsory or voluntary, in the territory of the Saar Basin, and the construction of fortifications therein is forbidden.

Only a local gendarmerie for the maintenance of order may be established.

It will be the duty of the Governing Commission to provide in all cases for the protection of persons and property in the Saar Basin.

31.

The territory of the Saar Basin as defined by Article 48 of the present Treaty shall be subjected to the French customs régime. The receipts from the customs duties on goods intended for local consumption shall be included in the budget of the said territory after deduction of all costs of collection.

No export tax shall be imposed upon metallurgical products or coal exported from the said territory to Germany, nor upon German exports for the use of the industries of the territory of the Saar Basin.

Natural or manufactured products originating in the Basin in transit over German territory and similarly German products in transit over the territory of the Basin shall be free of all customs duties.

Products which both originate in and pass from the Basin into Germany shall be free of import duties for a period of five years from the date of the coming into force of the present Treaty, and during the same period articles imported from Germany into the territory of the Basin for local consumption shall likewise be free of import duties.

During these five years the French Government reserves to itself the right of limiting to the annual average of the quantities imported into Alsace-Lorraine and France in the years 1911 to 1913 the quantites which may be sent into France of all articles coming from the Basin, which include raw materials and semi-manufactured goods imported duty free from Germany. Such average shall be determined after reference to all available official information and statistics.

No prohibition or restriction shall be imposed upon the circulation of French money in the territory of the Saar Basin.

The French State shall have the right to use French money in all purchases, payments and contracts connected with the exploitation of the mines or their accessories and subsidiaries.

33.

The Governing Commission shall have power to decide all questions arising from the interpretation of the preceding provisions.

France and Germany agree that any dispute involving a difference of opinion as to the interpretation of the said provisions shall in the same way be submitted to the Governing Commission, and the decision of a majority of the Commission shall be binding on both countries.

Chapter III. Plebiscite.

34.

At the termination of a period of fifteen years from the coming into force of the present Treaty, the population of the territory of the Saar Basin will be called upon to indicate their desires in the following manner:—

A vote will take place by communes or districts, on the three following alternatives:—(a) maintenance of the régime established by the present Treaty and by this Annex; (b) union with France; (c) union with Germany.

All persons without distinction of sex, more than twenty years old at the date of the voting, resident in the territory at the date of the signature of the present Treaty, will have the right to vote.

The other conditions, methods and the date of the voting shall be fixed by the Council of the League of Nations in such a way as to secure the liberty, secrecy and trustworthiness of the voting.

35.

The League of Nations shall decide on the sovereignty under which the territory is to be placed, taking into account the wishes of the inhabitants as expressed by the voting.

(a) If, for the whole or part of the territory, the League of Nations decides in favour of the maintenance of the régime established by the present Treaty and this Annex, Germany hereby agrees to make such renunciation of her sovereignty in favour of the League of Nations as the latter shall deem necessary. It will be the duty of the League of Nations to take appropriate steps to adapt the régime definitely adopted to the permanent welfare of the territory and the general interests.

(b) If for the whole or part of the territory, the League of Nations decides in favour of union with France, Germany hereby agrees to cede to France in accordance with the decision of the League of Nations all rights and title over the territory specified by the League.

(c) If, for the whole or part of the territory, the League of Nations decides in favour of union with Germany, if will be the duty of the League of Nations to cause the German Government to be re-established in the government of the territory specified by the League.

If, the League of Nations decides in favour of the union of the whole or part of the territory of the Saar Basin with Germany, France's rights of ownership in the mines situated in such part of the territory will be repurchased by Germany in their entirety at a price payable in gold. The price to be paid will be fixed by three experts, one nominated by Germany, one by France, and one, who shall be neither a Frenchman nor a German, by the Council of the League of Nations; the decision of the experts will be given by a majority.

If, within the six months following the decision of the experts, the price above referred to has not been paid by Germany, the said territory will be finally acquired by France.

37.

If, in consequence of the repurchase provided for in paragraph 36, the ownership of the mines or any part of them is transferred to Germany, the French State and French nationals shall have the right to purchase such amount of coal of the Saar Basin as their industrial and domestic needs are found at that time to require. An equitable arrangement regarding amounts of coal, duration of contract, and prices will be fixed in due time by the Council of the League of Nations.

38.

It is understood that France and Germany may by special agreements concluded before the time fixed for the payment of the price for the repurchase of the mines, modify the provisions of paragraphs 36 and 37.

39.

The Council of the League of Nations shall make such provisions as may be necessary for the establishment of the régime which is to take effect after the decisions of the League of Nations mentioned in paragraph 35 have become operative, including an equitable apportionment of any obligations of the Government of the territory of the Saar Basin arising from loans raised by the Commission or from other causes.

From the coming into force of the new régime, the powers of the Governing Commission will terminate, except in the case provided for in paragraph 35 (a).

40.

In all matters dealt with in the present Annex, the decisions of the Council of the League of Nations will be taken by a majority.

Section V. Alsace-Lorraine.

The High Contracting Powers, recognising the moral obligation to redress the wrong done by Germany in 1871 both to the rights of France and to the wishes of the population of Alsace and Lorraine, which were separated from their country in spite of the solemn protest of their representatives at the Assembly of Bordeaux,

Agree upon the following articles:

ARTICLE 51.

The territories which were ceded to Germany in accordance with the Preliminaries of Peace signed at Versailles on the 26th February, 1871 and the Treaty of Frankfort of the 10th May, 1871, are restored to French sovereignty as from the date of the Armistice of the 11th November, 1918.

The provisions of the Treaties establishing the delimitation of the frontiers before 1871 shall be restored.

ARTICLE 52.

The German Government shall hand over without delay to the French Government all archives, registers, plans, titles and documents of every kind concerning the civil, military, financial, judicial or other administrations of the territories restored to French sovereignty. If any of these documents, archives, registers, titles or plans have been misplaced, they will be restored by the German Government on the demand of the French Government.

ARTICLE 53.

Separate agreements shall be made between France and Germany dealing with the interests of the inhabitants of the territories referred to in Article 51, particularly as regards their civil rights, their business and the exercise of their professions, it being understood that Germany undertakes as from the present date to recognise and accept the regulations laid down in the Annex hereto regarding the nationality of the inhabitants or natives of the said territories, not to claim at any time or in any place whatsoever as German nationals those who shall have been declared on any ground to be French, to receive all others in her territory, and to conform, as regards the property of German nationals in the territories indicated in article 51, with the provisions of Article 297 and the Annex to Section IV of Part X (Economic Clauses) of the present Treaty.

Those German nationals who without acquiring French nationality shall receive permission from the French Government to reside in the said territories shall not be subjected to the provisions of the said Article.

ARTICLE 54.

Those persons who have regained French nationality in virtue of paragraph 1 of the Annex hereto, will be held to be Alsace-Lorrainers for the purposes of the present Section.

The persons referred to in Paragraph 2 of the said Annex will from the day on which they have claimed French nationality be held to be Alsace-Lorrainers with retroactive effect as from the 11th November, 1918. For those whose application is rejected, the privilege will terminate at the date of the refusal.

Such juridical persons will also have the status of Alsace-Lorrainers as have been recognised as possessing this quality, whether by the French administrative authorities or by a judicial decision.

ARTICLE 55.

The territories referred to in Article 51 shall return to France, free and quit of all public debts, under the conditions laid down in Article 255 of Part IX (Financial Clauses) of the present Treaty.

ARTICLE 56.

In conformity with the provisions of article 256 of Part IX (Financial Clauses) of the present Treaty France shall enter into possession of all property and estate within the territories referred to in Article 51, which belong to the German Empire or German States, without any payment or credit on this account to any of the States ceding the territories.

This provision applies to all movable or immovable property of public or private domain together with all rights whatsoever belonging to the German Empire or German States or to their administrative areas.

Crown property and the property of the former Emperor or other German sovereigns shall be assimilated to property of the public domain.

ARTICLE 57.

Germany shall not take any action, either by means of stamping or by any other legal or administrative measures not applying equally to the rest of her territory, which may be to the detriment of the legal value or redeemability of German monetary instruments or monies which, at the date of the signature of the present Treaty, are legally current, and at that date are in the possession of the French Government.

ARTICLE 58.

A special Convention will determine the conditions for repayment in marks of the exceptional war expenditure advanced during the course of the war by Alsace-Lorraine or by public bodies in Alsace-Lorraine on account of the Empire in accordance with German law, such as payment to the families of persons mobilised, requisitions, billeting of troops, and assistance to persons who have been expelled.

In fixing the amount of these sums Germany shall be credited with that portion which Alsace-Lorraine would have contributed to the Empire to meet the expenses resulting from these payments, this contribution being calculated according to the proportion of the Imperial revenues derived from Alsace-Lorraine in 1913.

ARTICLE 59.

The French Government will collect for its own account the Imperial taxes, duties and dues of every kind leviable in the territories referred to in Article 51 and not collected at the time of the Armistice of the 11th November, 1918.

ARTICLE 60.

The German Government shall without delay restore to Alsace-Lorrainers (individuals, juridical persons and public institutions) all property, rights and interests belonging to them on the 11th November, 1918, in so far as these are situated in German territory.

ARTICLE 61.

The German Government undertakes to continue and complete without delay the execution of the financial clauses regarding Alsace-Lorraine contained in the Armistice Conventions.

ARTICLE 62.

The German Government undertakes to bear the expense of all civil and military pensions which had been earned in Alsace-Lorraine on the date of the 11th November, 1918, and the maintenance of which was a charge on the budget of the German Empire.

The German Government shall furnish each year the funds necessary for the payment in francs, at the average rate of exchange for that year, of the sums in marks to which persons resident in Alsace-Lorraine would have been entitled if Alsace-Lorraine had remained under German jurisdiction.

ARTICLE 63.

For the purposes of the obligation assumed by Germany in Part VIII (Reparations) of the present Treaty to give compensation for damages caused to the civil populations of the Allied and Associated countries in the form of fines, the inhabitants of the territories referred to in Article 51 shall be assimilated to the above-mentioned populations.

ARTICLE 64.

The regulations concerning the control of the Rhine and of the Moselle are laid down in Part XII (Ports, Waterways and Railways) of the present Treaty.

ARTICLE 65.

Within a period of three weeks after the coming into force of the present Treaty, the port of Strasburg and the port of Kehl shall be constituted, for a period of seven years, a single unit, from the point of view of exploitation.

The administration of this single unit will be carried on by a manager named by the Central Rhine Commission, which shall also have power to remove him. He shall be of French nationality. He will reside in Strasburg and will be subject to the supervision of the Central Rhine Commission.

There will be established in the two ports Free Zones in conformity with Part XII (Ports, Waterways and Railways) of the present Treaty.

A special Convention between France and Germany, which shall be submitted to the approval of the Central Rhine Commission, will fix the details of this organisation, particularly as regards finance.

It is understood that for the purpose of the present Article the port of Kehl includes the whole of the area necessary for the movements of the port and the trains which serve it, including the harbour, quays and railroads, platforms, cranes, sheds and warehouses, silos, elevators and hydro-electric plants, which make up the equipment of the port.

The Germn Government undertakes to carry out all measures which shall be required of it in order to assure that all the making-up and switching of trains arriving at or departing from Kehl, whether for the right bank or the left bank of the Rhine, shall be carried on in the best conditions possible.

All property rights shall be safeguarded. In particular the administration of the Ports shall not prejudice any property rights of the French or Baden railroads.

Equality of treatment as respects traffic shall be assured in both ports to the nationals, vessels and goods of every country.

In case at the end of the sixth year France shall consider that the progress made in the improvement of the port of Strasburg still requires a prolongation of this temporary régime, she may ask for such prolongation from the Central Rhine Commission, which may grant an extension for a period not exceeding three years.

Throughout the whole period of any such extension the free zones above provided for shall be maintained.

Pending appointment of the first manager by the Central Rhine Commission a provisional manager who shall be of French nationality may be appointed by the Principal Allied and Associated Powers subject to the foregoing provisions.

For all purposes of the present Article the Central Rhine Commission will decide by a majority of votes.

ARTICLE 66.

The railway and other bridges across the Rhine now existing within the limits of Alsace-Lorraine shall, as to all their parts and their whole length, be the property of the French State, which shall ensure their upkeep.

ARTICLE 67.

The French Government is substituted in all the rights of the German Empire over all the railways which were administered by the Imperial railway administration and which are actually working or under construction.

The same shall apply to the rights of the Empire with regard to railway and tramway concessions within the territories referred to in Article 51.

This substitution shall not entail any payment on the part of the French State.

The frontier railway stations shall be established by a subsequent agreement, it being stipulated in advance that on the Rhine frontier they shall be situated on the right bank.

ARTICLE 68.

In accordance with the provisions of Article 268 of Chapter I of Section I of Part X (Economic Clauses) of the present Treaty, for a period of five years from the coming into force of the present Treaty, natural or manufactured products originating in and coming from the territories referred to in Article 51 shall, on importation into German customs territory, be exempt from all customs duty.

The French Government shall fix each year, by decree communicated to the German Government, the nature and amount of the products which shall enjoy this exemption.

The amount of each product which may be thus sent annually into Germany shall not exceed the average of the amounts sent annually in the years 1911–1913.

Further, during the period of five years above mentioned, the German Government shall allow the free export from Germany and the free re-importation into Germany, exempt from all customs duties and other charges (including internal charges), of yarns, tissues, and other textile materials or textile products of any kind and in any condition, sent from Germany into the territories referred to in Article 51, to be subjected there to any finishing process, such as bleaching, dyeing, printing, mercerisation, gassing, twisting or dressing.

ARTICLE 69.

During a period of ten years from the coming into force of the present Treaty, central electric supply works situated in German territory and formerly furnishing electric power to the territories referred to in Article 51 or to any establishment the working of which passes permanently or temporarily from Germany to France, shall be required to continue such supply up to the amount of consumption corresponding to the undertakings and contracts current on the 11th November, 1918.

Such supply shall be furnished according to the contracts in force and at a rate which shall not be higher than that paid to the said works by German nationals.

ARTICLE 70.

It is understood that the French Government preserves its right to prohibit in the future in the territories referred to in Article 51 all new German participation:

1. In the management or exploitation of the public domain and of public services, such as railways, navigable waterways, water works, gas works, electric power, etc.

2. In the ownership of mines and quarries of every kind and in enterprises connected therewith;

3. In metallurgical establishments, even though their working may not be connected with that of any mine.

ARTICLE 71.

As regards the territories referred to in Article 51, Germany renounces on behalf of herself and her nationals as from the 11th November, 1918, all rights under the law of the 25th May, 1910, regarding the trade in potash salts, and generally under any stipulations for the intervention of German organisations in the working of the potash mines. Similarly, she renounces on behalf of herself and her nationals all rights under any agreements, stipulations or laws, which may exist to her benefit with regard to other products of the aforesaid territories.

ARTICLE 72.

The settlement of the questions relating to debts contracted before the 11th November, 1918, between the German Empire and the German States or their nationals residing in Germany on the one part and Alsace-Lorrainers residing in Alsace-Lorraine on the other part shall be effected in accordance with the provisions of Section III of Part X (Economic Clauses) of the present Treaty, the expression "before the war," therein being replaced by the expression "before the 11th November, 1918." The rate of exchange applicable in the case of such settlement shall be the average rate quoted on the Geneva Exchange during the month preceding the 11th November, 1918.

There shall be established in the territories referred to in Article 51, for the settlement of the aforesaid debts under the conditions laid down in Section III of Part X (Economic Clauses) of the present Treaty, a special clearing office, it being understood that this office shall be regarded as a "central office" under the provisions of paragraph 1 of the Annex to the said Section.

ARTICLE 73.

The private property, rights and interests of Alsace-Lorrainers in Germany will be regulated by the stipulations of Section IV of Part X (Economic Clauses) of the present Treaty.

ARTICLE 74.

The French Government reserves the right to retain and liquidate all the property, rights and interests which German nationals or societies controlled by Germany possessed in the territories referred to in Article 51 on November 11, 1918, subject to the conditions laid down in the last paragraph of Article 53 above.

Germany will directly compensate its nationals who may have been dispossessed by the aforesaid liquidations.

The product of these liquidations shall be applied in accordance with the stipulations of Sections III and IV of Part X (Economic Clauses) of the present Treaty.

ARTICLE 75.

Notwithstanding the stipulations of Section V of Part X (Economic Clauses) of the present Treaty, all contracts made before the date of the promulgation in Alsace-Lorraine of the French decree of 30th November, 1918, between Alsace-Lorrainers (whether individuals or juridical persons) or others resident in Alsace-Lorraine on the one part and the German Empire or German States and their nationals resident in Germany on the other part, the execution of which has been suspended by the armistice or by subsequent French legislation, shall be maintained.

Nevertheless, any contract of which the French Government shall notify the cancellation to Germany in the general interest within a period of six months from the date of the coming into force of the present Treaty, shall be annulled except in respect of any debt or other pecuniary obligation arising out of any act done or money paid thereunder before the 11th November, 1918.

With regard to prescriptions, limitations, and forfeitures in Alsace-Lorraine, the provisions of Articles 300 and 301 of Section V, Part X (Economic Clauses) shall be applied with the substitution for the expression "outbreak of war" of the expression "11th November, 1918," and for the expression "duration of the war" of the expression "period from the 11th November, 1918, to date of the coming into force of the present Treaty."

ARTICLE 76.

Questions concerning rights in industrial, literary or artistic property of Alsace-Lorrainers shall be regulated in accordance with the general stipulations of Section VII of Part X (Economic Clauses) of the present Treaty, it being understood that Alsace-Lorrainers holding rights of this nature under German legislation will preserve full and entire enjoyment of those rights on German territory.

ARTICLE 77.

The German Government undertakes to pay over to the French Government such proportion of all reserves accumulated by the Empire or by public or private bodies dependent upon it, for the purposes of disability and old age insurance as would fall to the disability and old age insurance fund at Strasburg.

The same shall apply in respect of the capital and reserves accumulated in Germany falling legitimately to other social insurance funds, to miners' superannuation funds, to the fund of the railways of Alsace-Lorraine, to other superannuation organisation established for the benefit of the personnel of public administrations and institutions operating in Alsace-Lorraine, and also in respect of the capital and reserves due by the insurance fund of private employees at Berlin, by reason of engagements entered into for the benefit of insured persons of that category resident in Alsace-Lorraine.

A special Convention shall determine the conditions and procedure of these transfers.

ARTICLE 78.

With regard to the execution of judgments, orders and prosecutions, the following rules shall be applied:

1. All civil and commercial judgments which shall have been given since the 3rd August, 1914, by the Courts of Alsace-Lorraine between Alsace-Lorrainers, or between Alsace-Lorrainers and foreigners, or between foreigners, and which shall not have been appealed from before the 11th November, 1918, shall be regarded as final and capable of being fully executed.

When the judgment has been given between Alsace-Lorrainers and Germans or between Alsace-Lorrainers and subjects of the allies of Germany, it shall only be capable of execution after the issue of an exequatur by the corresponding new tribunal in the restored territory referred to in Article 51.

2. All judgments given by German Courts since the 3rd August, 1914, against Alsace-Lorrainers for political crimes or misdemeanors shall be regarded as null and void.

3. All sentences passed since the 11th November, 1918, by the Imperial Court of Leipzig on appeals against the decisions of the Courts of Alsace-Lorraine shall be regarded as null and void and shall be so pronounced. The papers in regard to the cases in which such sentences have been given shall be returned to the Courts of Alsace-Lorraine concerned.

All appeals to the Imperial Court against decisions of the Courts of Alsace-Lorraine shall be suspended. In the cases referred to above the papers shall be returned under the aforesaid conditions for transfer without delay to the French Cour de Cassation which shall be competent to decide them.

4. All prosecutions in Alsace-Lorraine for offences committed during the period between the 11th November, 1918, and the coming into force of the present Treaty will be conducted under German law except in so far as this has been modified by decrees duly published on the spot by the French authorities.

5. All other questions as to competence, procedure or administration of justice, shall be determined by a special Convention between France and Germany.

ARTICLE 79.

The stipulations as to nationality contained in the Annex hereto shall be considered as of equal force with the provisions of the present Section.

All other questions concerning Alsace-Lorraine which are not regulated by the present Section and the Annex thereto or by the general provisions of the present Treaty, will form the subject of further conventions between France and Germany.

ANNEX.

As from the 11th November, 1918, the following persons are ipso facto reinstated in French nationality:

1. Persons who lost French nationality by the application of the Franco-German Treaty of the 10th May, 1871, and who have not since that date acquired any nationality other than German;

2. The legitimate or natural descendants of the persons referred to in the immediately preceding paragraph, with the exceptions of those whose ascendants in the paternal line include a German who migrated into Alsace-Lorraine after the 15th July, 1870;

3. All persons born in Alsace-Lorraine of unknown parents, or whose nationality is unknown.

2.

Within the period of one year from the coming into force of the present Treaty, persons included in any of the following categories may claim French nationality:

1. All persons not restored to French nationality under paragraph 1 above, whose ascendants include a Frenchman or Frenchwoman who lost French nationality under the conditions referred to in the said paragraph;

2. All foreigners, not nationals of a German State, who acquired the status of a citizen of Alsace-Lorraine before the 3rd August, 1914;

3. All Germans domiciled in Alsace-Lorraine, if they have been so domiciled since a date previous to the 15th July, 1870, or if one of their ascendants was at that date domiciled in Alsace-Lorraine;

4. All Germans born or domiciled in Alsace-Lorraine, who have served in the Allied or Associated armies during the present war, and their descendants;

5. All persons born in Alsace-Lorraine before the 10th May, 1871, of foreign parents, and the descendants of such persons;

6. The husband or wife of any person whose French nationality may have been restored under paragraph 1, or who may have claimed and obtained French nationality in accordance with the preceding provisions.

The legal representative of a minor may exercise, on behalf of that minor, the right to claim French nationality; and if that right has not been exercised, the minor may claim French nationality within the year following his majority.

Except in the case provided for in No. 6 of the present paragraph, the French authorities reserve to themselves the right, in individual cases, to reject the claim to French nationality.

3.

Subject to the provisions of paragraph 2, Germans born or domiciled in Alsace-Lorraine shall not acquire French nationality by reason of the restoration of Alsace-Lorraine to France, even though they may have the status of citizens of Alsace-Lorraine.

They may acquire French nationality only by naturalisation, on condition of having been domiciled in Alsace-Lorraine from a date previous to the 3rd August, 1914, and of submitting proof of unbroken residence within the restored territory for a period of three years from the 11th November, 1918.

France will be solely responsible for their diplomatic and consular protection from the date of their application for French naturalisation.

4.

The French Government shall determine the procedure by which reinstatement in French nationality as of right shall be effected, and the conditions under which decisions shall be given upon claims to such nationality and applications for naturalisation, as provided by the present Annex.

Section VI. Austria.

ARTICLE 80.

Germany acknowledges and will respect strictly the independence of Austria, within the frontiers which may be fixed in a Treaty between that State and the Principal allied and associated Powers; she agrees that this independence shall be inalienable, except with the consent of the Council of the League of Nations.

Section VII. Tchecko-Slovak State.

ARTICLE 81.

Germany, in conformity with the action already taken by the Allied and Associated Powers, recognizes the complete independence of the Tchecko-Slovak State which will include the autonomous territory of the Ruthenians to the south of the Carpathians. Germany hereby recognizes the frontiers of this State as determined by the Principal Allied and Associated Powers and the other interested States.

ARTICLE 82.

The old frontier as it existed on August 3, 1914, between Austria-Hungary and the German Empire will constitute the frontier between Germany and the Tchecko-Slovak State.

ARTICLE 83.

Germany renounces in favour of the Tchecko-Slovak State all rights and title over the portion of the territory of Silesia lying between the old Austro-German frontier and a line to be fixed on the ground, starting from a point in the course of the Oder, immediately south of the Ratibor-Oderberg railway, and running in a northwesterly direction, passing west of Kranowitz and east of Katscher so as to rejoin the old Austrian frontier at the south-eastern point of its salient about 5 kilometres west of Leobschütz.

A Commission composed of seven members, five nominated by the Principal Allied and Associated Powers, one by Poland and one by the Tchecko-Slovak State, will be appointed fifteen days after the coming into force of the present Treaty to trace on the spot the frontier line between Poland and the Tchecko-Slovak State.

The decisions of this Commission will be taken by a majority and shall be binding on the parties concerned.

ARTICLE 84.

German nationals habitually resident in any of the territories recognized as forming part of the Tchecko-Slovak State will obtain Tchecko-Slovak nationality ispo facto and lose their German nationality.

ARTICLE 85.

Within a period of two years from the coming into force of the present Treaty, German nationals over eighteen years of age habitually resident in any of the territories recognized as forming part of the Tchecko-Slovak State will be entitled to opt for German nationality. Tchecko-Slovaks who are German nationals and are habitually resident in Germany will have a similar right to opt for Tchecko-Slovak nationality.

Option by a husband will cover his wife and option by parents will cover their children under eighteen years of age.

Persons who have exercised the above right to opt must within the succeeding twelve months transfer their place of residence to the State for which they have opted.

They will be entitled to retain their landed property in the territory of the other State where they had their place of residence before exercising the right to opt. They may carry with them their moveable property of every description. No export or import duties may be imposed upon them in connection with the removal of such property.

Within the same period Tchecko-Slovaks who are German nationals and are in a foreign country will be entitled, in the absence of any provisions to the contrary in the foreign law, and if they have not acquired the foreign nationality, to obtain Tchecko-Slovak nationality and lose their German nationality by complying with the requirements laid down by the Tchecko-Slovak State.

ARTICLE 86.

The Tchecko-Slovak State accepts and agrees to embody in a Treaty with the Principal Allied and Associated Powers such provisions as may be deemed necessary by the said Powers to protect the interests of inhabitants of that State who differ from the majority of the population in race, language or religion.

The Tchecko-Slovak State further accepts and agrees to embody in a Treaty with the said Powers such provisions as they may deem necessary to protect freedom of transit and equitable treatment of the commerce of other nations.

The proportion and nature of the financial obligations of Germany and Prussia which the Tchecko-Slovak State will have to assume on account of the Silesian territory placed under its sovereignty will be determined in accordance with Article 254 of Part IX (Financial Clauses) of the present Treaty.

Subsequent agreements will decide all questions not decided by the present Treaty which may arise in consequence of the cession of the said territory.

Section VIII. Poland.

ARTICLE 87.

Germany, in conformity with the action already taken by the Allied and Associated Powers, recognizes the complete independence of Poland, and renounces in her favour all rights and title over the territory bounded by the Baltic Sea; the eastern frontier of Germany as laid down in Article 27 of Part II (Boundaries of Germany) of the present Treaty; the frontier of the Tchecko-Slovak State from a point situated 8 kilometers to the East of Neustadt to its meeting point with the former frontier between Germany and Austria-Hungary; this last frontier to the meeting point of the former frontiers of Germany, Austria-Hungary and Russia; the former frontier between Germany and Russia to the point where it crosses the course of the Niemen, and then the northern frontier of East Prussia as laid down in Article 28 of Part II aforesaid.

The provisions of this article do not, however, apply to the territories of East Prussia and the Free City of Danzig, as defined in Article 28 of Part II (Boundaries of Germany) and in Article 100 of Section XI (Danzig) of this Part.

The boundaries of Poland not laid down in the present Treaty will be subsequently determined by the Principal Allied and Associated Powers.

ARTICLE 88.

A Commission consisting of seven members, five of whom shall be nominated by the Principal Allied and Associated Powers, one by Germany, and one by Poland, shall be constituted fifteen days after the coming into force of the present Treaty to delimit on the spot the frontier-line between Poland and Germany.

The decision of the Commission will be taken by a majority of votes and shall be binding upon the parties concerned.

ARTICLE 89.

Poland undertakes to grant to persons and to means of transport of whatever nationality, coming from or destined for East Prussia, the same rights of transit over Polish territory situated between East Prussia and Germany as she gives to her own nationals.

ARTICLE 90.

German nationals habitually resident in territories recognised as forming part of Poland will acquire Polish nationality ipso facto and will lose their German nationality.

German nationals, however, or their descendants who became resident in these territories after January 1, 1908, will not acquire Polish nationality without a special authorisation from the Polish State.

ARTICLE 91.

Within a period of two years after the coming into force of the present Treaty, German nationals over 18 years of age habitually resident in any of the territories recognised as forming part of Poland will be entitled to opt for German nationality.

Poles who are German nationals over 18 years of age and habitually resident in Germany will have a similar right to opt for Polish nationality.

Option by a husband will cover his wife and option by parents will cover their children under 18 years of age.

Persons who have exercised the above right to opt must within the succeeding twelve months transfer their place of residence to the State for which they have opted.

They will be entitled to retain their immovable property in the territory of the other State where they had their place of residence before exercising the right to opt.

They may carry with them their movable property of every description. No export or import duties or charges may be imposed upon them in connection with the removal of such property.

Within the same period Poles who are German nationals and are in a foreign country wil be entitled, in the absence of any provisions to the contrary in the foreign law, and if they have not acquired foreign nationality, to obtain Polish nationality and to lose their German nationality by complying with the requirements laid down by the Polish State.

ARTICLE 92.

The proportion and the nature of the financial liabilities of Germany and Prussia to be borne by Poland will be determined in accordance with Article 254 of Part IX (Financial Clauses) of the present Treaty.

There shall be excluded from the share of such financial liabilities assumed by Poland that portion of the debt which according to the finding of the Reparation Commission referred to in the above-mentioned Article, arises from measures adopted by the German and Prussian Governments with a view to German colonisation in Poland.

In fixing under Article 256 of the present Treaty the value of the property and possessions belonging to the German Empire and to the German States which pass to Poland with the territory transferred above, the Reparation Commission shall exclude from the valuation buildings, forests and other State property which belonged to the former kingdom of Poland; Poland shall acquire these properties free of all costs and charges.

Further agreements will regulate all questions arising out of the cession of the above territory which are not regulated by the present Treaty.

ARTICLE 93.

Poland accepts and agrees to embody in a Treaty with the Principal Allied and Associated Powers such provisions as may be deemed necessary by the said Powers to protect the interests of inhabitants of Poland who differ from the majority of the population in race, language, or religion.

Poland further accepts and agrees to embody in a Treaty with the said Powers such provisions as they may deem necessary to protect freedom of transit and equitable treatment of the commerce of other nations.

Section IX. East Prussia.

ARTICLE 94.

In the area between the southern frontier of East Prussia, as described in Article 28 of Part II (Frontiers of Germany) of the present Treaty, and the line described below, the inhabitants will be called upon to indicate by a vote the State to which they wish to belong:

The western and northern boundary of Regierungsbezirk Allenstein to its junction with the boundary between the Kreise of Oletsko and Angerburg; thence, the northern boundary of the Kreise of Oletsko to its junction with the old frontier of East Prussia.

ARTICLE 95.

The German troops and authorities will be withdrawn from the area defined above within a period not exceeding fifteen days after the coming into force of the present Treaty. Until the evacuation is completed they will abstain from all requisitions in money or in kind and from all measures injurious to the economic interests of the country.

On the expiration of the above-mentioned period the said area will be placed under the authority of an International Commission of five members appointed by the Principal Allied and Associated Powers. This Commission will have general powers of administration and, in particular, will be charged with the duty of arranging for the vote and of taking such measures as it may deem necessary to ensure its freedom, fairness and secrecy. The Commission will have all necessary authority to decide any questions to which the execution of these provisions may give rise. The Commission will make such arrangements as may be necessary for assistance in the exercise of its functions by officials chosen by itself from the local population; its decisions will be taken by a majority.

Every person, irrespective of sex, will be entitled to vote who:

(a) Is 20 years of age at the date of the coming into force of the present Treaty, and

(b) Was born within the area where the vote will take place or has been habitually resident there from a date to be fixed by the Commission.

Every person will vote in the commune where he is habitually resident or, if not habitually resident in the area, in the commune where he was born.

The result of the vote will be determined by commune (Gemeinde) according to the majority of the votes in each commune.

On the conclusion of the voting the number of votes cast in each commune will be communicated by the Commission to the Principal Allied and Associated Powers with a full report as to the taking of the vote and a recommendation as to the line which ought to be adopted as the boundary of East Prussia in this region. In this recommendation regard will be paid to the wishes of the inhabitants as shown by the vote and to the geographical and economic conditions of the locality. The Principal Allied and Associated Powers will then fix the frontier between East Prussia and Poland in this region.

If the line fixed by the Principal Allied and Associated Powers is such as to exclude from East Prussia any part of the territory defined in Article 94, the renunciation of its rights by Germany in favour of Poland, as provided in Article 87 above, will extend to the territories so excluded.

As soon as the line has been fixed by the Principal Allied and Associated Powers, the authorities administering East Prussia will be notified by the International Commission that they are free to take over the administration of the territory to the north of the line so fixed, which they shall proceed to do within one month of such notification and in the manner prescribed by the Commission. Within the same period and as prescribed by the Commission, the Polish Government must proceed to take over the administration of the territory to the south of the line. When the administration of the territory by the East Prussian and Polish authorities respectively has been provided for, the powers of the Commission will terminate.

Expenditure by the Commission, whether in the discharge of its own functions or in the administration of the territory, will be borne by the local revenues. East Prussia will be required to bear such proportion of any deficit as may be fixed by the Principal Allied and Associated Powers.

ARTICLE 96.

In the area comprising the Kreise of Stuhm and Rosenberg and the portion of the Kreis of Marienburg which is situated east of the Nogat and that of Marienwerder east of the Vistula, the inhabitants will be called upon to indicate by a vote, to be taken in each commune (Gemeinde), whether they desire the various communes situated in this territory to belong to Poland or to East Prussia.

ARTICLE 97.

The German troops and authorities will be withdrawn from the area defined in Article 96 within a period not exceeding fifteen days after the coming into force of the present Treaty. Until the evacuation is completed they will abstain from all requisitions in money or in kind and from all measures injurious to the economic interests of the country.

On the expiration of the above-mentioned period, the said area will be placed under the authority of an International Commission of five members appointed by the Principal Allied and Associated Powers. This Commission, supported if occasion arises by the necessary forces, will have general powers of administration and in particular will be charged with the duty of arranging for the vote and of taking such measures as it may deem necessary to ensure its freedom, fairness and secrecy. The Commission will conform as far as possible to the provisions of the present Treaty relating to the plebiscite in the Allenstein area; its decision will be taken by a majority.

Expenditure by the Commission, whether in the discharge of its own functions or in the administration of the territory, will be borne by the local revenues.

On the conclusion of the voting the number of votes cast in each commune will be communicated by the Commission to the Principal Allied and Associated Powers with a full report as to the taking of the vote and a recommendation as to the line which ought to be adopted as the boundary of East Prussia in this region. In this recommendation regard will be paid to the wishes of the inhabitants as shown by the vote and to the geographical and economic conditions of the locality. The Principal Allied and Associated Powers will then fix the frontier between East Prussia and Poland in this region, leaving in any case to Poland for the whole of the section bordering on the Vistula full and complete control of the river including the east bank as far east of the river as may be necessary for its regulation and improvement. Germany agrees that in any portion of the said territory which remains German, no fortifications shall at any time be erected.

The Principal Allied and Associated Powers will at the same time draw up regulations for assuring to the population of East Prussia to the fullest extent and under equitable conditions access to the Vistula and the use of it for themselves, their commerce and their boats.

The determination of the frontier and the foregoing regulations shall be binding upon all the parties concerned.

When the administration of the territory has been taken over by the East Prussian and Polish authorities respectively, the powers of the Commission will terminate.

ARTICLE 98.

Germany and Poland undertake, within one year of the conclusion of this Treaty, to enter into a Convention of which the terms, in case of difference, shall be settled by the Council of the League of Nations, with the object of securing, on the one hand to Germany full and adequate railroad facilities for communication between the rest of Germany and East Prussia over the intervening Polish territory, and on the other hand to Poland full and adequate railroad facilities for communication between Poland and the Free City of Danzig over any German territory that may, on the right bank of the Vistula, intervene between Poland and the Free City of Danzig.

Section X. Memel.

ARTICLE 99.

Germany renounces in favour of the Principal Allied and Associated Powers all rights and title over the territories included between the Baltic, the north eastern frontier of East Prussia as defined in Article 28 of Part II (Frontiers of Germany) of the present Treaty and the former frontier between Germany and Russia.

Germany undertakes to accept the settlement made by the Principal Allied and Associated Powers in regard to these territories, particularly in so far as concerns the nationality of the inhabitants.

Section XI. Free city of Danzig.

ARTICLE 100.

Germany renounces in favour of the Principal Allied and Associated Powers all rights and title over the territory comprised within the following limits:

from the Baltic Sea southwards to the point where the principal channels of navigation of the Nogat and the Vistula (Weichsel) meet:

the boundary of East Prussia as described in Article 28 of Part II. (Boundaries of Germany) of the present Treaty; thence the principal channel of navigation of the Vistula downstream to a point about 6 1/2 kilometres north of the bridge of Dirschau; thence north-west to point 5, 1 1/2 kilometres south-east of the church of Güttland:

a line to be fixed on the ground;

thence in a general westerly direction to the salient of the Kreis of Berent 8 1/2 kilometres north-east of Schöneck:

a line to be fixed on the ground passing between Mühlbanz on the south and Rambeltsch on the north;

thence the boundary of the Kreis of Berent westwards to the re-entrant which it forms 6 kilometres north-north-west of Schöneck; thence to a point on the median line of Lonkener See:

a line to be fixed on the ground passing north of Neu Fietz and Schatarpi and south of Barenhütte and Lonken; thence the median line of the Lonkener See to its northernmost point; thence to the southern end of Pollenziner See:

a line to be fixed on the ground;

thence the median line of Pollenziner See to its northernmost point; thence in a north-easterly direction to a point about 1 kilometre south of Koliebken Church, where the Danzig-Neustadt railway crosses a stream:

a line to be fixed on the ground passing south-east of Kamehlen, Krissau, Fidlin, Sulmin (Richthof), Mattern, Schäferei, and to the north-west of Neuendorf, Marschau, Czapielken, Hoch- and Klein-Kelpin, Pulvermühl, Renneberg and the towns of Olivia and Zoppot; thence the course of this stream to the Baltic Sea.

The boundaries described above are drawn on a German map scale 1/100,000, attached to the present Treaty (Map No. 4).

ARTICLE 101.

A Commission composed of three members appointed by the Principal Allied and Associated Powers, including a High Commissioner as President, one member appointed by Germany and one member appointed by Poland, shall be constituted within fifteen days of the coming into force of the present Treaty for the purpose of delimiting on the spot the frontier of the territory as described above, taking into account as far as possible the existing communal boundaries.

ARTICLE 102.

The city of Danzig together with the rest of the territory described in Article 100 is established as a Free City, and placed under the protection of the League of Nations.

ARTICLE 103.

A constitution for the Free City of Danzig shall be drawn up by the duly appointed representatives of the Free City in agreement with a High Commissioner to be appointed by the League of Nations. This constitution shall be placed under the guarantee of the League of Nations.

The High Commissioner will also be entrusted with the duty of dealing in the first instance with all differences arising between Poland and the Free City of Danzig in regard to this treaty or any arrangements or agreements made thereunder.

The High Commissioner shall reside at Danzig.

ARTICLE 104.

A Convention, the terms of which shall be fixed by the Principal Allied and Associated Powers, shall be concluded between the Polish Government and the Free City of Danzig with the following objects:

(1) To effect the inclusion of the Free City of Danzig within the Polish Customs frontiers, and to establish a free area in the port.

(2) To ensure to Poland without any restriction the free use and service of all waterways, docks, basins, wharves and other works within the territory of the Free City necessary for Polish imports and exports.

(3) To ensure to Poland the control and administration of the Vistula and of the whole railway system within the Free City, except such street and other railways as serve primarily the needs of the Free City, and of postal, telegraphic and telephonic communication between Poland and the port of Danzig.

(4) To ensure to Poland the right to develop and improve the waterways, docks, basins, wharves, railways and other works and means of communication mentioned in this article, as well as to lease or purchase through appropriate processes such land and other property as may be necessary for these purposes.

(5) To provide against any discrimination within the Free City of Danzig to the detriment of citizens of Poland and other persons of Polish origin or speech.

(6) To provide that the Polish Government shall undertake the conduct of the foreign relations of the Free City of Danzig as well as the diplomatic protection of citizens of that city when abroad.

ARTICLE 105.

On the coming into force of the present Treaty German nationals ordinarily resident in the territory of the Free City of Danzig will ipso facto become citizens of that city and will lose their German nationality.

ARTICLE 106.

Within a period of two years from the coming into force of the present Treaty, German nationals over 18 years of age ordinarily resident in the territory described in Article 100 will have the right to opt for German nationality.

Option by a husband will cover his wife and option by parents will cover their children less than 18 years of age.

All persons who exercise the right of option referred to above must during the ensuing twelve months transfer their place of residence to Germany.

These persons will be entitled to preserve the immovable property possessed by them in the territory of the Free City of Danzig. They may carry with them their movable property of every description. No export or import duties shall be imposed upon them in this connection.

ARTICLE 107.

All property situated within the territory of the Free City of Danzig belonging to the German Empire or to any German State shall pass to the Principal Allied and Associated Powers for transfer to the Free City of Danzig or to the Polish State as they may consider equitable.

ARTICLE 108.

The proportion and nature of the financial liabilities of Germany and of Prussia to be borne by the Free City of Danzig shall be fixed in accordance with Article 254 of Part IX (Financial Clauses) of the present Treaty.

All other questions which may arise from the cession of the territory referred to in Article 100 shall be settled by further agreements.

Section XII. Schleswig.

ARTICLE 109.

The frontier between Germany and Denmark shall be fixed in conformity with the wishes of the population.

For this purpose, the population inhabiting the territories of the former German Empire situated to the north of a line, from East to West, (shown by a blue line on the map No. 3, annexed to the present Treaty):

starting in the Schleimünde south of Lootsen Island and following the course of the Schlei upstream, then leaving the Schlei and turning south-west so as to pass south-east of Schleswig, Haddeby and Busdorf and north-west of Fahrdorf, and to meet the Reider Au north-west of Jagel.

following the course of the Reider Au and then the course of the river Treene to a point north-east of Friedrichstadt.

turning south to meet the river Eider passing east of Friedrichstadt, thence the course of the Eider to the North Sea, shall be called upon to pronounce by a vote which will be taken under the following conditions:

1. Within a period not exceeding ten days from the coming into force of the present Treaty, the German troops and authorities (including the Oberpräsidentea, Regierungs-präsidenten, Landräthe, Amtsvorsteher, Oberbürgermeister shall evacuate the zone lying to the north of the line above fixed.

Within the same period the Workmen's and Soldiers' Councils which have been constituted in this zone shall be dissolved; members of such Councils who are natives of another region and are exercising their functions at the date of the coming into force of the present Treaty, or who have gone out of office since the 1st March, 1919, shall also be evacuated.

The said zone shall immediately be placed under the authority of an International Commission, composed of five members, of whom three will be designated by the Principal Allied and Associated Powers; the Norwegian and Swedish Governments will each be requested to designate a member; in the event of their failing to do so, these two members will be chosen by the Principal Allied and Associated Powers.

The Commission, assisted in case of need by the necessary forces, shall have general powers of administration. In particular, it shall at once provide for filling the places of the evacuated German authorities, and if necessary shall itself give orders for their evacuation, and proceed to fill the places of such local authorities as may be required. It shall take all steps which it thinks proper to ensure the freedom, fairness, and secrecy of the vote. It shall be assisted by German and Danish technical advisers chosen by it from among the local population. Its decisions will be taken by a majority.

One half of the expenses of the International Commission and of the expenditure occasioned by the plebiscite shall be paid by Germany.

2. The right to vote shall be given to all persons, without distinction of sex, who:

(a) Have completed their twentieth year at the date of the coming into force of the present Treaty; and

(b) Were born in the zone in which the plebiscite is taken, or have been domiciled there since a date before the 1st January, 1900, or had been expelled by the German authorities without having retained their domicile there.

Every person will vote in the commune (Gemeinde) where he is domiciled or of which he is a native.

Military persons, officers, non-commissioned officers and soldiers of the German army, who are natives of the zone of Schleswig in which the plebiscite is taken, shall be given the opportunity to return to their native place in order to take part in the voting there.

3. In the section of the evacuated zone lying to the north of a line, from East to West (shown by a red line on map No. 3 which is annexed to the present Treaty):

passing south of the island of Alsen and following the median line of Flensburg Fjord, thence leaving the fjord about 6 kilometres north of Flensburg and following the course of the stream flowing past Kupfermühle upstream to a point north of Niehuus, thence, passing north of Pattburg and Ellund and south of Fröslee to meet the eastern boundary of the Kreis of Tondern at its junction with the boundary between the old jurisdictions of Slogs and Kjær (Slogs Herred and Kjær Herred), thence, the latter boundary to where it meets the Scheidebek, thence the course of the Scheidebek (Alte Au), Süder Au and Wied Au downstream successively to the point where the latter bends northwards about 1,500 metres west of Ruttebüll, thence, in a west-north-westerly direction to meet the North Sea north of Sieltoft, thence, passing north of the island of Sylt, the vote above provided for shall be taken within a period not exceeding three weeks after the evacuation of the country by the German troops and authorities.

The result will be determined by the majority of votes cast in the whole of this section. This result will be immediately communicated by the Commission to the Principal Allied and Associated Governments and proclaimed.

If the vote results in favour of the reincorporation of this territory in the Kingdom of Denmark, the Danish Government in agreement with the Commission will be entitled to effect its occupation with their military and administrative authorities immediately after the proclamation.

4. In the section of the evacuated zone situated to the south of the preceding section and lying to the north of a line from East to West (shown by a brown line on map No. 3, annexed to the present Treaty):

leaving the Baltic coast about 13 kilometres east-north-east of Flensburg, running south-west so as to pass south-east of: Sygum, Ringsberg, Munkbrarup, Adelby, Tastrup, Jarplund, Oversee, and north-west of: Langballigholz, Langballig, Bönstrup, Rüllschau, Weseby, Kleinwolstrup, Gross-Solt, thence westwards passing south of Frörup and north of Wanderup, thence in a south-westerly direction passing south-east of Oxlund, Stieglund and Ostenau and north-west of the villages on the Wanderup-Kollund road; thence in a north-westerly direction passing south-west of Löwenstedt, Joldelund, Goldelund and north-east of Kolkerheide and Högel to the bend of the Soholmer Au, about 1 kilometre east of Soholm where it meets the southern boundary of the Kreis of Tondern, thence, following this boundary to the North Sea, thence, passing south of the islands of Fohr and Amrum and north of the islands of Oland and Langeness, the vote will be taken within a period not exceeding five weeks after the plebiscite has been held in the preceding section.

The result will be determined by communes (Gemeinden), according to the majority of the votes cast in each commune (Gemeinde).

5. In the section of the evacuated zone situated to the south of the preceding section and to the north of the line which starts from the mouth of the Schlei (Sli) and ends at the mouth of the Eider, the vote will be taken within a period not exceeding two weeks after the plebiscite shall have been held in the second section.

The result will likewise be determined by communes (Gemeinden), in accordance with the majority of the votes cast in each commune (Gemeinde).

ARTICLE 110.

A Commission composed of seven members, five of whom shall be nominated by the Principal Allied and Associated Powers, one by Denmark, and one by Germany shall be constituted within fifteen days from the date when the final result of the vote is known, to trace the frontier line on the spot.

The decisions of the Commission will be taken by a majority of votes and shall be binding on the parties concerned.

ARTICLE 111.

Pending a delimitation on the spot, a frontier line will be fixed by the Principal Allied and Associated Powers according to a line based on the result of the voting, and proposed by the International Commission, and taking into account the particular geographical and economic conditions of the localities in question.

From that time the Danish Government may effect the occupation of these territories with the Danish civil and military authorities, and the German Government may reinstate up to the said frontier line the German civil and military authorities whom it has evacuated.

Germany hereby renounces definitively in favour of the Principal Allied and Associated Powers all rights of sovereignty over the territories situated to the north of the frontier line fixed in accordance with the above provisions. The Principal Allied and Associated Powers will hand over the said territories to Denmark.

ARTICLE 112.

All the inhabitants of the territory which is returned to Denmark will acquire Danish nationality ipso facto, and will lose their German nationality.

Persons, however, who had become habitually resident in this territory after the 1st October, 1918, will not be able to acquire Danish nationality without permission from the Danish Government.

ARTICLE 113.

Within two years from the date on which the sovereignty over the whole or part of the territory or Schleswig subjected to the plebiscite is restored to Denmark:

Any person over 18 years of age, born in the territory restored to Denmark, not habitually resident in this region, and possessing German nationality, will be entitled to opt for Denmark;

Any person over 18 years of age habitually resident in the territory restored to Denmark will be entitled to opt for Germany.

Option by a husband will cover his wife and option by parents will cover their children less than 18 years of age.

Persons who have exercised the above right to opt must within the ensuing twelve months transfer their place of residence to the State in favour of which they have opted.

They will be entitled to retain the immovable property which they own in the territory of the other State in which they were habitually resident before opting. They may carry with them their movable property of every description. No export or import duties may be imposed upon them in connection with the removal of such property.

ARTICLE 114.

The proportion and nature of the financial or other obligations of Germany and Prussia which are to be assumed by Denmark will be fixed in accordance with Article 254 of Part IX (Financial Clauses) of the present Treaty.

Further stipulations will determine any other questions arising out of the transfer to Denmark of the whole or part of the territory of which she was deprived by the Treaty of October 30, 1864.

Section XIII. Heligoland.

ARTICLE 115.

The fortifications, military establishments, and harbours of the Islands of Heligoland and Dune shall be destroyed under the supervision of the Principal Allied Governments by German labour and at the expense of Germany within a period to be determined by the said Governments.

The term "harbours" shall include the north-east mole, the west wall, the outer and inner breakwaters and reclaimed land within them, and all naval and military works, fortifications and buildings, constructed or under construction, between lines connecting the following positions taken from the British Admiralty chart No. 126 of 19 April, 1918:

a). lat. 54° 10′ 49″ N.; long. 7° 53′ 39″ E.; b). — 54° 10′ 35″ N.; — 7° 54′ 18″ E.; c). — 54° 10′ 14″ N.; — 7° 54′ 00″ E.; d). — 54° 10′ 17″ N.; — 7° 53′ 37″ E.; e). — 54° 10′ 44″ N.; — 7° 53′ 26″ E.

These fortifications, military establishments and harbours shall not be reconstructed; nor shall any similar works be constructed in future.

Section XIV. Russia and Russian States.

ARTICLE 116.

Germany acknowledges and agrees to respect as permanent and inalienable the independence of all the territories which were part of the former Russian Empire on August 1st, 1914.

In accordance with the provisions of Article 259 of Part IX (Financial Clauses) and Article 292 of Part X (Economic Clauses), Germany accepts definitely the abrogation of the Brest-Litovsk treaties and of all treaties, conventions and agreements entered into by her with the Maximalist Government in Russia.

The Allied and Associated Powers formally reserve the rights of Russia to obtain from Germany restitution and reparation based on the principles of the present Treaty.

ARTICLE 117.

Germany undertakes to recognize the full force of all treaties or agreements which may be entered into by the Allied and Associated Powers with States now existing or coming into existence in future in the whole or part of the former Empire of Russia as it existed on August 1, 1914, and to recognize the frontiers of any such States as determined therein.

PART IV.

GERMAN RIGHTS AND INTERESTS OUTSIDE GERMANY.

ARTICLE 118.

In territory outside her European frontiers as fixed by the present Treaty, Germany renounces all rights, titles and privileges whatever in or over territory which belonged to her or to her allies, and all rights, titles and privileges whatever their origin which she held as against the Allied and Associated Powers.

Germany undertakes immediately to recognise and to conform to the measures which may be taken now or in the future by the Principal Allied and Associated Powers, in agreement where necessary with third Powers, in order to carry the above stipulation into effect.

In particular Germany declares her acceptance of the following Articles relating to certain special subjects.

Section I. German Colonies.

ARTICLE 119.

Germany renounces in favour of the Principal Allied and Associated Powers all her rights and titles over her oversea possessions.

ARTICLE 120.

All movable and immovable property in such territories belonging to the German Empire or to any German State shall pass to the Government exercising authority over such territories, on the terms laid down in Article 257 of Part IX (Financial Clauses) of the present Treaty. The decision of the local courts in any dispute as to the nature of such property shall be final.

ARTICLE 121.

The provisions of Section I (Commercial Relations) and Section IV (Property, Rights and Interests) of Part X (Economic Clauses) of the present Treaty shall apply in the case of these territories whatever be the form of Government adopted for them.

ARTICLE 122.

The Government exercising authority over such territories may make such provisions as it thinks fit with reference to the repatriation from them of German nationals and to the conditions upon which German subjects of European origin shall, or shall not, be allowed to reside, hold property, trade or exercise a profession in them.

ARTICLE 123.

The provisions of Article 260 of Part IX (Financial Clauses) of the present Treaty shall apply in the case of all agreements concluded with German nationals for the construction or exploitation of public works in the German oversea possessions, as well as any sub-concessions or contracts resulting therefrom which may have been made to or with such nationals.

ARTICLE 124.

Germany hereby undertakes to pay, in accordance with the estimate to be presented by the French Government and approved by the Reparation Commission, reparation for damage suffered by French nationals in the Cameroons or the frontier zone by reason of the acts of the German civil and military authorities and of German private individuals during the period from the 1st January, 1900, to the 1st August, 1914.

ARTICLE 125.

Germany renounces all rights under the Conventions and Agreements with France of the 4th November, 1911, and the 28th September, 1912, relating to Equatorial Africa. She undertakes to pay to the French Government, in accordance with the estimate to be presented by that Government and approved by the Reparation Commission, all the deposits, credits, advances, etc., effected by virtue of these instruments in favour of Germany.

ARTICLE 126.

Germany undertakes to accept and observe the agreements made or to be made by the Allied and Associated Powers or some of them with any other Power with regard to the trade in arms and spirits, and to the matters dealt with in the General Act of Berlin of the 26th February, 1885, and the General Act of Brussels of the 2nd July, 1890.

ARTICLE 127.

The native inhabitants of the former German oversea possessions shall be entitled to the diplomatic protection of the Governments exercising authority over those territories.

Section II. China.

ARTICLE 128.

Germany renounces in favour of China all benefits and privileges resulting from the provisions of the final Protocol signed at Peking on the 7th September, 1901, and from all annexes, notes and documents supplementary thereto. She likewise renounces in favour of China any claim to indemnities accruing thereunder subsequent to the 14th March, 1917.

ARTICLE 129.

From the coming into force of the present Treaty the High Contracting Parties shall apply, in so far as concerns them respectively:

1. The Arrangement of the 29th August, 1902, regarding the new Chinese customs tariff.

2. The Arrangement of the 27th September, 1905, regarding Whang-Poo, and the provisional supplementary Arrangement of the 4th April, 1912.

China, however, will no longer be bound to grant to Germany the advantages or privileges which she allowed Germany under these arrangements.

ARTICLE 130.

Subject to the provisions of Section VIII of this Part, Germany cedes to China all the buildings, wharves and pontoons, barracks, forts, arms and munitions of war, vessels of all kinds, wireless telegraphy installations and other public property belonging to the German Government, which are situated or may be in the German Concessions at Tientsin and Hankow or elsewhere in Chinese territory.

It is understood, however, that premises used as diplomatic or consular residences or offices are not included in the above cession, and, furthermore, that no steps shall be taken by the Chinese Government to dispose of the German public and private property situated within the so-called Legation Quarter at Peking without the consent of the Diplomatic Representatives of the Powers which, on the coming into force of the present Treaty, remain Parties to the Final Protocol of the 7th September, 1901.

ARTICLE 131.

Germany undertakes to restore to China within twelve months from the coming into force of the present Treaty all the astronomical instruments which her troops in 1900–1901 carried away from China, and to defray all expenses which may be incurred in effecting such restoration, including the expenses of dismounting, packing, transporting, insurance and installation in Peking.

ARTICLE 132.

Germany agrees to the abrogation of the leases from the Chinese Government under which the German Concessions at Hankow and Tientsin are now held.

China, restored to the full exercise of her sovereign rights in the above areas, declares her intention of opening them to international residence and trade. She further declares that the abrogation of the leases under which these concessions are now held shall not affect the property rights of nationals of Allied and Associated Powers who are holders of lots in these concessions.

ARTICLE 133.

Germany waives all claims against the Chinese Government or against any Allied or Associated Government arising out of the internment of German nationals in China and their repatriation. She equally renounces all claims arising out of the capture and condemnation of German ships in China, or the liquidation, sequestration or control of German properties, rights and interests in that country since August 14th, 1917. This provision, however, shall not affect the rights of the parties interested in the proceeds of any such liquidation, which shall be governed by the provisions of Part X (Economic Clauses) of the present Treaty.

ARTICLE 134.

Germany renounces in favour of the Government of His Britannic Majesty the German State property in the British Concession at Shameen at Canton. She renounces in favour of the French and Chinese Governments conjointly the property of the German school situated in the French Concession at Shanghai.

Section III. Siam.

ARTICLE 135.

Germany recognises that all treaties, conventions and agreements between her and Siam, and all rights, title and privileges derived therefrom, including all rights of extraterritorial jurisdiction, terminated as from July 22, 1917.

ARTICLE 136.

All goods and property in Siam belonging to the German Empire or to any German State, with the exception of premises used as diplomatic or consular residences or offices, pass ipso facto and without compensation to the Siamese Government.

The goods, property, and private rights of German nationals in Siam shall be dealt with in accordance with the provisions of Part X (Economic Clauses) of the present Treaty.

ARTICLE 137.

Germany waives all claims against the Siamese Government on behalf of herself or her nationals arising out of the seizure or condemnation of German ships, the liquidation of German property, or the internment of German nationals in Siam. This provision shall not affect the rights of the parties interested in the proceeds of any such liquidation, which shall be governed by the provisions of Part X (Economic Clauses) of the present Treaty.

Section IV. Liberia.

ARTICLE 138.

Germany renounces all rights and privileges arising from the arrangements of 1911 and 1912 regarding Liberia, and particularly the right to nominate a German Receiver in Liberia.

She further renounces all claim to participate in any measures whatsoever which may be adopted for the rehabilitation of Liberia.

ARTICLE 139.

Germany recognizes that all treaties and arrangements between her and Liberia terminated as from August 8, 1917.

ARTICLE 140.

The property, rights and interests of Germans in Liberia shall be dealt with in accordance with Part X (Economic Clauses) of the present treaty.

Section V. Morocco.

ARTICLE 141.

Germany renounces all rights, titles and privileges conferred on her by the General Act of Algeciras of April 7, 1906, and by the Franco-German Agreements of February 9, 1909 and November 4, 1911. All treaties, agreements, arrangements and contracts concluded by her with the Sherifian Empire are regarded as abrogated as from August 3, 1914.

In no case can Germany take advantage of these instruments and she undertakes not to intervene in any way in negotiations relating to Morocco which may take place between France and the other Powers.

ARTICLE 142.

Germany having recognized the French Protectorate in Morocco, hereby accepts all the consequences of its establishment, and she renounces the régime of the capitulations therein.

This renunciation shall take effect as from August 3, 1914.

ARTICLE 143.

The Sherifian Government shall have complete liberty of action in regulating the status of German nationals in Morocco and the conditions in which they may establish themselves there.

German protected persons, semsars and "associés agricoles" shall be considered as having ceased, as from August 3, 1914, to enjoy the privileges attached to their status and shall be subject to the ordinary law.

ARTICLE 144.

All property and possessions in the Sherifian Empire of the German Empire and the German States pass to the Maghzen without payment.

For the purposes of this clause, the property and possessions of the German Empire and States shall be deemed to include all the property of the Crown, the Empire or States, and the private property of the former German Emperor and other Royal personages.

All movable and immovable property in the Sherifian Empire belonging to German nationals shall be dealt with in accordance with Sections III and IV of Part X (Economic Clauses) of the present Treaty.

Mining rights which may be recognised as belonging to German nationals by the Court of Arbitration set up under the Moroccan Mining Regulations shall form the subject of a valuation, which the arbitrators shall be requested to make, and these rights shall then be treated in the same way as property in Morocco belonging to German nationals.

ARTICLE 145.

The German Government shall ensure the transfer to a person nominated by the French Government of the shares representing Germany's portion of the capital of the State Bank of Morocco. The value of these shares, as assessed by the Reparation Commission, shall be paid to the Reparation Commission for the credit of Germany on account of the sums due for reparation. The German Government shall be responsible for indemnifying its nationals so dispossessed.

This transfer will take place without prejudice to the repayment of debts which German nationals may have contracted towards the State Bank of Morocco,

ARTICLE 146.

Moroccan goods entering Germany shall enjoy the treatment accorded to French goods.

Section VI. Egypt.

ARTICLE 147.

Germany declares that she recognises the Protectorate proclaimed over Egypt by Great Britain on December 18, 1914, and that she renounces the régime of the Capitulations in Egypt.

This renunciation shall take effect as from August 4, 1914.

ARTICLE 148.

All treaties, agreements, arrangements, and contracts concluded by Germany with Egypt are regarded as abrogated as from August 4, 1914.

In no case can Germany avail herself of these instruments and she undertakes not to intervene in any way in negotiations relating to Egypt which may take place between Great Britain and the other Powers.

ARTICLE 149.

Until an Egyptian law of judicial organization establishing courts with universal jurisdiction comes into force, provision shall be made, by means of decrees issued by His Highness the Sultan, for the exercise of jurisdiction over German nationals and property by the British Consular Tribunals.

ARTICLE 150.

The Egyptian Government shall have complete liberty of action in regulating the status of German nationals and the conditions under which they may establish themselves in Egypt.

ARTICLE 151.

Germany consents to the abrogation of the decree issued by His Highness the Khedive on November 28, 1904, relating to the Commission of the Egyptian Public Debt, or to such changes as the Egyptian Government may think it desirable to make therein.

ARTICLE 152.

Germany consents, in so far as she is concerned, to the transfer to His Britannic Majesty's Government of the powers conferred on His Imperial Majesty the Sultan by the Convention signed at Constantinople on October 29, 1888, relating to the free navigation of the Suez Canal.

She renounces all participation in the Sanitary, Maritime, and Quarantine Board of Egypt and consents, in so far as she is concerned, to the transfer to the Egyptian Authorities of the powers of that Board.

ARTICLE 153

All property and possessions in Egypt of the German Empire and the German States pass to the Egyptian Government without payment.

For this purpose, the property and possessions of the German Empire and States shall be deemed to include all the property of the Crown, the Empire or the States, and the private property of the former German Emperor and other Royal personages.

All movable and immovable property in Eygpt belonging to German nationals shall be dealt with in accordance with Sections III and IV of Part X (Economic Clauses) of the present Treaty.

ARTICLE 154.

Egyptian goods entering Germany shall enjoy the treatment accorded to British goods.

Section VII. Turkey and Bulgaria.

ARTICLE 155.

Germany undertakes to recognise and accept all arrangements which the Allied and Associated Powers may make with Turkey and Bulgaria with reference to any rights, interests and privileges whatever which might be claimed by Germany or her nationals in Turkey and Bulgaria and which are not dealt with in the provisions of the present Treaty.

Section VIII. Shantung.

ARTICLE 156.

Germany renounces, in favour of Japan, all her rights, title, and privileges—particularly those concerning the territory of Kiaochow, railways, mines and submarine cables—which she acquired in virtue of the Treaty concluded by her with Chiua on March 6, 1898, and of all other arrangements relative to the Province of Shantung.

All German rights in the Tsingtao-Tsinanfu Railway, including its branch lines, together with its subsidiary property of all kinds, stations, shops, fixed and rolling stock, mines, plant and material for the exploitation of the mines, are and remain acquired by Japan, together with all rights and privileges attaching thereto.

The German State submarine cables from Tsingtao to Shanghai and from Tsingtao to Chefoo, with all the rights, privileges and properties attaching thereto, are similarly acquired by Japan, free and clear of all charges and encumbrances.

ARTICLE 157.

The movable and immovable property owned by the German State in the territory of Kiaochow, as well as all the rights which Germany might claim in consequence of the works or improvements made or of the expenses incurred by her, directly or indirectly, in connection with this territory, are and remain acquired by Japan, free and clear of all charges and encumbrances.

ARTICLE 158.

Germany shall hand over to Japan within three months from the coming into force of the present Treaty, the archives, registers, plans, title-deeds and documents of every kind, wherever they may be, relating to the administration, whether civil, military, financial, judicial or other, of the territory of Kiaochow.

Within the same period Germany shall give particulars to Japan of all treaties, arrangements or agreements relating to the rights, title or privileges referred to in the two preceding articles.

PART V.

MILITARY, NAVAL AND AERIAL CLAUSES.

In order to render possible the initiation of a general limitation of the armaments of all nations, Germany undertakes strictly to observe the military, naval and air clauses which follow.

Section I. Military clauses.

Chapter I. Effectives and cadres of the German Army.

ARTICLE 159.

Within two months of the coming into force of the present Treaty the German military forces shall be demobilized as prescribed hereinafter.

ARTICLE 160.

The German Army must not comprise more than seven divisions of infantry and three divisions of cavalry.

In no case must the total number of effectives in the Army of the States constituting Germany ever exceed one hundred thousand men, including officers and establishments of depots. The Army shall be devoted exclusively to the maintenance of order within the territory and to the control of the frontiers.

The total effective strength of officers, including the personnel of staffs, whatever their composition, must not exceed four thousand.

ARTICLE 161.

Divisions and Army Corps headquarters staffs shall be organised in accordance with Table No. I annexed to this Section.

The number and strengths of the units of infantry, artillery, engineers, technical services and troops laid down in the aforesaid Table consitute maxima which much not be exceeded.

The following units may each have their own depot:

An Infantry regiment;
A Cavalry regiment;
A regiment of Field Artillery;
A battalion of Pioneers.

ARTICLE 162.

The divisions must not be grouped under more than two army corps headquarters staffs.

The maintenance or formation of forces differently grouped or of other organisations for the command of troops or for preparation for war is forbidden.

The Great German General Staff and all similar organisations shall be dissolved and may not be reconstituted in any form.

The officers, or persons in the position of officers, in the Ministries of War in the different States in Germany and in the Administrations attached to them, must not exceed three hundred in number and are included in the maximum strength of four thousand laid down in the 3rd paragraph of Article 160.

ARTICLE 163.

Army administrative services consisting of civilian personnel not included in the number of effectives prescribed by the present Treaty will have such personnel reduced in each class to one-tenth of that laid down in the Budget of 1913.

ARTICLE 164.

The number of employés or officials of the German States, such as customs officers, forest guards and coastguards, shall not exceed that of the employés or officials functioning in these capacities in 1913.

The number of gendarmes and employees or officials of the local or municipal police may only be increased to an extent corresponding to the increase of population since 1913 in the districts or municipalities in which they are employed.

These employees and officials may not be assembled for military training.

Chapter II. Armament, munitions and material.

ARTICLE 165.

At the expiration of two months from the coming into force of the present Treaty the German Army must not possess an armament greater than the amounts fixed in Table No. II, annexed to this Section, with the exception of an optional increase not exceeding one-twentyfifth part for small arms and one-fiftieth part for guns, which shall be exclusively used to provide for such eventual replacements as may be necessary.

ARTICLE 166.

At the expiration of two months from the coming into force of the present Treaty, the stock of munitions which the German Army may have at its disposal shall not exceed the amounts fixed in Table No. III annexed to this Section.

Within the same period the German Government will store these stocks at points to be notified to the Governments of the Principal Allied and Associated Powers. The German Government is forbidden to establish any other stocks, depots, or reserves of munitions.

ARTICLE 167.

The number and calibre of the guns constituting at the date of the coming into force of the present Treaty the armament of the fortified works, fortresses, any land or coast forts which Germany is allowed to retain must be notified immediately by the German Government to the Governments of the Principal Allied and Associated Powers, and will constitute maximum amounts which may not be exceeded.

Within two months from the coming into force of the present Treaty, the maximum stock of ammunition for these guns will be reduced to, and maintained at, the following uniform rates:—fifteen hundred rounds per piece for those the calibre of which is 10.5 cm. and under: five hundred rounds per piece for those of higher calibre.

ARTICLE 168.

The manufacture of arms, munitions, or any war material, shall only be carried out in factories or works the location of which shall be communicated to and approved by the Governments of the Principal Allied and Associated Powers, and the number of which they retain the right to restrict.

Within three months from the coming into force of the present Treaty, all other establishments for the manufacture, preparation, storage or design of arms, munitions, or any war material whatever shall be closed down. The same applies to all arsenals except those used as depots for the authorized stocks of munitions. Within the same period the personnel of these arsenals will be dismissed.

ARTICLE 169.

Within two months from the coming into force of the present Treaty German arms, munitions and war material, including anti-aircraft material, existing in Germany in excess of the quantities allowed, must be surrendered to the Governments of the Principal Allied and Associated Powers to be destroyed or rendered useless. This will also apply to any special plant intended for the manufacture of military material, except such as may be recognised as necessary for equipping the authorised strength of the German army.

The surrender in question will be effected at such points in German territory as may be selected by the said Governments.

Within the same period arms, munitions and war material, including anti-aircraft material, of origin other than German, in whatever state they may be, will be delivered to the said Governments, who will decide as to their disposal.

ARTICLE 170.

Importation into Germany of arms, munitions and war material of every kind shall be strictly prohibited.

The same applies to the manufacture for, and export to, foreign countries of arms, munitions and war material of every kind.

ARTICLE 171.

The use of asphyxiating, poisonous or other gases and all analogous liquids, materials or devices being prohibited, their manufacture and importation are strictly forbidden in Germany.

The same applies to materials specially intended for the manufacture, storage and use of the said products or devices.

The manufacture and the importation into Germany of armoured cars, tanks and all similar constructions suitable for use in war are also prohibited.

ARTICLE 172.

Within a period of three months from the coming into force of the present Treaty, the German Government will disclose to the Governments of the Principal Allied and Associated Powers the nature and mode of manufacture of all explosives, toxic substances or other like chemical preparations used by them in the war or prepared by them for the purpose of being so used.

Chapter III. Recruiting and Military Training.

ARTICLE 173.

Universal compulsory military service shall be abolished in Germany.

The German Army may only be constituted and recruited by means of voluntary enlistment.

ARTICLE 174.

The period of enlistment for non-commissioned officers and privates must be twelve consecutive years.

The number of men discharged for any reason before the expiration of their term of enlistment must not exceed in any year five per cent. of the total effectives fixed by the second paragraph of Article 160 of the present Treaty.

ARTICLE 175.

The officers who are retained in the Army must undertake the obligation to serve in it up to the age of forty-five years at least.

Officers newly appointed must undertake to serve on the active list for twenty-five consecutive years at least.

Officers who have previously belonged to any formations whatever of the Army, and who are not retained in the units allowed to be maintained, must not take part in any military exercise whether theoretical or practical, and will not be under any military obligations whatever.

The number of officers discharged for any reason before the expiration of their term of service must not exceed in any year five per cent. of the total effectives of officers provided for in the third paragraph of Article 160 of the present Treaty.

ARTICLE 176.

On the expiration of two months from the coming into force of the present Treaty there must only exist in Germany the number of military schools which is absolutely indispensable for the recruitment of the officers of the units allowed. These schools will be exclusively intended for the recruitment of officers of each arm, in the proportion of one school per arm.

The number of students admitted to attend the courses of the said schools will be strictly in proportion to the vacancies to be filled in the cadres of officers. The students and the cadres will be reckoned in the effectives fixed by the second and third paragraphs of Article 160 of the present Treaty.

Consequently, and during the period fixed above, all military academies or similar institutions in Germany, as well as the different military schools for officers, student officers (Aspiranten), cadets, non-commissioned officers or student non-commissioned officers (Aspiranten), other than the schools above provided for, will be abolished.

ARTICLE 177.

Educational establishments, the universities, societies of discharged soldiers, shooting or touring clubs and, generally speaking, associations of every description, whatever be the age of their members, must not occupy themselves with any military matters.

In particular they will be forbidden to instruct or exercise their members, or to allow them to be instructed or exercised, in the profession or use of arms.

These societies, associations, educational establishments and universities must have no connection with the Ministries of War or any other military authority.

ARTICLE 178.

All meaures of mobilization or appertaining to mobilization are forbidden.

In no case must formations, administrative services or General Staffs include supplementary cadres.

ARTICLE 179.

Germany agrees, from the coming into force of the present Treaty, not to accredit nor to send to any foreign country, any military, naval or air mission, nor to allow any such mission to leave her territory, and Germany further agrees to take appropriate measures to prevent German nationals from leaving her territory to become enrolled in the Army, Navy, or Air service of any foreign Power, or to be attached to such Army, Navy or Air service for the purpose of assisting in the military, naval or air training thereof, or otherwise for the purpose of giving military, naval or air instruction in any foreign country.

The Allied and Associated Powers agree, so far as they are concerned, from the coming into force of the present Treaty, not to enrol in nor to attach to their armies or naval or air forces any German national for the purpose of assisting in the military training of such armies, or naval or air forces, or otherwise to employ any such German national as military, naval or aeronautic instructor.

The present provision does not, however, affect the right of France to recruit for the Foreign Legion in accordance with French military laws and regulations.

Chapter IV. Fortifications.

ARTICLE 180.

Within three months of the coming into force of the present Treaty, all fortified works, fortresses and field works situated on German territory to the west of a line drawn fifty kilometres to the east of the Rhine shall be disarmed and dismantled, as provided in Article 42 of Part III (Political Clauses for Europe) of the present Treaty.

The construction of any new fortification, whatever its nature and importance, is forbidden in this zone.

The system of fortified works of the southern and eastern frontiers of Germany shall be maintained in its existing state.

Section II. Naval Clauses.

ARTICLE 181.

After the expiration of a period of two months from the coming into force of the present Treaty the German naval forces in commission must not exceed:

6 battleships of the Deutschland or Lothringen type,
6 light cruisers,
12 destroyers,
12 torpedo boats, or an equal number of ships constructed to replace them as provided in Article 190.

No submarines are to be included.

All other warships, except where there is provision to the contrary in the present Treaty, must be placed in reserve or devoted to commercial purposes.

ARTICLE 182.

Until the completion of the minesweeping prescribed by Article 193 Germany will keep in commission such number of minesweeping vessels as may be fixed by the Governments of the Principal Allied and Associated Powers.

ARTICLE 183.

After the expiration of a period of two months from the coming into force of the present Treaty the total personnel of the German Navy, including the manning of the fleet, coast defences, signal stations, administration and other land services, must not exceed fifteen thousand, including officers and men of all grades and corps.

The total strength of officers and warrant officers must not exceed fifteen hundred.

Within two months from the coming into force of the present Treaty the personnel in excess of the above strength shall be demobilized.

No naval or military corps or reserve force in connection with the Navy may be organised in Germany without being included in the above strength.

ARTICLE 184.

From the date of the coming into force of the present Treaty all the German surface warships which are not in German ports cease to belong to Germany, who renounces all rights over them.

Vessels which, in compliance with the Armistice of 11th November 1918, are now interned in the ports of the Allied and Associated Powers are declared to be finally surrendered.

Vessels which are now interned in neutral ports will be there surrendered to the Governments of the Principal Allied and Associated Powers. The German Government must address a notification to that effect to the neutral Powers on the coming into force of the present Treaty.

ARTICLE 185.

Within a period of two months from the coming into force of the present Treaty the German surface warships enumerated below will be surrendered to the Principal Allied and Associated Powers in such Allied ports as the said Powers may direct.

These warships will have been disarmed as provided in Article XXIII of the Armistice dated 11th November, 1918. Nevertheless they must have all their guns on board.

and, in addition, forty-two modern destroyers and fifty modern torpedo boats, as chosen by the Governments of the Principal Allied and Associated Powers.

ARTICLE 186.

On the coming into force of the present Treaty the German Government must undertake, under the supervision of the Governments of the Principal Allied and Associated Powers, the breaking-up of all the German surface warships now under construction.

ARTICLE 187.

The German auxiliary cruisers and fleet auxiliaries enumerated below will be disarmed and treated as merchant ships.

INTERNED IN NEUTRAL COUNTRIES:

ARTICLE 188.

On the expiration of one month from the coming into force of the present Treaty all German submarines, submarine salvage vessels and docks for submarines, including the tubular dock, must have been handed over to the Governments of the Principal Allied and Associated Powers.

Such of these submarines, vessels and docks as are considered by the said Governments to be fit to proceed under their own power or to be towed shall be taken by the German Government into such Allied ports as have been indicated.

The remainder, and also those in course of construction, shall be broken up entirely by the German Government under the supervision of the said Governments. The breaking-up must be completed within three months at the most after the coming into force of the present Treaty.

ARTICLE 189.

Articles, machinery, and material arising from the breaking-up of German warships of all kinds, whether surface vessels or submarines, may not be used except for purely industrial or commercial purposes.

They may not be sold or disposed of to foreign countries.

ARTICLE 190.

Germany is forbidden to construct or acquire any warships other than those intended to replace the units in commission provided for in Article 181 of the present Treaty.

The warships intended for replacement purposes as above shall not exceed the following displacement:

Armoured ships	10,000 tons
Light cruisers	6,000 tons
Destroyers	800 tons
Torpedo boats	200 tons

Except where a ship has been lost, units of the different classes shall only be replaced at the end of a period of twenty years in the case of battleships and cruisers, and fifteen years in the case of destroyers and torpedo boats, counting from the launching of the ship.

ARTICLE 191.

The construction and acquisition of any submarine, even for commercial purposes, shall be forbidden in Germany.

ARTICLE 192.

The warships in commission of the German fleet must only have on board or in reserve the allowance of arms, munitions and war material fixed by the Principal Allied and Associated Powers.

Within a month from the fixing of the quantities as above, arms, munitions and war material of all kinds, including mines and torpedoes, now in the hands of the German Government and in excess of the said quantities, shall be surrendered to the Governments of the said Powers at places to be indicated by them. Such arms, munitions and war material will be destroyed or rendered useless.

All other stocks, depôts or reserves of arms, munitions or naval war material of all kinds are forbidden.

The manufacture in German territory and the export of these articles to foreign countries shall be forbidden.

ARTICLE 193.

On the coming into force of the present Treaty Germany will forthwith sweep up the mines in the following areas in the North Sea to the eastward of longitude 4° 00′ E. of Greenwich:

(1) Between parallels of latitude 53° 00′ N. and 59° 00′ N.;

(2) To the northward of latitude 60° 30′ N.

Germany must keep these areas free from mines.

Germany must also sweep and keep free from mines such areas in the Baltic as may ultimately be notified by the Governments of the Principal Allied and Associated Powers.

ARTICLE 194.

The personnel of the German Navy shall be recruited entirely by voluntary engagements entered into for a minimum period of twenty-five consecutive years for officers and warrant officers; twelve consecutive years for petty officers and men.

The number engaged to replace those discharged for any reason before the expiration of their term of service must not exceed five per cent. per annum of the totals laid down in this Section (Article 183).

The personnel discharged from the Navy must not receive any kind of naval or military training or undertake any further service in the Navy or Army.

Officers belonging to the German Navy and not demobilised must engage to serve till the age of forty-five, unless discharged for sufficient reasons.

No officer or man of the German mercantile marine shall receive any training in the Navy.

ARTICLE 195.

In order to ensure free passage into the Baltic to all nations, Germany shall not erect any fortifications in the area comprised between latitudes 55° 27′ N. and 54° 00′ N. and longitudes 9° 00′ E. and 16° 00′ E. of the meridian of Greenwich, nor instal any guns commanding the maritime routes between the North Sea and the Baltic. The fortifications now existing in this area shall be demolished and the guns removed under the supervision of the Allied Governments and in periods to be fixed by them.

The German Government shall place at the disposal of the Governments of the Principal Allied and Associated Powers all hydographical information now in its possession concerning the channels and adjoining waters between the Baltic and the North Sea.

ARTICLE 196.

All fortified works and fortifications, other than those mentioned in Article 195 and in Part III (Political Clauses for Europe) Section XIII (Heligoland), now established within fifty kilometres of the German coast or on German islands off that coast shall be considered as of a defensive nature and may remain in their existing condition.

No new fortifications shall be constructed within these limits. The armament of these defences shall not exceed, as regards the number and calibre of guns, those in position at the date of the coming into force of the present Treaty. The German Government shall communicate forthwith particulars thereof to all the European Governments.

On the expiration of a period of two months from the coming into force of the present Treaty the stocks of ammunition for these guns shall be reduced to and maintained at a maximum figure of fifteen hundred rounds per piece for calibres of 4.1-inch and under, and five hundred rounds per piece for higher calibres.

ARTICLE 197.

During the three months following the coming into force of the present Treaty the German high-power wireless telegraphy stations at Nauen, Hanover and Berlin shall not be used for the transmission of messages concerning naval, military or political questions of interest to Germany or any State which has been allied to Germany in the war, without the assent of the Governments of the Principal Allied and Associated Powers. These stations may be used for commercial purposes, but only under the supervision of the said Governments, who will decide the wave-length to be used.

During the same period Germany shall not build any more high-power wireless telegraphy stations in her own territory or that of Austria, Hungary, Bulgaria or Turkey.

Section III. Air clauses.

ARTICLE 198.

The armed forces of Germany must not include any military or naval air forces.

Germany may, during a period not extending beyond the 1st October, 1919, maintain a maximum number of one hundred seaplanes or flying boats, which shall be exclusively employed in searching for submarine mines, shall be furnished with the necessary equipment for this purpose, and shall in no case carry arms, munitions or bombs of any nature whatever.

In addition to the engines installed in the seaplanes or flying boats above mentioned, one spare engine may be provided for each engine of each of these craft.

No dirigible shall be kept.

ARTICLE 199.

Within two months from the coming into force of the present Treaty the personnel of the air forces on the rolls of the German land and sea forces shall be demobilised. Up to the 1st October, 1919, however, Germany may keep and maintain a total number of one thousand men, including officers, for the whole of the cadres and personnel, flying and non-flying, of all formations and establishments.

ARTICLE 200.

Until the complete evacuation of German territory by the Allied and Associated troops, the aircraft of the Allied and Associated Powers shall enjoy in Germany freedom of passage through the air, freedom of transit and of landing.

ARTICLE 201.

During the six months following the coming into force of the present Treaty, the manufacture and importation of aircraft, parts of aircraft, engines for aircraft, and parts of engines for aircraft, shall be forbidden in all German territory.

ARTICLE 202.

On the coming into force of the present Treaty, all military and naval aeronautical material, except the machines mentioned in the second and third paragraphs of Article 198, must be delivered to the Government of the Principal Allied and Associated Powers.

Delivery must be effected at such places as the said Governments may select, and must be completed within three months.

In particular, this material will include all items under the following heads which are or have been in use or were designed for warlike purposes:

Complete aeroplanes and seaplanes, as well as those being manufactured, repaired or assembled.

Dirigibles able to take the air, being manufactured, repaired or assembled.

Plant for the manufacture of hydrogen.

Dirigible sheds and shelters of every kind for aircraft.

Pending their delivery, dirigibles will, at the expense of Germany, be maintained inflated with hydrogen; the plant for the manufacture of hydrogen, as well as the sheds for dirigibles, may, at the discretion of the said Powers, be left to Germany until the time when the dirigibles are handed over.

Engines for aircraft.

Nacelles and fuselages.

Armament (guns, machine guns, light machine guns, bomb-dropping apparatus, torpedo-dropping apparatus, synchronization apparatus, aiming apparatus).

Munitions (cartridges, shells, bombs loaded or unloaded, stocks of explosives or of material for their manufacture).

Instruments for use on aircraft.

Wireless apparatus and photographic or cinematograph apparatus for use on aircraft.

Component parts of any of the items under the preceding heads.

The material referred to above shall not be removed without special permission from the said Governments.

Section IV. Inter-Allied Commissions of Control.

ARTICLE 203.

All the military, naval, and air clauses contained in the present Treaty, for the execution of which a time-limit is prescribed, shall be executed by Germany under the control of Inter-Allied Commissions specially appointed for this purpose by the Principal Allied and Associated Powers.

ARTICLE 204.

The Inter-Allied Commissions of Control will be specially charged with the duty of seeing to the complete execution of the delivery, destruction, demolition and rendering things useless to be carried out at the expense of the German Government in accordance with the present Treaty.

They will communicate to the German authorities the decisions which the Principal Allied and Associated Powers have reserved the right to take, or which the execution of the military, naval and air clauses may necessitate.

ARTICLE 205.

The Inter-Allied Commissions of Control may establish their organisations at the seat of the central German Government.

They shall be entitled as often as they think desirable to proceed to any point whatever in German territory, or to send sub-commissions, or to authorize one or more of their members to go, to any such point.

ARTICLE 206.

The German Government must give all necessary facilities for the accomplishment of their missions to the Inter-Allied Commissions of Control, and to their members.

It shall attach a qualified representative to each Inter-Allied Commission of Control for the purpose of receiving the communications which the Commission may have to address to the German Government and of supplying or procuring for the Commission all information or documents which may be required.

The German Government must in all cases furnish at its own cost all labour and material required to effect the deliveries and the works of destruction, dismantling, demolition, and of rendering things useless, provided for in the present Treaty.

ARTICLE 207.

The upkeep and cost of the Commissions of Control and the expenses involved by their work shall be borne by Germany.

ARTICLE 208.

The Military Inter-Allied Commission of Control will represent the Governments of the Principal Allied and Associated Powers in dealing with the German Government in all matters concerning the execution of the military clauses.

In particular it will be its duty to receive from the German Government the notifications relating to the location of the stocks and depôts of munitions, the armament of the fortified works, fortresses and forts which Germany is allowed to retain, and the location of the works or factories for the production of arms, munitions and war material and their operations.

It will take delivery of the arms, munitions, and war material, will select the points where such delivery is to be effected, and will supervise the works of destruction, demolition, and of rendering things useless, which are to be carried out in accordance with the present Treaty.

The German Government must furnish to the Military Inter-Allied Commission of Control all such information and documents as the latter may deem necessary to ensure the complete execution of the military clauses, and in particular all legislative and administrative documents and regulations.

ARTICLE 209.

The Naval Inter-Allied Commission of Control will represent the Governments of the Principal Allied and Associated Powers in dealing with the German Government in all matters concerning the execution of the naval clauses.

In particular it will be its duty to proceed to the building yards and to supervise the breaking-up of the ships which are under construction there, to take delivery of all surface ships or submarines, salvage ships, docks and the tubular dock, and to supervise the destruction and breaking-up provided for.

The German Government must furnish to the Naval Inter-Allied Commission of Control all such information and documents as the Commission may deem necessary to ensure the complete execution of the naval clauses, in particular the designs of the warships, the composition of their armaments, the details and models of the guns, munitions, torpedoes, mines, explosives, wireless telegraphic apparatus and, in general, everything relating to naval war material, as well as all legislative or administrative documents or regulations.

ARTICLE 210.

The Aeronautical Inter-Allied Commission of Control will represent the Governments of the Principal Allied and Associated Powers in dealing with the German Government in all matters concerning the execution of the air clauses.

In particular it will be its duty to make an inventory of the aeronautical material existing in German territory, to inspect aeroplane, balloon and motor manufactories, and factories producing arms, munitions and explosives capable of being used by aircraft, to visit all aerodromes, sheds, landing grounds, parks and depôts, to authorise, where necessary, a removal of material and to take delivery of such material.

The German Government must furnish to the Aeronautical Inter-Allied Commission of Control all such information and legislative, administrative or other documents which the Commission may consider necessary to ensure the complete execution of the air clauses, and in particular a list of the personnel belonging to all the German Air Services, and of the existing material, as well as of that in process of manufacture or on order, and a list of all establishments working for aviation, of their positions, and of all sheds and landing grounds.

Section V. General articles.

ARTICLE 211.

After the expiration of a period of three months from the coming into force of the present Treaty, the German laws must have been modified and shall be maintained in conformity with this Part of the present Treaty.

Within the same period all the administrative or other measures relating to the execution of this Part of the Treaty must have been taken.

ARTICLE 212.

The following portions of the Armistice of November 11, 1918: Article VI, the first two and the sixth and seventh paragraphs of Article VII; Article IX; Clauses I, II and V of Annex n° 2, and the Protocol, dated April 4, 1919, supplementing the Armistice of November 11, 1918, remain in force so far as they are not inconsistent with the above stipulations.

ARTICLE 213.

So long as the present Treaty remains in force, Germany undertakes to give every facility for any investigation which the Council of the League of Nations, acting if need be by a majority vote, may consider necessary.

PART VI.

PRISONERS OF WAR AND GRAVES.

Section I. Prisoners of war.

ARTICLE 214.

The repatriation of prisoners of war and interned civilians shall take place as soon as possible after the coming into force of the present Treaty and shall be carried out with the greatest rapidity.

ARTICLE 215.

The repatriation of German prisoners of war and interned civilians shall, in accordance with Article 214, be carried out by a Commission composed of representatives of the Allied and Associated Powers on the one part and of the German Government on the other part.

For each of the Allied and Associated Powers a Sub-Commission, composed exclusively of representatives of the interested Power and of Delegates of the German Government, shall regulate the details of carrying into effect the repatriation of the prisoners of war.

ARTICLE 216.

From the time of their delivery into the hands of the German Authorities the prisoners of war and interned civilians are to be returned without delay to their homes by the said Authorities.

Those amongst them who before the war were habitually resident in territory occupied by the troops of the Allied and Associated Powers are likewise to be sent to their homes, subject to the consent and control of the Military Authorities of the Allied and Associated armies of occupation.

ARTICLE 217.

The whole cost of repatriation from the moment of starting shall be borne by the German Government who shall also provide the land and sea transport and staff considered necessary by the Commission referred to in article 215.

ARTICLE 218.

Prisoners of war and interned civilians awaiting disposal or undergoing sentence for offences against discipline shall be repatriated irrespective of the completion of their sentence or of the proceedings pending against them.

This stipulation shall not apply to prisoners of war and interned civilians punished for offences committed subsequent to May 1st, 1919.

During the period pending their repatriation all prisoners of war and interned civilians shall remain subject to the existing regulations, more especially as regards work and discipline.

ARTICLE 219.

Prisoners of war and interned civilians who are awaiting disposal or undergoing sentence for offences other than those against discipline may be detained.

ARTICLE 220.

The German Government undertakes to admit to its territory without distinction all persons liable to repatriation.

Prisoners of war or other German nationals who do not desire to be repatriated may be excluded from repatriation; but the Allied and Associated Governments reserve to themselves the right either to repatriate them or to take them to a neutral country or to allow them to reside in their own territories.

The German Government undertakes not to institute any exceptional proceedings against these persons or their families nor to take any repressive or vexatious measures of any kind whatsoever against them on this account.

ARTICLE 221.

The Allied and Associated Governments reserve the right to make the repatriation of German prisoners of war or German nationals in their hands conditional upon the immediate notification and release by the German Government of any prisoners of war who are nationals of the Allied and Associated Powers and may still be in Germany.

ARTICLE 222.

Germany undertakes:

1. To give every facility to the Commissions to enquire into the cases of those who cannot be traced; to furnish such Commissions with all necessary means of transport; to allow them access to camps, prisons, hospitals and all other places; and to place at their disposal all documents, whether public or private which would facilitate their enquiries.

2. To impose penalties upon any German officials or private persons who have concealed the presence of any nationals of any of the Allied and Associated Powers or have neglected to reveal the presence of any such after it had come to their knowledge.

ARTICLE 223.

Germany undertakes to restore without delay from the date of the coming into force of the present Treaty all articles, money, securities and documents which have belonged to nationals of the Allied and Associated Powers and which have been retained by the German authorities.

ARTICLE 224.

The High Contracting Parties waive reciprocally all repayment of sums due for the maintenance of prisoners of war in their respective territories.

Section II. Graves.

ARTICLE 225.

The Allied and Associated Governments and the German Government will cause to be respected and maintained the graves of the soldiers and sailors buried in their respective territories.

They agree to recognise any Commission appointed by an Allied or Associated Government for the purpose of identifying, registering, caring for or erecting suitable memorials over the said graves and to facilitate the discharge of its duties.

Furthermore they agree to afford, so far as the provisions of their laws and the requirements of public health allow, every facility for giving effect to requests that the bodies of their soldiers and sailors may be transferred to their own country.

ARTICLE 226.

The graves of prisoners of war and interned civilians who are nationals of the different belligerent States and have died in captivity shall be properly maintained in accordance with Article 225 of the present Treaty.

The Allied and Associated Governments on the one part and the German Government on the other part reciprocally undertake also to furnish to each other:

1. A complete list of those who have died together with all information useful for identification;

2. All information as to the number and position of the graves of all those who have been buried without identification.

PART VII.

PENALTIES.

ARTICLE 227.

The Allied and Associated Powers publicly arraign William II of Hohenzollern, formerly German Emperor, for a supreme offence against international morality and the sanctity of treaties.

A special tribunal will be constituted to try the accused, thereby assuring him the guarantees essential to the right of defence. It will be composed of five judges, one appointed by each of the following Powers: namely, the United States of America, Great Britain, France, Italy and Japan.

In its decision the tribunal will be guided by the highest motives of international policy, with a view to vindicating the solemn obligations of international undertakings and the validity of international morality. It will be its duty to fix the punishment which it considers should be imposed.

The Allied and Associated Powers will address a request to the Government of the Netherlands for the surrender to them of the ex-Emperor in order that he may be put on trial.

ARTICLE 228.

The German Government recognises the right of the Allied and Associated Powers to bring before military tribunals persons accused of having committed acts in violation of the laws and customs of war. Such persons shall, if found guilty, be sentenced to punishments laid down by military law. This provision will apply notwithstanding any proceedings or prosecution before a tribunal in Germany or in the territory of her allies.

The German Government shall hand over to the Allied and Associated Powers, or to such one of them as shall so request, all persons accused of having committed an act in violation of the laws and customs of war, who are specified either by name or by the rank, office or employment which they held under the German authorities.

ARTICLE 229.

Persons guilty of criminal acts against the nationals of one of the Allied and Associated Powers will be brought before the military tribunals of that Power.

Persons guilty of criminal acts against the nationals of more than one of the Allied and Associated Powers will be brought before military tribunals composed of members of the military tribunals of the Powers concerned.

In every case the accused will be entitled to name his own counsel.

ARTICLE 230.

The German Government undertakes to furnish all documents and information of every kind, the production of which may be considered necessary to ensure the full knowledge of the incriminating acts, the discovery of offenders and the just appreciation of responsibility.

PART VIII.

REPARATION.

Section I. General provisions.

ARTICLE 231.

The Allied and Associated Governments affirm and Germany accepts the responsibility of Germany and her Allies for causing all the loss and damage to which the Allied and Associated Governments and their nationals have been subjected as a consequence of the war imposed upon them by the aggression of Germany and her Allies.

ARTICLE 232.

The Allied and Associated Governments recognize that the resources of Germany are not adequate, after taking into account permanent diminutions of such resources which will result from other provisions of the present Treaty, to make complete reparation for all such loss and damage.

The Allied and Associated Governments, however, require, and Germany undertakes, that she will make compensation for all damage done to the civilian population of the Allied and Associated Powers and to their property during the period of the belligerency of each as an Allied or Associated Power against Germany by such aggression by land, by sea and from the air, and in general all damage as defined in Annex I hereto.

In accordance with Germany's pledges, already given, as to complete restoration for Belgium, Germany undertakes, in addition to the compensation for damage elsewhere in this Chapter provided for, as a consequence of the violation of the Treaty of 1839, to make reimbursement of all sums which Belgium has borrowed from the Allied and Associated Governments up to November 11, 1918, together with interest at the rate of five per cent. (5%) per annum on such sums. This amount shall be determined by the Reparation Commission, and the German Government undertakes thereupon forthwith to make a special issue of bearer bonds to an equivalent amount payable in marks gold, on May 1st, 1926, or, at the option of the German Government, on the 1st of May in any year up to 1926. Subject to the foregoing, the form of such bonds shall be determined by the Reparation Commission. Such bonds shall be handed over to the Reparation Commission, which has authority to take and acknowledge receipt thereof on behalf of Belgium.

ARTICLE 233.

The amount of the above damage for which compensation is to be made by Germany shall be determined by an Inter-Allied Commission, to be called the Reparation Commission and constituted in the form and with the powers set forth hereunder and in Annexes II to VII inclusive hereto.

This Commission shall consider the claims and give to the German Government a just opportunity to be heard.

The findings of the Commission as to the amount of damage defined as above shall be concluded and notified to the German Government on or before the 1st May, 1921, as representing the extent of that Government's obligations.

The Commission shall concurrently draw up a schedule of payments prescribing the time and manner for securing and discharging the entire obligation within a period of thirty years from the 1st May, 1921. If, however, within the period mentioned, Germany fails to discharge her obligations, any balance remaining unpaid may, within the discretion of the Commission, be postponed for settlement in subsequent years, or may be handled otherwise in such manner as the Allied and Associated Governments, acting in accordance with the procedure laid down in this Part of the present Treaty, shall determine.

ARTICLE 234.

The Reparation Commission shall after the 1st May, 1921, from time to time, consider the resources and capacity of Germany and, after giving her representatives a just opportunity to be heard, shall have discretion to extend the date, and to modify the form of payments, such as are to be provided for in accordance with Article 233: but not to cancel any part, except with the specific authority of the several Governments represented upon the Commission.

ARTICLE 235.

In order to enable the Allied and Associated Powers to proceed at once to the restoration of their industrial and economic life, pending the full determination of their claims, Germany shall pay in such instalments and in such manner (whether in gold, commodities, ships, securities or otherwise) as the Reparation Commission may fix, during 1919, 1920, and the first four months of 1921, the equivalent of 20,000,000,000 gold marks.

Out of this sum the expenses of the armies of occupation subsequent to the armistice of the 11th November, 1918, shall first be met, and such supplies of food and raw materials as may be judged by the Governments of the Principal Allied and Associated Powers to be essential to enable Germany to meet her obligations for reparation may also, with the approval of the said Governments, be paid for out of the above sum. The balance shall be reckoned towards liquidation of the amounts due for reparation.

Germany shall further deposit bonds as prescribed in Paragraph 12 (c) of Annex II hereto.

ARTICLE 236.

Germany further agrees to the direct application of her economic resources to reparation as specified in Annexes III, IV, V, and VI, relating respectively to merchant shipping, to physical restoration and to coal and derivatives of coal, and to dyestuffs and other chemical products; provided always that the value of the property transferred and any services rendered by her under these Annexes, assessed in the manner therein prescribed, shall be credited to her towards liquidation of her obligations under the above articles.

ARTICLE 237.

The successive instalments, including the above sum, paid over by Germany in satisfaction of the above claims will be divided by the Allied and Associated Governments in proportions which have been determined upon by them in advance on a basis of general equity and of the rights of each.

For the purposes of this division the value of property transferred and services rendered under Article 243, and under Annexes III, IV, V, VI, and VII, shall be reckoned in the same manner as cash payments effected in that year.

ARTICLE 238.

In addition to the payments mentioned above Germany shall effect, in accordance with the procedure laid down by the Reparation Commission, restitution in cash of cash taken away, seized or sequestrated, and also restitution of animals, objects of every nature and securities taken away, seized or sequestrated, in the cases in which it proves possible to identify them in territory belonging to Germany or her Allies.

Until this procedure is laid down, restitution will continue in accordance with the provisions of the Armistice of 11th of November 1918 and its Renewals and the Protocols thereto.

ARTICLE 239.

Germany undertakes to make forthwith the restitution contemplated by Article 238 and to make the payments and deliveries contemplated by Articles 233, 234, 235 and 236.

ARTICLE 240.

Germany recognizes the Commission provided for by Article 233 as the same may be constituted by the Allied and Associated Governments in accordance with Annex II, and agrees irrevocably to the possession and exercise by such Commission of the power and authority given to it under the present Treaty.

The German Government will supply to the Commission all the information which the Commission may require relative to the financial situation and operations and to the property, productive capacity, and stocks and current production of raw materials and manufactured articles of Germany and her nationals, and further any information relative to military operations which in the judgment of the Commission may be necessary for the assessment of Germany's liability for reparation as defined in Annex I.

The German Government will accord to the members of the Commission and its authorised agents the same rights and immunities as are enjoyed in Germany by duly accredited diplomatic agents of friendly Powers.

Germany further agrees to provide for the salaries and expenses of the Commission and of such staff as it may employ.

ARTICLE 241.

Germany undertakes to pass, issue, and maintain in force any legislation, orders, and decrees that may be necessary to give complete effect to these provisions.

ARTICLE 242.

The provisions of this Part of the present Treaty do not apply to the property, rights and interests referred to in Sections III and IV of Part X (Economic Clauses of the present Treaty, except so far as concerns any final balance in favour of Germany under Article 243 (a).

ARTICLE 243.

The following shall be reckoned as credits to Germany in respect to her reparation obligations:—

(a) Any final balance in favour of Germany under Sections III and IV of Part X (Economic Clauses) and Section V (Alsace-Lorraine) of Part III (Political Clauses for Europe).

(b) Amounts due to Germany in respect of transfers under Part IX (Financial Clauses), Part XII (Ports, Waterways and Railways) and Section IV (Saar Basin) of Part III (Political Clauses in Europe).

(c) Amounts which in the judgment of the Reparation Commission should be credited to Germany on account of any other transfers under the present Treaty of property, rights, concessions or other interests.

In no case however shall credit be given for property restored in accordance with Article 238.

ARTICLE 244.

The transfer of the German submarine cables which do not form the subject of particular provisions of the present Treaty is regulated by Annex VII hereto.

ANNEX I.

Compensation may be claimed from Germany under Article 232 above in respect of the total damage under the following categories.

1. Damage to injured persons and to surviving dependents by personal injury to or death of civilians caused by acts of war, including bombardments or other attacks on land, on sea, or from the air, and all the direct consequences thereof, and of all operations of war by the two groups of belligerents wherever arising.

2. Damage caused by Germany or her allies to civilian victims of acts of cruelty, violence or maltreatment (including injuries to life or health as a consequence of imprisonment, deportation, internment or evacuation, of exposure at sea or of being forced to labour by Germany or her allies), wherever arising and to the surviving dependents of such victims.

3. Damage caused by Germany or her allies in their own territory or in occupied or invaded territory to civilian victims of all acts injurious to health or capacity to work, or to honour, as well as to the surviving dependents of such victims.

4. Damage caused by any kind of maltreatment of prisoners of war.

5. As damage caused to the peoples of the Allied and Associated Powers, all pensions and compensations in the nature of pensions to naval and military victims of war (including members of the air forces), whether mutilated, wounded, sick or invalided, and to the dependents of such victims, the amount due to the Allied and Associated Governments being calculated for each of them as being the capitalised cost of such pensions and compensations at the date of the coming into force of the present Treaty, on the basis of the scales in force in France at such date.

6. The cost of assistance by the Governments of the Allied and Associated Powers to prisoners of war and to their families and dependents.

7. Allowances by the Governments of the Allied and Associated Powers to the families and dependents of mobilised persons or persons serving with the forces, the amount due to them for each calendar year in which hostilities occurred being calculated for each Government on the basis of the average scale for such payments in force in France during that year.

8. Damage caused to civilians by being forced by Germany or her allies to labour without just remuneration.

9. Damage in respect of all property wherever situated belonging to any of the Allied or Associated States or their nationals, with the exception of naval and military works or materials, which has been carried off, seized, injured or destroyed by the acts of Germany or her allies on land, on sea or from the air, or damage directly in consequence of hostilities or of any operations of war.

10. Damage in the form of levies, fines and other similar exactions imposed by Germany or her allies upon the civilian population.

ANNEX II.

1.

The Commission referred to in Article 233 shall be called "The Reparation Commission" and is hereinafter referred to as "the Commission."

2.

Delegates to the Commission shall be nominated by the United States of America, Great Britain, France, Italy, Japan, Belgium and Serbia. Each of these Powers will appoint one Delegate and also one Assistant Delegate, who will take his place in case of illness or necessary absence, but at other times will only have the right to be present at proceedings without taking any part therein. On no occasion shall the Delegates of more than five of the above Powers have the right to take part in the proceedings of the Commission and to record their votes. The Delegates of the United States, Great Britain, France and Italy shall have this right on all occasions. The Delegate of Belgium shall have this right on all occasions other than those referred to below. The Delegate of Japan shall have this right on occasions when questions relating to damage at sea, and questions arising under Article 260 of Part IX (Financial Clauses) in which Japanese interests are concerned, are under consideration. The Delegate of the Serb Croat and Slovene State shall have this right when questions relating to Austria, Hungary or Bulgaria are under consideration.

Each Government represented on the Commission shall have the right to withdraw therefrom upon twelve months' notice filed with the Commission and confirmed in the course of the sixth month after the date of the original notice.

Such of the other Allied and Associated Powers as may be interested shall have the right to appoint a Delegate to be present and act as Assessor only while their respective claims and interests are under examination or discussion, but without the right to vote.

4.

In case of the death, resignation or recall of any Delegate, Assistant Delegate or Assessor, a successor to him shall be nominated as soon as possible.

5.

The Commission will have its principal permanent Bureau in Paris and will hold its first meeting in Paris as soon as practicable after the coming into force of the present Treaty, and thereafter will meet in such place or places and at such time as it may deem convenient and as may be necessary for the most expeditious discharge of its duties.

6.

At its first meeting the Commission shall elect from among the Delegates referred to above a Chairman and a Vice-Chairman, who shall hold office for one year and shall be eligible for re-election. If a vacancy in the Chairmanship or Vice-Chairmanship should occur during the annual period, the Commission shall proceed to a new election for the remainder of the said period.

7.

The Commission is authorised to appoint all necessary officers, agents and employees who may be required for the execution of its functions, and to fix their remuneration; to constitute committees, whose members need not necessarily be members of the Commission, and to take all executive steps necessary for the purpose of discharging its duties; and to delegate authority and discretion to officers, agents and committees.

8.

All proceedings of the Commission shall be private, unless, on particular occasions, the Commission shall otherwise determine for special reasons.

9.

The Commission shall be required, if the German Government so desire, to hear, within a period which it will fix from time to time, evidence and arguments on the part of Germany on any question connected with her capacity to pay.

10.

The Commission shall consider the claims and give to the German Government a just opportunity to be heard, but not to take any part whatever in the decisions of the Commission. The Commission shall afford a similar opportunity to the allies of Germany, when it shall consider that their interests are in question.

11.

The Commission shall not be bound by any particular code or rules of law or by any particular rule of evidence or of procedure, but shall be guided by justice, equity and good faith. Its decisions must follow the same principles and rules in all cases where they are applicable. It will establish rules relating to methods of proof of claims. It may act on any trustworthy modes of computation.

12.

The Commission shall have all the powers conferred upon it, and shall exercise all the functions assigned to it by the present Treaty.

The Commission shall in general have wide latitude as to its control and handling of the whole reparation problem as dealt with in this part of the present Treaty and shall have authority to interpret its provisions. Subject to the provisions of the present Treaty, the Commission is constituted by the several Allied and Associated Governments referred to in paragraphs 2 and 3 above as the exclusive agency of the said Governments respectively for receiving, selling, holding, and distributing the reparation payments to be made by Germany under this Part of the present Treaty. The Commission must comply with the following conditions and provisions:—

(a) Whatever part of the full amount of the proved claims is not paid in gold, or in ships, securities, and commodities or otherwise, Germany shall be required, under such conditions as the Commission may determine, to cover by way of guarantee by an equivalent issue of bonds, obligations or otherwise, in order to constitute an acknowledgment of the said part of the debt;

(b) In periodically estimating Germany's capacity to pay, the Commission shall examine the German system of taxation, first to the end that the sums for reparation which Germany is required to pay shall become a charge upon all her revenues prior to that for the service or discharge of any domestic loan, and secondly, so as to satisfy itself that, in general, the German scheme of taxation is fully as heavy proportionately as that of any of the Powers represented on the Commission.

(c) In order to facilitate and continue the immediate restoration of the economic life of the Allied and Associated countries, the Commission will as provided in Article 235 take from Germany by way of security for and acknowledgment of her debt a first instalment of gold bearer bonds free of all taxes or charges of every description established or to be established by the Government of the German Empire or of the German States, or by any authority subject to them; these bonds will be delivered on account and in three portions, the marks gold being payable in conformity with Article 262 of Part IX (Financial Clauses) of the present Treaty as follows:

1. To be issued forthwith 20,000,000,000 Marks gold bearer bonds, payable not later than the 1st May, 1921, without interest. There shall be specially applied towards the amortisation of these bonds the payments which Germany is pledged to make in conformity with Article 235, after deduction of the sums used for the reimbursement of expenses of the armies of occupation and for payment of foodstuffs and raw materials. Such bonds as have not been redeemed by the 1st May, 1921, shall then be exchanged for new bonds of the same type as those provided for below (Paragraph 12, c, 2).

2. To be issued forthwith, further 40,000,000,000 Marks gold bearer bonds, bearing interest at 2½ per cent. per annum between 1921 and 1926, and thereafter at 5 per cent. per annum with an additional 1 per cent. for amortisation beginning in 1926 on the whole amount of the issue.

3. To be delivered forthwith a covering undertaking in writing to issue when, but not until, the Commission is satisfied that Germany can meet such interest and sinking fund obligations, a further instalment of 40,000,000,000 Marks gold 5 per cent. bearer bonds, the time and mode of payment of principle and interest to be determined by the Commission.

The dates for payment of interest, the manner of applying the amortisation fund, and all other questions relating to the issue, management, and regulation of the bond issue shall be determined by the Commission from time to time.

Further issues by way of acknowledgment and security may be required as the Commission subsequently determines from time to time.

(d) In the event of bonds, obligations, or other evidence of indebtedness issued by Germany by way of security for or acknowledgment of her reparation debt being disposed of outright, not by way of pledge, to persons other than the several Governments in whose favour Germany's original reparation indebtedness was created, an amount of such reparation indebtedness shall be deemed to be extinguished corresponding to the nominal value of the bonds, etc., so disposed of outright, and the obligation of Germany in respect of such bonds, shall be confined to her liabilities to the holders of the bonds, as expressed upon their face.

(e) The damage for repairing, reconstructing and rebuilding property in the invaded and devastated districts, including reinstallation of furniture, machinery and other equipment, will be calculated according to the cost at the dates when the work is done.

(f) Decisions of the Commission relating to the total or partial cancellation of the capital or interest of any verified debt of Germany must be accompanied by a statement of its reasons.

As to voting, the Commission will observe the following rules:

When a decision of the Commission is taken, the votes of all the Delegates entitled to vote, or in the absence of any of them, of their Assistant Delegates, shall be recorded. Abstention from voting is to be treated as a vote against the proposal under discussion. Assessors have no vote.

On the following questions unanimity is necessary:

(a) Questions involving the sovereignty of any of the Allied and Associated Powers, or the cancellation of the whole or any part of the debt or obligations of Germany.

(b) Questions of determining the amount and conditions of bonds or other obligations to be issued by the German Government and of fixing the time and manner for selling, negotiating or distributing such bonds.

(c) Any postponement, total or partial, beyond the end of 1930, of the payment of instalments falling due between the 1st May, 1921, and the end of 1926 inclusive.

(d) Any postponement, total or partial, of any instalment falling due after 1926 for a period exceeding three years.

(e) Questions of applying in any particular case a method of measuring damages different from that which has been previously applied in a similar case.

(f) Questions of the interpretation of the provisions of this Part of the present Treaty.

All other questions shall be decided by the vote of a majority.

In case of any difference of opinion among the Delegates, which cannot be solved by reference to their Governments, upon the question whether a given case is one which requires a unanimous vote for its decision or not, such difference shall be referred to the immediate arbitration of some impartial person to be agreed upon by the Governments, whose award the Allied and Associated Governments agree to accept.

14.

Decisions of the Commission, in accordance with the powers conferred upon it, shall forthwith become binding and may be put in to immediate execution without further proceedings.

15.

The Commission will issue to each of the interested Powers, in such form as the Commission shall fix:—

1. A certificate stating that it holds for the account of the said Power bonds of the issues mentioned above, the said certificate, on the demand of the Power concerned, being divisible in a number of parts not exceeding five;

2. From time to time certificates stating the goods delivered by Germany on account of her reparation debt which it holds for the account of the said Power.

The said certificates shall be registered, and upon notice to the Commission, may be transferred by endorsement.

When bonds are issued for sale or negotiation, and when goods are delivered by the Commission, certificates to an equivalent value must be withdrawn.

Interest shall be debited to Germany as from 1st May, 1921, in respect hereto as determined by the Commission, after allowing for sums already covered by cash payments or their equivalent, by bonds issued to the Commission, or under Article 243. The rate of interest shall be 5 per cent, unless the Commission shall determine at some future time that circumstances justify a variation of this rate.

The Commission, in fixing on 1st May, 1921, the total amount of the debt of Germany, may take account of interest due on sums arising out of the reparation of material damage as from 11th November, 1918, up to 1st May, 1921.

In case of default by Germany in the performance of any obligation under this Part of the present Treaty, the Commission will forthwith give notice of such default to each of the interested Powers and may make such recommendations as to the action to be taken in consequence of such default as it may think necessary.

18.

The measures which the Allied and Associated Powers shall have the right to take, in case of voluntary default by Germany, and which Germany agrees not to regard as acts of war, may include economic and financial prohibitions and reprisals and in general such other measures as the respective Governments may determine to be necessary in the circumstances.

19.

Payments required to be made in gold or its equivalent on account of the proved claims of the Allied and Associated Powers may at any time be accepted by the Commission in the form of chattels, properties, commodities, businesses, rights, concessions, within or without German territory, ships, bonds, shares, or securities of any kind, or currencies of Germany or other States, the value of such substitutes for gold being fixed at a fair and just amount by the Commission itself.

20.

The Commission, in fixing or accepting payment in specified properties or rights, shall have due regard for any legal or equitable interests of the Allied and Associated Powers or of neutral Powers or of their nationals therein.

21.

No member of the Commission shall be responsible, except to the Government appointing him, for any action or omission as such member. No one of the Allied or Associated Governments assumes any responsibility in respect of any other Government.

22.

Subject to the provisions of the present Treaty this Annex may be amended by the unanimous decision of the Governments represented from time to time upon the Commission.

23.

When all the amounts due from Germany and her allies under the present Treaty or the decisions of the Commission have been discharged and all sums received, or their equivalents, shall have been distributed to the Powers interested, the Commission shall be dissolved.

ANNEX III.

1.

Germany recognises the right of the Allied and Associated Powers to the replacement, ton for ton (gross tonnage) and class for class, of all merchant ships and fishing boats lost or damaged owing to the war.

Nevertheless, and in spite of the fact that the tonnage of German shipping at present in existence is much less than that lost by the Allied and Associated Powers in consequence of the German aggression, the right thus recognised will be enforced on German ships and boats under the following conditions:

The German Government on behalf of themselves and so as to bind all other persons interested, cede to the Allied and Associated Governments the property in all the German merchant ships which are of 1,600 tons gross and upwards; in one-half, reckoned in tonnage, of the ships which are between 1,000 tons and 1,600 tons gross; in one-quarter, reckoned in tonnage, of the steam trawlers; and in one-quarter, reckoned in tonnage, of the other fishing boats.

2.

The German Government will, within two months of the coming into force of the present Treaty, deliver to the Reparation Commission all the ships and boats mentioned in Paragraph I.

3.

The ships and boats mentioned in Paragraph I include all ships and boats which (a) fly, or may be entitled to fly, the German merchant flag; or (b) are owned by any German national, company or corporation or by any company or corporation belonging to a country other than an Allied or Associated country and under the control or direction of German nationals; or (c) which are now under construction (1) in Germany, (2) in other than Allied or Associated countries for the account of any German national, company, or corporation.

For the purpose of providing documents of title for the ships and boats to be handed over as above mentioned, the German Government will:

(a) Deliver to the Reparation Commission in respect of each vessel a bill of sale or other document of title evidencing the transfer to the Commission of the entire property in the vessel, free from all encumbrances, charges and liens of all kinds, as the Commission may require;

(b) Take all measures that may be indicated by the Reparation Commission for ensuring that the ships themselves shall be placed at its disposal.

As an additional part of reparation, Germany agrees to cause merchant ships to be built in German yards for the account of the Allied and Associated Governments as follows:

(a) Within three months of the coming into force of the present Treaty, the Reparation Commission will notify to the German Government the amount of tonnage to be laid down in German shipyards in each of the two years next succeeding the three months mentioned above;

(b) Within twenty-four months of the coming into force of the present Treaty, the Reparation Commission will notify to the German Government the amount of tonnage to be laid down in each of the three years following the two years mentioned above;

(c) The amount of tonnage to be laid down in each year shall not exceed 200,000 tons, gross tonnage;

(d) The specifications of the ships to be built, the conditions under which they are to be built and delivered, the price per ton at which they are to be accounted for by the Reparation Commission, and all other questions relating to the accounting, ordering, building and delivery of the ships, shall be determined by the Commission.

Germany undertakes to restore in kind and in normal condition of upkeep to the Allied and Associated Powers, within two months of the coming into force of the present Treaty, in accordance with procedure to be laid down by the Reparation Commission, any boats and other movable appliances belonging to inland navigation which since the 1st August, 1914, have by any means whatever come into her possession or into the possession of her nationals, and which can be identified.

With a view to make good the loss in inland navigation tonnage, from whatever cause arising, which has been incurred during the war by the Allied and Associated Powers, and which cannot be made good by means of the restitution prescribed above, Germany agrees to cede to the Reparation Commission a portion of the German river fleet up to the amount of the loss mentioned above, provided that such cession shall not exceed 20 per cent. of the river fleet as it existed on the 11th November, 1918.

The conditions of this cession shall be settled by the Arbitrators referred to in Article 339 of Part XII (Ports, Waterways and Railways) of the present Treaty, who are charged with the settlement of difficulties relating to the apportionment of river tonnage resulting from the new international régime applicable to certain river systems or from the territorial changes affecting those systems.

Germany agrees to take any measures that may be indicated to her by the Reparation Commission for obtaining the full title to the property in all ships which have during the war been transferred, or are in process of transfer, to neutral flags, without the consent of the Allied and Associated Governments.

8.

Germany waives all claims of any description against the Allied and Associated Governments and their nationals in respect of the detention, employment, loss or damage of any German ships or boats, exception being made of payments due in respect of the employment of ships in conformity with the Armistice Agreement of the 13th January, 1919, and subsequent Agreements.

The handing over of the ships of the German mercantile marine must be continued without interruption in accordance with the said agreement.

Germany waives all claims to vessels or cargoes sunk by or in consequence of naval action and subsequently salved, in which any of the Allied or Associated Governments or their nationals may have any interest either as owners, charterers, insurers or otherwise, notwithstanding any decree of condemnation which may have been made by a Prize Court of Germany or of her Allies.

ANNEX IV.

1.

The Allied and Associated Powers require, and Germany undertakes, that in part satisfaction of her obligations expressed in this Part of the present Treaty she will, as hereinafter provided, devote her economic resources directly to the physical restoration of the invaded areas of the Allied and Associated Powers, to the extent that these Powers may determine.

2.

The Allied and Associated Governments may file with the Reparation Commission lists showing:

(a) Animals, machinery, equipment, tools and like articles of a commercial character, which have been seized, consumed or destroyed by Germany or destroyed in direct consequence of military operations, and which such Governments, for the purpose of meeting immediate and urgent needs, desire to have replaced by animals and articles of the same nature which are in being in German territory at the date of the coming into force of the present Treaty;

(b) Reconstruction materials (stones, bricks, refractory bricks, tiles, wood, window-glass, steel, lime, cement, etc.), machinery, heating apparatus, furniture, and like articles of a commercial character which the said Governments desire to have produced and manufactured in Germany and delivered to them to permit of the restoration of the invaded areas.

The lists relating to the Articles mentioned in 2 (a) above shall be filed within sixty days after the date of the coming into force of the present Treaty. The lists relating to the articles in 2 (b) above shall be filed on or before the 31st December, 1919. The lists shall contain all such details as are customary in commercial contracts dealing with the subject matter, including specifications, dates of delivery (but not extending over more than four years), and places of delivery, but not price or value, which shall be fixed as hereinafter provided by the Commission.

Immediately upon the filing of such lists with the Commission, the Commission shall consider the amount and number of the materials and animals mentioned in the lists provided for above which are to be required of Germany. In reaching a decision on this matter the Commission shall take into account such domestic requirements of Germany as it deems essential for the maintenance of Germany's social and economic life, the prices and dates at which similar articles can be obtained in the Allied and Associated countries as compared with those to be fixed for German articles, and the general interest of the Allied and Associated Governments that the industrial life of Germany be not so disorganised as to affect adversely the ability of Germany to perform the other acts of reparation stipulated for. Machinery, equipment, tools and like articles of a commercial character in actual industrial use are not, however, to be demanded of Germany unless there is no free stock of such articles respectively which is not in use and is available, and then not in excess of thirty per cent, of the quantity of such articles in use in any one establishment or undertaking.

The Commission shall give representatives of the German Government an opportunity and a time to be heard as to their capacity to furnish the said materials, articles and animals. The decision of the Commission shall thereupon and at the earliest possible moment be communicated to the German Government and to the several interested Allied and Associated Governments. The German Government undertakes to deliver the materials, articles and animals as specified in the said communication, and the interested Allied and Associated Governments severally agree to accept the same, provided they conform to the specification given, or are not, in the judgment of the Commission, unfit to be utilized in the work of reparation.

The Commission shall determine the value to be attributed to the materials, articles and animals to be delivered in accordance with the foregoing, and the Allied or Associated Power receiving the same agrees to be charged with such value, and the amount thereof shall be treated as a payment by Germany to be divided in accordance with Article 237 of this Part of the present Treaty.

In cases where the right to require physical restoration as above provided is exercised, the Commission shall ensure that the amount to be credited against the reparation obligation of Germany shall be the fair value of work done or materials supplied by Germany, and that the claim made by the interested Power in respect of the damage so repaired by physical restoration shall be discharged to the extent of the proportion which the damage thus repaired bears to the whole of the damage thus claimed for.

As an immediate advance on account of the animals referred to in paragraph 2 (a) above, Germany undertakes to deliver in equal monthly instalments in the three months following the coming into force of the present Treaty, the following quantities of live stock:

1. To the French Government.

500 stallions (3 to 7 years).
30,000 fillies and mares (18 months to 7 years) Type: Ardennais, Boulonnais or Belgian.
2,000 bulls (18 months to 3 years).
90,000 milch cows (2 to 6 years).
1,000 rams.
100,000 sheep.
10,000 goats.

2. To the Belgian Government.

200 stallions (3 to 7 years), large Belgian type.
5,000 mares (3 to 7 years), large Belgian type.
5,000 fillies (18 months to 3 years), large Belgian type.
2,000 bulls (18 months to 3 years).
50,000 milch cows (2 to 6 years).
40,000 heifers.
200 rams.
20,000 sheep.
15,000 sows.

The animals delivered shall be of average health and condition.

To the extent that animals so delivered cannot be identified as animals taken away or seized, the value of such animals shall be credited against the reparation obligations of Germany in accordance with Paragraph 5 of this Annex.

7.

Without waiting for the decisions of the Commission referred to in paragraph 4 of this Annex to be taken, Germany must continue the delivery to France of the agricultural material referred to in Article III of the Renewal of the Armistice of 16th January 1919.

ANNEX V.

1.

Germany accords the following options for the delivery of coal and derivatives of coal to the undermentioned signatories of the present Treaty.

2.

Germany undertakes to deliver to France seven million tons of coal per year for ten years. In addition, Germany undertakes to deliver to France annually for a period not exceeding ten years an amount of coal equal to the difference between the annual production before the war of the coal mines of the Nord and Pas de Calais, destroyed as a result of the war, and the production of the mines of the same area during the years in question: such delivery not to exceed twenty million tons in any one year of the first five years, and eight million tons in any one year of the succeeding five years.

It is understood that due diligence will be exercised in the restoration of the destroyed mines in the Nord and the Pas de Calais.

3.

Germany undertakes to deliver to Belgium eight million tons of coal annually for ten years.

4.

Germany undertakes to deliver to Italy up to the following quantities of coal:

July 1919 to June		1920	4½	million tons.
— 1920	—	1921	6	—
— 1921	—	1922	7½	—
— 1922	—	1923	8	—
— 1923	—	1924	8½	—
and each of the following five years

At least two-thirds of the actual deliveries to be land-borne.

5.

Germany further undertakes to deliver annually to Luxemburg, if directed by the Reparation Commission, a quantity of coal equal to the pre-war annual consumption of German coal in Luxemburg.

6.

The prices to be paid for coal delivered under these options shall be as follows:

(a) For overland delivery, including delivery by barge, the German pithead price to German nationals, plus the freight to French, Belgian, Italian or Luxemburg frontiers, provided that the pithead price does not exceed the pithead price of British coal for export.

In the case of Belgian bunker coal, the price shall not exceed the Dutch bunker price.

Railroad and barge tariffs shall not be higher than the lowest similar rates paid in Germany.

(b) For sea delivery, the German export price f. o. b. the German ports, or the British export price f. o. b. British ports, whichever may be lower.

7.

The Allied and Associated Governments interested may demand the delivery, in place of coal, of metallurgical coke in the proportion of 3 tons of coke to 4 tons of coal.

8.

Germany undertakes to deliver to France, and to transport to the French frontier by rail or by water the following products, during each of the three years following the coming into force of this Treaty:

Benzol	35,000 tons.
Coal tar	50,000 tons.
Sulphate of ammonia	30,000 tons.

All or part of the coal tar may, at the option of the French Government, be replaced by corresponding quantities of products of distillation, such as light oils, heavy oils, anthracene, naphthaline, or pitch.

9.

The price paid for coke and for the articles referred to in the preceding paragraph shall be the same as the price paid by German nationals under the same conditions of shipment to the French frontier or to the German ports, and shall be subject to any advantages which may be accorded similar products furnished to German nationals.

10.

The foregoing options shall be exercised through the intervention of the Reparation Commission, which, subject to the specific provisions hereof, shall have power to determine all questions relative to procedure and the qualities and quantities of products, the quantity of coke which may be substituted for coal, and the times and modes of delivery and payment. In giving notice to the German Government of the foregoing options the Commission shall give at least 120 days' notice of deliveries to be made after the 1st January, 1920, and at least 30 days' notice of deliveries to be made between the coming into force of this Treaty and the 1st January, 1920. Until Germany has received the demands referred to in this paragraph, the provision of the Protocol of 25th December, 1918 (Execution of Article VI of the Armistice of 11th November, 1918) remain in force. The notice to be given to the German Government of the exercise of the right of substitution accorded by paragraphs 7 and 8 shall be such as the Reparation Commission may consider sufficient. If the Commission shall determine that the full exercise of the foregoing options would interfere unduly with the industrial requirements of Germany, the Commission is authorised to postpone or to cancel deliveries, and in so doing to settle all questions of priority; but the coal to replace coal from destroyed mines shall receive priority over other deliveries.

ANNEX VI.

Germany accords to the Reparation Commission an option to require as part of reparation the delivery by Germany of such quantities and kinds of dyestuffs and chemical drugs as the Commission may designate, not exceeding 50 per cent. of the total stock of each and every kind of dyestuff and chemical drug in Germany or under German control at the date of the coming into force of the present Treaty.

This option shall be exercised within sixty days of the receipt by the Commission of such particulars as to stocks as may be considered necessary by the Commission.

Germany further accords to the Reparation Commission an option to require delivery during the period from the date of the coming into force of the present Treaty until the 1st January, 1920, and during each period of six months thereafter until the 1st January, 1925, of any specified kind of dyestuff and chemical drug up to an amount not exceeding 25 per cent. of the German production of such dyestuffs and chemical drugs during the previous six months period. If in any case the production during such previous six months was, in the opinion of the Commission, less than normal, the amount required may be 25 per cent. of the normal production.

Such option shall be exercised within four weeks after the receipt of such particulars as to production and in such form as may be considered necessary by the Commission: these particulars shall be furnished by the German Government immediately after the expiration of each six-months period.

For dyestuffs and chemical drugs delivered under paragraph 1, the price shall be fixed by the Commission having regard to pre-war net export prices and to subsequent increases of cost.

For dyestuffs and chemical drugs delivered under paragraph 2 the price shall be fixed by the Commission having regard to pre-war net export prices and subsequent variations of cost or the lowest net selling price of similar dyestuffs and chemical drugs to any other purchaser.

4.

All details, including mode and times of exercising the options, and making delivery, and all other questions arising under this arrangement shall be determined by the Reparation Commission; the German Government will furnish to the Commission all necessary information and other assistance which it may require.

5.

The above expression "dyestuffs and chemical drugs" includes all synthetic dyes and drugs and intermediate or other products used in connection with dyeing, so far as they are manufactured for sale. The present arrangement shall also apply to cinchona bark and salts of quinine.

ANNEX VII.

Germany renounces on her own behalf and on behalf of her nationals in favour of the Principal Allied and Associated Powers all rights, titles or privileges of whatever nature in the submarine cables set out below, or in any portions thereof:

Emden-Vigo: from the Straits of Dover to off Vigo;
Emden-Brest: from off Cherbourg to Brest;
Emden-Teneriffe: from off Dunkirk to off Teneriffe;
Emden-Azores (1): from the Straits of Dover to Fayal;
Emden-Azores (2): from the Straits of Dover to Fayal;
Azores-New-York (1): from Fayal to New-York;
Azores-New-York (2): from Fayal to the longitude of Halifax;
Teneriffe-Monrovia: from off Teneriffe to off Monrovia;
Monrovia-Lome:

from about	lat.	2° 30′ N.;
	long.	7° 40′ W. of Greenwich;
to about	lat.	2° 20′ N.;
	long.	5° 30′ W. of Greenwich;
and from about	lat.	3° 48′ N.;
	long.	0° 00′,

to Lome;

Lome-Duala: from Lome to Duala;
Monrovia-Pernambuco: from off Monrovia to off Pernambuco;
Constantinople-Constanza: from Constantinople to Constanza;
Yap-Shanghai, Yap-Guam, and Yap-Menado (Celebes): from Yap Island to Shanghai, from Yap Island to Guam Island, and from Yap Island to Menado.

The value of the above-mentioned cables or portions thereof in so far as they are privately owned, calculated on the basis of the original cost less a suitable allowance for depreciation, shall be credited to Germany in the reparation account.

Section II. Special provisions.

ARTICLE 245.

Within six months after the coming into force of the present Treaty the German Government must restore to the French Government the trophies, archives, historical souvenirs or works of art carried away from France by the German authorities in the course of the war of 1870–1871 and during this last war in accordance with a list which will be communicated to it by the French Government; particularly the French flags taken in the course of the war of 1870–1871 and all the political papers taken by the German authorities on October 10, 1870, at the chateau of Cercay, near Brunoy (Seine-et-Oise) belonging at the time to Mr. Rouher, formerly Minister of State.

ARTICLE 246.

Within six months from the coming into force of the present Treaty, Germany will restore to His Majesty the King of the Hedjaz the original Koran of the Caliph Othman, which was removed from Medina by the Turkish authorities and is stated to have been presented to the ex-Emperor William II.

Within the same period Germany will hand over to His Britannic Majesty's Government the skull of the Sultan Mkwawa which was removed from the Protectorate of German East Africa and taken to Germany.

The delivery of the articles above referred to will be effected in such place and in such conditions as may be laid down by the Governments to which they are to be restored.

ARTICLE 247.

Germany undertakes to furnish to the University of Louvain, within three months after a request made by it and transmitted through the intervention of the Reparation Commission, manuscripts, incunabula, printed books, maps, and objects of collection corresponding in number and value to those destroyed in the burning by Germany of the Library of Louvain. All details regarding such replacement will be determined by the Reparation Commission.

7. Germany undertakes to deliver to Belgium, through the Reparation Commission, within six months of the coming into force of the present Treaty, in order to enable Belgium to reconstitute her two great artistic works:

(a) The leaves of the triptych of the Mystic Lamb painted by the Van Eyck brothers, formerly in the Church of St. Bavon at Ghent, now in the Berlin Museum.

(b) The leaves of the triptych of the Last Supper, painted by Dierick Bouts, formerly in the Church of St. Peter at Louvain, two of which are now in the Berlin Museum and two in the former Pinakothek at Munich.

PART IX.
FINANCIAL CLAUSES.

ARTICLE 248.

The first charge upon all the assets and revenues of the German Empire and its constituent States shall be the cost of reparation and all other costs arising under the present Treaty or any treaties or agreements supplementary thereto or under arrangements concluded between Germany and the Allied and Associated Powers during the Armistice or its extensions.

Up to the May 1st, 1921, the German Government shall not export or dispose of, and shall forbid the export or disposal of, gold without the previous approval of the Allied and Associated Powers acting through the Reparation Commission.

ARTICLE 249.

There shall be paid by the German Government the total cost of all armies of the Allied and Associated Governments in occupied German territory from the date of the signature of the Armistice of the 11th November, 1918, including the keep of men and beasts, lodging and billeting, pay and allowances, salaries and wages, bedding, heating, lighting, clothing, equipment, harness and saddlery, armament and rolling-stock, air services, treatment of sick and wounded, veterinary and remount services, transport service of all sorts (such as by rail, sea or river, motor lorries), communications and correspondence, and in general the cost of all administrative or technical services the working of which is necessary for the training of troops and for keeping their numbers up to strength and preserving their military efficiency.

The cost of such liabilities under the above heads so far as they relate to purchases or requisitions by the Allied and Associated Governments in the occupied territories shall be paid by the German Government to the Allied and Associated Governments in marks at the current or agreed rate of exchange. All other of the above costs shall be paid in gold marks.

ARTICLE 250.

Germany confirms the surrender of all material handed over to the Allied and Associated Powers in accordance with the Armistice Agreement of the 11th November, 1918, and subsequent Armistice Agreements, and recognises the title of the Allied and Associated Powers to such material.

There shall be credited to the German Government, against the sums due from it to the Allied and Associated Powers for reparation, the value, as assessed by the Reparation Commission, referred to in Article 233 of Part VIII (Reparation) of the present Treaty, of the material handed over in accordance with Article VII of the Armistice Agreement of the 11th November, 1918, Article III of the Armistice Agreement of the 16th January, 1919, as well as of any other material handed over in accordance with the Armistice Agreement of the 11th November, 1918, and of subsequent Armistice Agreements, for which, as having non-military value, credit should in the judgment of the Reparation Commission be allowed to the German Government.

Property belonging to the Allied and Associated Governments or their nationals restored or surrendered under the Armistice Agreements in specie shall not be credited to the German Government.

ARTICLE 251.

The priority of the charges established by Article 248 shall, subject to the qualifications made below, be as follows:—

(a) The cost of the armies of occupation as defined under Article 249 during the Armistice and its extensions;

(b) The cost of any armies of occupation as defined under Article 249 after the coming into force of the present Treaty;

(c) The cost of reparation arising out of the present Treaty or any treaties or conventions supplementary thereto;

(d) The cost of all other obligations incumbent on Germany under the Armistice Conventions or under this Treaty or any treaties or conventions supplementary thereto.

The payment for such supplies of food and raw material for Germany and such other payments as may be judged by the Allied and Associated Powers to be essential to enable Germany to meet her obligations in respect of reparation will have priority to the extent and upon the conditions which have been or may be determined by the Governments of the said Powers.

ARTICLE 252.

The right of each of the Allied and Associated Powers to dispose of enemy assets and property within its jurisdiction at the date of the coming into force of the present Treaty is not affected by the foregoing provisions.

ARTICLE 253.

Nothing in the foregoing provisions shall prejudice in any manner charges or mortgages lawfully effected in favour of the Allied or Associated Powers or their nationals, respectively, before the date at which a state of war existed between Germany and the Allied or Associated Power concerned, by the German Empire or its constituent States, or by German nationals, on assets in their ownership at that date.

ARTICLE 254.

The Powers to which German territory is ceded shall, subject to the qualifications made in Article 255, undertake to pay:—

(i.) A portion of the debt of the German Empire as it stood on the 1st August, 1914, calculated on the basis of the ratio between the average for the three financial years 1911, 1912, 1913, of such revenues of the ceded territory, and the average for the same years of such revenues of the whole German Empire as in the judgment of the Reparation Commission are best calculated to represent the relative ability of the respective territories to make payment;

(ii.) A portion of the debt as it stood on the 1st August, 1914, of the German State to which the ceded territory belonged, to be determined in accordance with the principle stated above.

Such portions shall be determined by the Reparation Commission.

The method of discharging the obligation, both in respect of capital and of interest, so assumed shall be fixed by the Reparation Commission. Such method may take the form, inter alia, of the assumption by the Power to which the territory is ceded of Germany's liability for the German debt held by her nationals. But in the event of the method adopted involving any payments to the German Government, such payments shall be transferred to the Reparation Commission on account of the sums due for reparation so long as any balance in respect of such sums remains unpaid.

ARTICLE 255.

(1) As an exception to the above provision and inasmuch as in 1871 Germany refused to undertake any portion of the burden of the French debt, France shall be, in respect of Alsace-Lorraine, exempt from any payment under Article 254.

(2) In the case of Poland that portion of the debt which, in the opinion of the Reparation Commission, is attributable to the measures taken by the German and Prussian Governments for the German colonisation of Poland shall be excluded from the apportionment to be made under Article 254.

(3) In the case of all ceded territories other than Alsace-Lorraine, that portion of the debt of the German Empire or German States which, in the opinion of the Reparation Commission represents expenditure by the Governments of the German Empire or States upon the Government properties referred to in Article 256 shall be excluded from the apportionment to be made under Article 254.

ARTICLE 256.

Powers to which German territory is ceded shall acquire all property and possessions situated therein belonging to the German Empire or to the German States, and the value of such acquisitions shall be fixed by the Reparation Commission, and paid by the State acquiring the territory to the Reparation Commission for the credit of the German Government on account of the sums due for Reparation.

For the purposes of this Article the property and possessions of the German Empire and States shall be deemed to include all the property of the Crown, the Empire or the States, and the private property of the former German Emperor and other Royal personages.

In view of the terms on which Alsace-Lorraine was ceded to Germany in 1871, France shall be exempt in respect thereof from making any payment or credit under this Article for any property or possessions of the German Empire or States situated therein.

Belgium also shall be exempt from making any payment or any credit under this Article for any property or possessions of the German Empire or States situated in German territory ceded to Belgium under the present Treaty.

ARTICLE 257.

In the case of the former German territories, including colonies, protectorates, or dependencies, administered by a Mandatory under Article 22 of Part I (League of Nations) of the present Treaty, neither the territory nor the Mandatory Power shall be charged with any portion of the debt of the German Empire or States.

All property and possessions belonging to the German Empire or to the German States situated in such territories shall be transferred with the territories to the Mandatory Power in its capacity as such and no payment shall be made nor any credit given to those Governments in consideration of this transfer.

For the purposes of this Article the property and possessions of the German Empire and of the German States shall be deemed to include all the property of the Crown, the Empire or the States and the private property of the former German Emperor and other Royal personages.

ARTICLE 258.

Germany renounces all rights accorded to her or her nationals by Treaties, Conventions or Agreements, of whatsoever kind, to representation upon or participation in the control or administration of commissions, state banks, agencies or other financial or economic organisations of an international character, exercising powers of control or administration, and operating in any of the Allied or Associated States, or in Austria, Hungary, Bulgaria or Turkey, or in the dependencies of these States, or in the former Russian Empire.

ARTICLE 259.

(1) Germany agrees to deliver within one month from the date of the coming into force of the present Treaty, to such authority as the Principal Allied and Associated Powers may designate, the sum in gold deposited in the Reichsbank in the name of the Council of the Administration of the Ottoman Public Debt as security for the first issue of Turkish Government currency notes.

(2) Germany recognises her obligation to make annually for the period of twelve years the payments in gold for which provision is made in the German Treasury Bonds deposited by her from time to time in the name of the Council of the Administration of the Ottoman Public Debt as security for the second and subsequent issues of Turkish Government currency notes.

(3) Germany undertakes to deliver, within one month from the coming into force of the present Treaty, to such authority as the Principal Allied and Associated Powers may designate, the sum deposited in gold in the Reichsbank, representing the residue of the advance in gold agreed to on the 5th of May, 1915, by the Council of the Administration of the Ottoman Public Debt to the Imperial Ottoman Government.

(4) Germany agrees to transfer to the Principal Allied and Associated Powers any title that she may have to the sum in gold and silver transmitted by her to the Turkish Ministry of Finance in November, 1918, in anticipation of the payment to be made in May, 1919, for the service of the Turkish Internal Loan.

(5) Germany undertakes to transfer to the Principal Allied and Associated Powers, within a period of one month from the coming into force of the present treaty, any sums in gold transferred as pledge or as collateral security to the German Government or its nationals in connection with loans made by them to the Austro-Hungarian Government.

(6) Without prejudice to Article 292 of Part X (Economic Clauses) of the present Treaty, Germany confirms the renunciation provided for in Article XV of the Armistice Convention of the 11th November, 1918, of any benefit disclosed by the Treaties of Bucharest and of Brest-Litovsk and by the Treaties supplementary thereto.

Germany undertakes to transfer, either to Roumania or to the Principal Allied and Associated Powers as the case may be, all monetary instruments, specie, securities and negotiable instruments, or goods, which she has received under the aforesaid Treaties.

(7) The sums of money and all securities, instruments and goods of whatsoever nature, to be delivered, paid and transferred under the provisions of this article, shall be disposed of by the Principal Allied and Associated Powers in a manner hereafter to be determined by those Powers.

ARTICLE 260.

Without prejudice to the renunciation of any rights by Germany on behalf of herself or of her nationals in the other provisions of the present Treaty, the Reparation Commission may within one year from the coming into force of the present Treaty demand that the German Government become possessed of any rights and interests of the German nationals in any public utility undertaking or in any concession operating in Russia, China, Turkey, Austria, Hungary and Bulgaria, or in the possessions or dependencies of these States or in any territory formerly belonging to Germany or her allies, to be ceded by Germany or her allies to any Power or to be administered by a Mandatory under the present Treaty, and may require that the German Government transfer, within six months of the date of demand, all such rights and interests and any similar rights and interests the German Government may itself possess to the Reparation Commission.

Germany shall be responsible for indemnifying her nationals so dispossessed, and the Reparation Commission shall credit Germany on account of sums due for reparation, with such sums in respect of the value of the transferred rights and interests as may be assessed by the Reparation Commission, and the German Government shall, within six months from the coming into force of the present Treaty, communicate to the Reparation Commission all such rights and interests, whether already granted, contingent or not yet exercised, and shall renounce on behalf of itself and its nationals in favour of the Allied and Associated Powers all such rights and interests which have not been so communicated.

ARTICLE 261.

Germany undertakes to transfer to the Allied and Associated Powers any claims she may have to payment or repayment by the Governments of Austria, Hungary, Bulgaria or Turkey, and, in particular, any claims which may arise, now or hereafter, from the fulfilment of undertakings made by Germany during the war to those Governments.

ARTICLE 262.

Any monetary obligation due by Germany arising out of the present Treaty and expressed in terms of gold marks shall be payable at the option of the creditors in pounds sterling payable in London; gold dollars of the United States of America payable in New York; gold francs payable in Paris; or gold lire payable in Rome.

For the purpose of this Article the gold coins mentioned above shall be defined as being of the weight and fineness of gold as enacted by law on the 1st January, 1914.

ARTICLE 263.

Germany gives a guarantee to the Brazilian Government that all sums representing the compulsory sale of coffee belonging to the State of Sao Paolo in the ports of Hamburg, Bremen, Antwerp and Trieste, which were deposited with the Bank of Bleichröder at Berlin, shall be reimbursed together with interest at 5 per cent. from the day of the deposit. Germany, having prevented the transfer of the sums in question to the State of Sao Paolo at the proper time, guarantees also that the reimbursement shall be effected at the rate of exchange of the day of the deposit.

PART X.

ECONOMIC CLAUSES.

Section I. Commercial relations.

Chapter I. Customs regulations, duties, and restrictions.

ARTICLE 264.

Germany undertakes that goods the produce or manufacture of any one of the Allied or Associated States imported into German territory, from whatsoever place arriving, shall not be subjected to other or higher duties or charges (including internal charges) than those to which the like goods the produce or manufacture of any other such State or of any other foreign country are subject.

Germany will not maintain or impose any prohibition or restriction on the importation into German territory, of any goods the produce or manufacture of the territories of any one of the Allied or Associated States, from whatsoever place arriving, which shall not equally extend to the importation of the like goods the produce or manufacture of any other such State or of any other foreign country.

ARTICLE 265.

Germany further undertakes that, in the matter of the régime applicable on importation, no discrimination against the commerce of any of the Allied and Associated States as compared with any other of the said States or any other foreign country shall be made, even by indirect means, such as customs regulations or procedure, methods of verification or analysis, conditions of payment of duties, tariff classification or interpretation, or the operation of monopolies.

ARTICLE 266.

In all that concerns exportation Germany undertakes that goods, natural products or manufactured articles, exported from German territory to the territories of any one of the Allied or Associated States shall not be subjected to other or higher duties of charges (including internal charges) than those paid on the like goods exported to any other such State or to any other foreign country.

Germany will not maintain or impose any prohibition or restriction on the exportation of any goods sent from her territory to any one of the Allied or Associated States which shall not equally extend to the exportation of the like goods, natural products or manufactured articles, sent to any other such State or to any other foreign country.

ARTICLE 267.

Every favour, immunity, or privilege in regard to the importation, exportation or transit of goods granted by Germany to any Allied or Associated State or to any other foreign country whatever shall simultaneously and unconditionally, without request and without compensation, be extended to all the Allied and Associated States.

ARTICLE 268.

The provisions of Articles 264 to 267 inclusive of this Chapter and of Article 323 of Part XII (Ports, Waterways and Rail-ways) of the present Treaty are subject to the following exceptions:

(a) For a period of five years from the coming into force of the present Treaty, natural or manufactured products which both originate in and come from the territories of Alsace and Lorraine reunited to France shall, on importation into German customs territory, be exempt from all customs duty.

The French Government shall fix each year, by decree communicated to the German Government, the nature and amount of the products which shall enjoy this exemption.

The amount of each product which may be thus sent annually into Germany shall not exceed the average of the amounts sent annually in the years 1911–1913.

Further, during the period above mentioned the German Government shall allow the free export from Germany, and the free re-importation into Germany, exempt from all customs duties and other charges (including internal charges), of yarns, tissues, and other textile materials or textile products of any kind and in any condition, sent from Germany into the territories of Alsace or Lorraine, to be subjected there to any finishing process, such as bleaching, dyeing, printing, mercerisation, gassing, twisting or dressing.

(b) During a period of three years from the coming into force of the present Treaty natural or manufactured products which both originate in and come from Polish territories which before the war were part of Germany shall, on importation into German customs territory, be exempt from all customs duty.

The Polish Government shall fix each year, by decree communicated to the German Government, the nature and amount of the products which shall enjoy this exemption.

The amount of each product which may be thus sent annually into Germany shall not exceed the average of the amounts sent annually in the years 1911–1913.

(c) The Allied and Associated Powers reserve the right to require Germany to accord freedom from customs duty, on importation into German customs territory, to natural products and manufactured articles which both originate in and come from the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg, for a period of five years from the coming into force of the present Treaty.

The nature and amount of the products which shall enjoy the benefits of this régime shall be communicated each year to the German Government.

The amount of each product which may be thus sent annually into Germany shall not exceed the average of the amounts sent annually in the years 1911–1913.

ARTICLE 269.

During the first six months after the coming into force of the present Treaty, the duties imposed by Germany on imports from Allied and Associated States shall not be higher than the most favourable duties which were applied to imports into Germany on the 31st July, 1914.

During a further period of thirty months after the expiration of the first six months, this provision shall continue to be applied exclusively with regard to products which, being comprised in Section A of the First Category of the German Customs Tariff of the 25th December, 1902, enjoyed at the above-mentioned date (31st July, 1914) rates conventionalised by treaties with the Allied and Associated Powers, with the addition of all kinds of wine and vegetable oils, of artificial silk and of washed or scoured wool, whether or not they were the subject of special Conventions before the 31st July, 1914.

ARTICLE 270.

The Allied and Associated Powers reserve the right to apply to German territory occupied by their troops a special customs régime as regards imports and exports, in the event of such a measure being necessary in their opinion in order to safeguard the economic interests of the population of these territories.

Chapter II. Shipping.

ARTICLE 271.

As regards sea fishing, maritime coasting trade, and maritime towage, vessels of the Allied and Associated Powers shall enjoy, in German territorial waters, the treatment accorded to vessels of the most favoured nation.

ARTICLE 272.

Germany agrees that, notwithstanding any stipulation to the contrary contained in the Conventions relating to the North Sea Fisheries and Liquor Traffic, all rights of inspection and police shall, in the case of fishing-boats of the Allied Powers, be exercised solely by ships belonging to those Powers.

ARTICLE 273.

In the case of vessels of the Allied or Associated Powers, all classes of certificates or documents relating to the vessel, which were recognised as valid by Germany before the war, or which may hereafter be recognised as valid by the principal maritime States, shall be recognised by Germany as valid and as equivalent to the corresponding certificates issued to German vessels.

A similar recognition shall be accorded to the certificates and documents issued to their vessels by the Governments of new States, whether they have a sea-coast or not, provided that such certificates and documents shall be issued in conformity with the general practice observed in the principal maritime States.

The High Contracting Parties agree to recognise the flag flown by the vessels of an Allied or Associated Power having no sea-coast which are registered at some one specified place situated in its territory; such place shall serve as the port of registry of such vessels.

Chapter III. Unfair competition.

ARTICLE 274.

Germany undertakes to adopt all the necessary legislative and administrative measures to protect goods the produce or manufacture of any one of the Allied and Associated Powers from all forms of unfair competition in commercial transactions.

Germany undertakes to prohibit and repress by seizure and by other appropriate remedies the importation, exportation, manufacture, distribution, sale or offering for sale in its territory of all goods bearing upon themselves or their usual get-up or wrappings any marks, names, devices, or descriptions whatsoever which are calculated to convey directly or indirectly a false indication of the origin, type, nature, or special characteristics of such goods.

ARTICLE 275.

Germany undertakes on condition that reciprocity is accorded in these matters to respect any law, or any administrative or judicial decision given in conformity with such law, in force in any Allied or Associated State and duly communicated to her by the proper authorities, defining or regulating the right to any regional appellation in respect of wine or spirits produced in the State to which the region belongs or the conditions under which the use of any such appellation may be permitted; and the importation, exportation, manufacture, distribution, sale or offering for sale of products or articles bearing regional appellations inconsistent with such law or order shall be prohibited by the German Government and repressed by the measures prescribed in the preceding article.

Chapter IV. Treatment of nationals of allied and associated powers.

ARTICLE 276.

Germany undertakes:—

(a) not to subject the nationals of the Allied and Associated Powers to any prohibition in regard to the exercise of occupations, professions, trade and industry, which shall not be equally applicable to all aliens without exception;

(b) not to subject the nationals of the Allied and Associated Powers in regard to the rights referred to in paragraph (a) to any regulation or restriction which might contravene directly or indirectly the stipulations of the said paragraph, or which shall be other or more disadvantageous than those which are applicable to nationals of the most favoured nation;

(c) not to subject the nationals of the Allied and Associated Powers, their property, rights or interests, including Companies and Associations in which they are interested, to any charge, tax or impost, direct or indirect, other or higher than those which are or may be imposed on her own nationals or their property, rights or interests;

(d) not to subject the nationals of any one of the Allied and Associated Powers to any restriction which was not applicable on the 1st July, 1914, to the nationals of such Powers unless such restriction is likewise imposed on her own nationals.

ARTICLE 277.

The nationals of the Allied and Associated Powers shall enjoy in German territory a constant protection for their persons and for their property, rights and interests, and shall have free access to the courts of law.

ARTICLE 278.

Germany undertakes to recognise any new nationality which has been or may be acquired by her nationals under the laws of the Allied and Associated Powers, and in accordance with the decisions of the competent authorities of these Powers pursuant to naturalisation laws or under treaty stipulations, and to regard such persons as having, in consequence of the acquisition of such new nationality, in all respects severed their allegiance to their country of origin.

ARTICLE 279.

The Allied and Associated Powers may appoint consuls-general, consuls, vice-consuls, and consular agents in German towns and ports. Germany undertakes to approve the designation of the consuls-general, consuls, vice-consuls, and consular agents, whose names shall be notified to her, and to admit them to the exercise of their functions in conformity with the usual rules and customs.

Chapter V. General articles.

ARTICLE 280.

The obligations imposed on Germany by Chapter I and by Articles 271 and 272 of Chapter II above shall cease to have effect five years from the date of the coming into force of the present Treaty, unless otherwise provided in the text, or unless the Council of the League of Nations shall, at least twelve months before the expiration of that period, decide that these obligations shall be maintained for a further period with or without amendment.

Article 276 of Chapter IV shall remain in operation, with or without amendment, after the period of five years for such further period, if any, not exceeding five years, as may be determined by a majority of the Council of the League of Nations.

ARTICLE 281.

If the German Government engages in international trade, it shall not in respect thereof have or be deemed to have any rights, privileges, or immunities of sovereignty.

Section II. Treaties.

ARTICLE 282.

From the coming into force of the present Treaty and subject to the provisions thereof the multilateral Treaties, conventions and agreements of an economic or technical character enumerated below and in the subsequent articles shall alone be applied as between Germany and those of the Allied and Associated Powers party thereto:

1. Conventions of the 14th March, 1884, 1st December, 1886, and 23rd March, 1887, and Final Protocol of the 7th July, 1887, regarding the Protection of Submarine Cables.
2. Convention of the 11th October, 1909, regarding the International Circulation of Motor-cars.
3. Agreement of the 15th May, 1886, regarding the sealing of Railway trucks subject to Customs Inspection, and Protocol of 18th May, 1907.
4. Agreement of the 15th May, 1886, regarding the technical standardisation of Railways.
5. Convention of the 5th July, 1890, regarding the publication of Customs Tariffs and the organisation of an International Union for the publication of Customs Tariffs.
6. Convention of the 31st December, 1913, regarding the unification of Commercial Statistics.
7. Convention of the 25th April, 1907, regarding the raising of the Turkish Customs Tariff.
8. Convention of the 14th March, 1857, for the redemption of toll dues on the Sound and Belts.
9. Convention of the 22nd June, 1861, for the redemption of the Stade Toll on the Elbe.
10. Convention of the 16th July, 1863, for the redemption of Toll dues on the Scheldt.
11. Convention of the 29th October, 1888, regarding the establishment of a definite arrangement guaranteeing the free use of the Suez Canal.
12. Conventions of the 23rd September, 1910, respecting the unification of certain regulations regarding collisions and salvage at sea.
13. Convention of the 21st December, 1904, regarding the exemption of hospital ships from dues and charges in ports.
14. Convention of the 4th February, 1898, regarding the tonnage measurement of vessels for inland navigation.
15. Convention of the 26th September, 1906, for the suppression of nightwork for women.
16. Convention of the 26th September, 1906, for the suppression of the use of white prosphorus in the manufacture of matches.
17. Conventions of the 18th May, 1904, and the 4th May, 1910, regarding the suppression of the White Slave Traffic.
18. Convention of the 4th May, 1910, regarding the suppression of obscene publications.
19. Sanitary Conventions of Paris and Venice of the 3rd April, 1894, 19th March, 1897, and 3rd December, 1903.
20. Convention of the 20th May, 1875, regarding the unification and improvement of the metric system.
21. Convention of the 29th November, 1906, regarding the unification of pharmacopœial formulæ for potent drugs.
22. Convention of the 16th and 19th November, 1885, regarding the establishment of a concert pitch.
23. Convention of the 7th June, 1905, regarding the creation of an International Agriculatural Institute at Rome.
24. Conventions of the 3rd November, 1881, and the 15th April, 1889, regarding precautionary measures against phylloxera.
25. Convention of the 19th March, 1902, regarding the protection of birds useful to agriculture.

ARTICLE 283.

From the coming into force of the present Treaty the High Contracting Parties shall apply the conventions and agreements hereinafter mentioned, in so far as concerns them, on condition that the special stipulations contained in this Article are fulfilled by Germany.

Postal Conventions:

Conventions and agreements of the Universal Postal Union concluded at Vienna, 4th July, 1891.

Conventions and agreements of the Postal Union signed at Washington, 15th June, 1897.

Conventions and agreements of the Postal Union signed at Rome, 26th May, 1906.

Telegraphic Conventions:

International Telegraphic Conventions signed at St. Petersburg 10/22 July, 1875.

Regulations and Tariffs drawn up by the International Telegraphic Conference, Lisbon, June 11th, 1908.

Germany undertakes not to refuse her assent to the conclusion by the new States of the special arrangements referred to in the Conventions and Agreements relating to the Universal Postal Union and to the International Telegraphic Union, to which the said new States have adhered or may adhere.

ARTICLE 284.

From the coming into force of the present Treaty the High Contracting Parties shall apply, in so far as concerns them, the International Radio-Telegraphic Convention of the 5th July, 1912, on condition that Germany fulfils the provisional regulations which will be indicated to her by the Allied and Associated Powers.

When a new convention regulating international radio-telegraphic communications has been concluded to take the place of the Convention of the 5th July, 1912, this new Convention shall bind Germany even if Germany should refuse either to take part in drawing up the convention, or to subscribe thereto.

This new convention will likewise replace the provisional regulations in force.

ARTICLE 285.

From the coming into force of the present Treaty, the High Contracting Parties shall apply in so far as concerns them and under the conditions stipulated in Article 272, the conventions hereinafter mentioned:

1. The Conventions of the 6th May, 1882, and the 1st February, 1889, regulating the Fisheries in the North Sea outside territorial waters.
2. The Conventions and Protocols of the 16th November, 1887, 14th February, 1893, and 11th April, 1894, regarding the North Sea liquor traffic.

ARTICLE 286.

The International Convention of Paris of the 20th March, 1883, for the protection of industrial property, revised at Washington on the 2nd June, 1911; the agreement of the 14th April, 1891, regarding the suppression of false indications of origin of goods; the agreement of the 14th April, 1891, concerning the international registration of trade marks; and the International Convention of Berne of the 9th September, 1886, for the protection of literary and artistic works, revised at Berlin on the 13th November, 1908, and completed by the additional Protocol signed at Berne on the 20th March, 1914, will again come into effect as from the coming into force of the present Treaty, in so far as they are not affected or modified by the exceptions and restrictions resulting therefrom.

ARTICLE 287.

From the coming into force of the present Treaty the High Contracting Parties shall apply, in so far as concerns them, the Convention of the Hague of the 17th July, 1905, relating to civil procedure. This renewal, however, will not apply to France, Portugal and Roumania.

ARTICLE 288.

The special rights and privileges granted to Germany by Article 3 of the Convention of the 2nd December, 1899, relating to Samoa shall be considered to have terminated on August 4th, 1914.

ARTICLE 289.

Each of the Allied or Associated Powers, being guided by the general principles or special provisions of the present Treaty, shall notify to Germany the bilateral treaties or conventions which such Allied or Associated Power wishes to revive with Germany.

The Allied and Associated Powers undertake among themselves not to revive with Germany any conventions or treaties which are not in accordance with the terms of the present Treaty. In case of any difference of opinion, the League of Nations will be called on to decide.

The notification referred to in the present Article shall be made either directly or through the intermediary of another Power. Receipt thereof shall be acknowledged in writing by Germany. The date of the revival shall be that of the notification.

The notification shall mention any provisions of the said Conventions and Treaties which, not being in accordance with the terms of the present Treaty, shall not be considered as revived.

A period of six months from the coming into force of the present Treaty is allowed to the Allied and Associated Powers within which to make the notification.

Only those bilateral treaties and conventions which have been the subject of such a notification shall be revived between the Allied and Associated Powers and Germany; all the others are and shall remain abrogated.

The above regulations apply to all bilateral treaties or conventions existing between all the Allied and Associated Powers signatories to the present Treaty and Germany, even if the said Allied and Associated Powers have not been in a state of war with Germany.

ARTICLE 290.

Germany recognises that all the treaties, conventions or agreements which she has concluded with Austria, Hungary, Bulgaria or Turkey since the 1st August, 1914, until the coming into force of the present Treaty are and remain abrogated by the present Treaty.

ARTICLE 291.

Germany undertakes to secure to the Allied and Associated Powers, and to the officials and nationals of the said Powers, the enjoyment of all the rights and advantages of any kind which she may have granted to Austria, Hungary, Bulgaria or Turkey, or to the officials and nationals of these States by treaties, conventions or arrangements concluded before the 1st August, 1914, so long as those treaties, conventions or arrangements remain in force.

The Allied and Associated Powers reserve the right to accept or not the enjoyment of these rights and advantages.

ARTICLE 292.

Germany recognises that all treaties, conventions, or arrangements which she concluded with Russia, or with any State or Government of which the territory previously formed a part of Russia, or with Roumania, before the 1st August, 1914, or after that date until the coming into force of the present Treaty, are and remain abrogated.

ARTICLE 293.

Should an Allied or Associated Power, Russia, or a State or Government of which the territory formerly constituted a part of Russia, have been forced since the 1st August, 1914, by reason of military occupation or by any other means or for any other cause, to grant or to allow to be granted by the act of any public authority, concessions, privileges and favours of any kind to Germany or to a German national, such concessions, privileges and favours are ipso facto annulled by the present Treaty.

No claims or indemnities which may result from this annulment shall be charged against the Allied or Associated Powers or the Powers, States, Governments or Public authorities which are released from their engagements by the present Article.

ARTICLE 294.

From the coming into force of the present Treaty Germany undertakes to give the Allied and Associated Powers and their nationals the benefit ipso facto of the rights and advantages of any kind which she has granted by treaties, conventions, or arrangements to non-belligerent States or their nationals since the 1st August, 1914, until the coming into force of the present Treaty, so long as those treaties, conventions or arrangements remain in force.

ARTICLE 295.

Those of the High Contracting Parties who have not yet signed, or who have signed but not yet ratified, the Opium Convention signed at The Hague on January 23rd, 1912, agree to bring the said Convention into force, and for this purpose to enact the necessary legislation without delay and in any case within a period of twelve months from the coming into force of the present Treaty.

Furthermore, they agree that ratification of the present Treaty should in the case of Powers which have not yet ratified the Opium Convention be deemed in all respects equivalent to the ratification of that Convention and to the signature of the Special Protocol which was opened at The Hague in accordance with the resolutions adopted by the Third Opium Conference in 1914 for bringing the said Convention into force.

For this purpose the Government of the French Republic will communicate to the Government of the Netherlands a certified copy of the protocol of the deposit of ratifications of the present Treaty, and will invite the Government of the Netherlands to accept and deposit the said certified copy as if it were a deposit of ratifications of the Opium Convention and a signature of the Additional Protocol of 1914.

Section III. Debts.

ARTICLE 296.

There shall be settled through the intervention of clearing offices to be established by each of the High Contracting Parties within three months of the notification referred to in paragraph (e) hereafter the following classes of pecuniary obligations:

1. Debts payable before the war and due by a national of one of the Contracting Powers, residing within its territory, to a national of an Opposing Power, residing within its territory.

2. Debts which became payable during the war to nationals of one Contracting Power residing within its territory and arose out of transactions or contracts with the nationals of an Opposing Power, resident within its territory, of which the total or partial execution was suspended on account of the declaration of war.

3. Interest which has accrued due during the war to a national of one of the Contracting Powers in respect of securities issued by an Opposing Power, provided that the payment of interest on such securities to the nationals of that Power or to neutrals has not been suspended during the war.

4. Capital sums which have become payable during the war to nationals of one of the Contracting Powers in respect of securities issued by one of the Opposing Powers, provided that the payment of such capital sums to nationals of that Power or to neutrals has not been suspended during the war.

The proceeds of liquidation of enemy property, rights, and interests mentioned in Section IV and in the Annex thereto will be accounted for through the clearing offices, in the currency and at the rate of exchange hereinafter provided in paragraph (d), and disposed of by them under the conditions provided by the said Section and Annex.

The settlements provided for in this Article shall be effected according to the following principles and in accordance with the Annex to this Section:

(a) Each of the High Contracting Parties shall prohibit, as from the coming into force of the present Treaty, both the payment and the acceptance of payment of such debts, and also all communications between the interested parties with regard to the settlement of the said debts otherwise than through the clearing offices.

(b) Each of the High Contracting Parties shall be respectively responsible for the payment of such debts due by its nationals, except in the cases where before the war the debtor was in a state of bankruptcy or failure, or had given formal indication of insolvency or where the debt was due by a company whose business has been liquidated under emergency legislation during the war. Nevertheless, debts due by the inhabitants of territory invaded or occupied by the enemy before the Armistice will not be guaranteed by the States of which those territories form part.

(c) The sums due to the nationals of one of the High Contracting Parties by the nationals of an Opposing State will be debited to the clearing office of the country of the debtor, and paid to the creditor by the clearing office of the country of the creditor.

(d) Debts shall be paid or credited in the currency of such one of the Allied and Associated Powers, their colonies or protectorates, or the British Dominions or India, as may be concerned. If the debts are payable in some other currency they shall be paid or credited in the currency of the country concerned, whether an Allied or Associated Power, Colony, Protectorate, British Dominion or India, at the pre-war rate of exchange.

For the purpose of this provision the pre-war rate of exchange shall be defined as the average cable transfer rate prevailing in the Allied or Associated country concerned during the month immediately preceding the outbreak of war between the said country concerned and Germany.

If a contract provides for a fixed rate of exchange governing the conversion of the currency in which the debt is stated into the currency of the Allied or Associated country concerned, then the above provisions concerning the rate of exchange shall not apply.

In the case of new States the currency in which and the rate of exchange at which debts shall be paid or credited shall be determined by the Reparation Commission provided for in Part VIII (Reparation).

(e) The provisions of this Article and of the Annex hereto shall not apply as between Germany on the one hand and any one of the Allied and Associated Powers, their colonies or protectorates, or any one of the British Dominions or India on the other hand, unless within a period of six months from the coming into force of the present Treaty notice to that effect is given to Germany by the Government of such Allied or Associated Power or of such Dominion or of India as the case may be.

(f) The Allied and Associated Powers who have adopted this Article and the Annex hereto may agree between themselves to apply them to their respective nationals established in their territory so far as regards matters between their nationals and German nationals. In this case the payments made by application of this provision will be subject to arrangements between the allied and associated clearing offices concerned.

ANNEX.

Each of the High Contracting Parties will, within three months from the notification provided for in Article 296, paragraph (e), establish a clearing office for the collection and payment of enemy debts.

Local clearing offices may be established for any particular portion of the territories of the High Contracting Parties. Such local clearing offices may perform all the functions of a central clearing office in their respective districts, except that all transactions with the clearing office in the Opposing State must be effected through the central clearing office.

2.

In this Annex the pecuniary obligations referred to in the first paragraph of Article 296 are described as "enemy debts", the persons from whom the same are due as "enemy debtors," the persons to whom they are due as "enemy creditors", the clearing office in the country of the creditor is called the "Creditor Clearing Office", and the clearing office in the country of the debtor is called the "Debtor Clearing Office".

3.

The High Contracting Parties will subject contraventions of paragraph (a) of Article 296 to the same penalties as are at present provided by their legislation for trading with the enemy. They will similarly prohibit within their territory all legal process relating to payment of enemy debts, except in accordance with the provisions of this Annex.

4.

The Government guarantee specified in paragraph (b) of Article 296 shall take effect whenever, for any reason, a debt shall not be recoverable, except in a case where at the date of the outbreak of war the debt was barred by the laws of prescription in force in the country of the debtor, or where the debtor was at that time in a state of bankruptcy or failure or had given formal indication of insolvency, or where the debt was due by a company whose business has been liquidated under emergency legislation during the war. In such case the procedure specified by this Annex shall apply to payment of the dividends.

The terms "bankruptcy" and "failure" refer to the application of legislation providing for such juridical conditions. The expression "formal indication of insolvency" bears the same meaning as it has in English law.

Creditors shall give notice to the Creditor Clearing Office within six months of its establishment of debts due to them, and shall furnish the Clearing Office with any documents and information required of them.

The High Contracting Parties will take all suitable measures to trace and punish collusion between enemy creditors and debtors. The clearing offices will communicate to one another any evidence and information which might help the discovery and punishment of such collusion.

The High Contracting Parties will facilitate as much as possible postal and telegraphic communication at the expense of the parties concerned and through the intervention of the clearing offices between debtors and creditors desirous of coming to an agreement as to the amount of their debt.

The Creditor Clearing Office will notify the Debtor Clearing Office of all debts declared to it. The Debtor Clearing Office will, in due course, inform the Creditor Clearing Office which debts are admitted and which debts are contested. In the latter case, the Debtor Clearing Office will give the grounds for the non-admission of debt.

6.

When a debt has been admitted, in whole or in part, the Debtor Clearing Office will at once credit the Creditor Clearing Office with the amount admitted, and at the same time notify it of such credit.

7.

The debt shall be deemed to be admitted in full and shall be credited forthwith to the Creditor Clearing Office unless within three months from the receipt of the notification or such longer time as may be agreed to by the Creditor Clearing Office notice has been given by the Debtor Clearing Office that it is not admitted.

8.

When the whole or part of a debt is not admitted the two clearing offices will examine into the matter jointly and will endeavour to bring the parties to an agreement.

9.

The Creditor Clearing Office will pay to the individual creditor the sums credited to it out of the funds placed at its disposal by the Government of its country and in accordance with the conditions fixed by the said Government, retaining any sums considered necessary to cover risks, expenses or commissions.

10.

Any person having claimed payment of an enemy debt which is not admitted in whole or in part shall pay to the clearing office, by way of fine, interest at 5 per cent. on the part not admitted. Any person having unduly refused to admit the whole or part of a debt claimed from him shall pay, by way of fine, interest at 5 per cent. on the amount with regard to which his refusal shall be disallowed.

Such interest shall run from the date of expiration of the period provided for in paragraph 7 until the date on which the claim shall have been disallowed or the debt paid.

Each clearing office shall in so far as it is concerned take steps to collect the fines above provided for, and will be responsible if such fines cannot be collected.

The fines will be credited to the other clearing office, which shall retain them as a contribution towards the cost of carrying out the present provisions.

11.

The balance between the clearing offices shall be struck monthly and the credit balance paid in cash by the debtor State within a week.

Nevertheless, any credit balances which may be due by one or more of the Allied and Associated Powers shall be retained until complete payment shall have been effected of the sums due to the Allied or Associated Powers or their nationals on account of the war.

12.

To facilitate discussion between the clearing offices each of them shall have a representative at the place where the other is established.

13.

Except for special reasons all discussions in regard to claims will, so far as possible, take place at the Debtor Clearing Office.

14.

In conformity with Article 296, paragraph (b), the High Contracting Parties are responsible for the payment of the enemy debts owing by their nationals.

The Debtor Clearing Office will therefore credit the Creditor Clearing Office with all debts admitted, even in case of inability to collect them from the individual debtor. The Governments concerned will, nevertheless, invest their respective clearing offices with all necessary powers for the recovery of debts which have been admitted.

As an exception, the admitted debts owing by persons having suffered injury from acts of war shall only be credited to the Creditor Clearing Office when the compensation due to the person concerned in respect of such injury shall have been paid.

15.

Each Government will defray the expenses of the clearing office set up in its territory, including the salaries of the staff.

16.

Where the two clearing offices are unable to agree whether a debt claimed is due, or in case of a difference between an enemy debtor and an enemy creditor or between the clearing offices, the dispute shall either be referred to arbitration if the parties so agree under conditions fixed by agreement between them, or referred to the Mixed Arbitral Tribunal provided for in Section VI hereafter.

At the request of the Creditor Clearing Office the dispute may, however, be submitted to the jurisdiction of the Courts of the place of domicile of the debtor.

17.

Recovery of sums found by the Mixed Arbitral Tribunal, the Court, or the Arbitration Tribunal to be due shall be effected through the clearing offices as if these sums were debts admitted by the Debtor Clearing Office.

18.

Each of the Governments concerned shall appoint an agent who will be responsible for the presentation to the Mixed Arbitral Tribunal of the cases conducted on behalf of its clearing office. This agent will exercise a general control over the representatives or counsel employed by its nationals.

Decisions will be arrived at on documentary evidence, but it will be open to the Tribunal to hear the parties in person, or according to their preference by their representatives approved by the two Governments, or by the agent referred to above, who shall be competent to intervene along with the party or to re-open and maintain a claim abandoned by the same.

The clearing offices concerned will lay before the Mixed Arbitral Tribunal all the information and documents in their possession, so as to enable the Tribunal to decide rapidly on the cases which are brought before it.

20.

Where one of the parties concerned appeals against the joint decision of the two clearing offices he shall make a deposit against the costs, which deposit shall only be refunded when the first judgment is modified in favour of the appellant and in proportion to the success he may attain, his opponent in case of such a refund being required to pay an equivalent proportion of the costs and expenses. Security accepted by the Tribunal may be substituted for a deposit.

A fee of 5 per cent. of the amount in dispute shall be charged in respect of all cases brought before the Tribunal. This fee shall, unless the Tribunal directs otherwise, be borne by the unsuccessful party. Such fee shall be added to the deposit referred to. It is also independent of the security.

The Tribunal may award to one of the parties a sum in respect of the expenses of the proceedings.

Any sum payable under this paragraph shall be credited to the clearing office of the successful party as a separate item.

21.

With a view to the rapid settlement of claims, due regard shall be paid in the appointment of all persons connected with the clearing offices or with the Mixed Arbitral Tribunal to their knowledge of the language of the other country concerned. Each of the clearing offices will be at liberty to correspond with the other, and to forward documents in its own language.

22.

Subject to any special agreement to the contrary between the Governments concerned, debts shall carry interest in accordance with the following provisions:—

Interest shall not be payable on sums of money due by way of dividend, interest, or other periodical payments which themselves represent interest on capital.

The rate of interest shall be 5 per cent. per annum except in cases where, by contract, law, or custom, the creditor is entitled to payment of interest at a different rate. In such cases the rate to which he is entitled shall prevail.

Interest shall run from the date of commencement of hostilities (or, if the sum of money to be recovered fell due during the war, from the date at which it fell due) until the sum is credited to the clearing office of the creditor.

Sums due by way of interest shall be treated as debts admitted by the clearing offices and shall be credited to the Creditor Clearing Office in the same way as such debts.

23.

Where by decision of the clearing offices or the Mixed Arbitral Tribunal a claim is held not to fall within Article 296, the creditor shall be at liberty to prosecute the claim before the Courts or to take such other proceedings as may be open to him.

The presentation of a claim to the clearing office suspends the operation of any period of prescription.

24.

The High Contracting Parties agree to regard the decisions arrived at in accordance with the provisions of this Annex as final and conclusive, and to render them binding upon their nationals.

25.

In any case where a Creditor Clearing Office declines to notify a claim to the Debtor Clearing Office, or to take any step provided for in this Annex, intended to make effective in whole or in part a request of which it has received due notice, the enemy creditor shall be entitled to receive from the clearing office a certificate setting out the amount of the claim, and shall then be entitled to prosecute the claim before the courts or to take such other proceedings as may be open to him.

Section IV. Property, rights and interests.

ARTICLE 297.

The question of private property, rights and interests in an enemy country shall be settled according to the principles laid down in this Section and to the provisions of the Annex hereto:

(a) The exceptional war measures and measures of transfer (defined in paragraph 3 of the Annex hereto) taken by Germany with respect to the property, rights and interests of nationals of Allied or Associated Powers, including companies and associations in which they are interested, when liquidation has not been completed, shall be immediately discontinued or stayed and the property, rights, and interests concerned restored to their owners, who shall enjoy full rights therein in accordance with the provisions of Article 298.

(b) Subject to any contrary stipulations which may be provided for in the present Treaty, the Allied and Associated Powers reserve the right to retain and liquidate all property, rights and interests of German nationals, or companies controlled by them, within their territories, colonies, possessions and protectorates including territories ceded to them by the present Treaty.

The liquidation shall be carried out in accordance with the laws of the Allied or Associated State concerned, and the German owner shall not be able to dispose of such property, rights or interests nor to subject them to any charge without the consent of that State.

German nationals who acquire ipso facto the nationality of an Allied or Associated Power in accordance with the provisions of the present Treaty will not be considered as German nationals within the meaning of this paragraph.

(c) The price or the amount of compensation in respect of the exercise of the right referred to in the preceding paragraph (b) will be fixed in accordance with the methods of sale or valuation adopted by the laws of the country in which the property has been retained or liquidated.

(d) As between the Allied and Associated Powers or their nationals on the one hand and Germany or her nationals on the other hand, all the exceptional war measures, or measures of transfer, or acts done or to be done in execution of such measures as defined in paragraphs 1 and 3 of the Annex hereto shall be considered as final and binding upon all persons except as regards the reservations laid down in the present Treaty.

(e) The nationals of Allied and Associated Powers shall be entitled to compensation in respect of damage or injury inflicted upon their property, rights or interests, including any company or association in which they are interested, in German territory as it existed on August 1, 1914, by the application either of the exceptional war measures or measures of transfer mentioned in paragraphs 1 and 3 of the Annex hereto. The claims made in this respect by such nationals shall be investigated, and the total of the compensation shall be determined by the Mixed Arbitral Tribunal provided for in Section VI or by an Arbitrator appointed by that Tribunal. This compensation shall be borne by Germany, and may be charged upon the property of German nationals within the territory or under the control of the claimant's State. This property may be constituted as a pledge for enemy liabilities under the conditions fixed by paragraph 4 of the Annex hereto. The payment of this compensation may be made by the Allied or Associated State, and the amount will be debited to Germany.

(f) Whenever a national of an Allied or Associated Power is entitled to property which has been subjected to a measure of transfer in German territory and expresses a desire for its restitution, his claim for compensation in accordance with paragraph (e) shall be satisfied by the restitution of the said property if it still exists in specie.

In such case Germany shall take all necessary steps to restore the evicted owner to the possession of his property, free from all encumbrances or burdens with which it may have been charged after the liquidation, and to indemnify all third parties injured by the restitution.

If the restitution provided for in this paragraph cannot be effected, private agreements arranged by the intermediation of the Powers concerned or the clearing offices provided for in the Annex to Section III may be made, in order to secure that the national of the Allied or Associated Power may secure compensation for the injury referred to in paragraph (e) by the grant of advantages or equivalents which he agrees to accept in place of the property, rights or interests of which he was deprived.

Through restitution in accordance with this Article, the price or the amount of compensation fixed by the application of paragraph (e) will be reduced by the actual value of the property restored, account being taken of compensation in respect of loss of use or deterioration.

(g) The rights conferred by paragraph (f) are reserved to owners who are nationals of Allied or Associated Powers within whose territory legislative measures prescribing the general liquidation of enemy property, rights or interests were not applied before the signature of the Armistice.

(h) Except in cases where, by application of paragraph (f), restitutitons in specie have been made, the net proceeds of sales of enemy property, rights or interests wherever situated carried out either by virtue of war legislation, or by application of this Article, and in general all cash assets of enemies, shall be dealt with as follows:—

(1) As regards Powers adopting Section III and the Annex thereto, the said proceeds and cash assets shall be credited to the Power of which the owner is a national, through the clearing office established thereunder, any credit balance in favour of Germany resulting therefrom shall be dealt with as provided in Article 243.

(2) As regards Powers not adopting Section III and the Annex thereto, the proceeds of the property, rights and interests, and the cash assets, of the nationals of Allied or Associated Powers held by Germany shall be paid immediately to the person entitled thereto or to his Government; the proceeds of the property, rights and interests, and the cash assets, of German nationals received by an Allied or Associated Power shall be subject to disposal by such Power in accordance with its laws and regulations and may be applied in payment of the claims and debts defined by this Article or paragraph 4 of the Annex hereto. Any property, rights and interests or proceeds thereof or cash assets not used as above provided may be retained by the said Allied or Associated Power and if retained the cash value thereof shall be dealt with as provided in Article 243.

(i) Germany undertakes to compensate its nationals in respect of the sale or retention of their property, rights or interests in Allied or Associated States.

ARTICLE 298.

Germany undertakes, with regard to the property, rights and interests, including companies and associations in which they were interested, restored to nationals of Allied and Associated Powers in accordance with the provisions of Article 297, paragraph (a) or (f):

(a) to restore and maintain, except as expressly provided in the present Treaty, the property, rights and interests of the nationals of Allied or Associated Powers in the legal position obtaining in respect of the property, rights and interests of German nationals under the laws in force before the war.

(b) not to subject the property, rights or interests of the nationals of the Allied or Associated Powers to any measures in derogation of property rights which are not applied equally to the property, rights and interests of German nationals, and to pay adequate compensation in the event of the application of these measures.

ANNEX.

In accordance with the provisions of Article 297, paragraph (d), the validity of vesting orders and of orders for the winding up of businesses or companies, and of any other orders, directions, decisions or instructions of any court or any department of the Government of any of the High Contracting Parties made or given, or purporting to be made or given, in pursuance of war legislation with regard to enemy property, rights and interests is confirmed. The interests of all persons shall be regarded as having been effectively dealt with by any order, direction, decision or instruction dealing with property in which they may be interested, whether or not such interests are specifically mentioned in the order, direction, decision, or instruction. No question shall be raised as to the regularity of a transfer of any property, rights or interests dealt with in pursuance of any such order, direction, decision or instruction. Every action taken with regard to any property, business, or company, whether as regards its investigation, sequestration, compulsory administration, use, requisition, supervision, or winding up, the sale or management of property, rights or interests, the collection or discharge of debts, the payment of costs, charges or expenses, or any other matter whatsoever, in pursuance of orders, directions, decisions, or instructions of any court or of any department of the Government of any of the High Contracting Parties, made or given, or purporting to be made or given, in pursuance of war legislation with regard to enemy property, rights or interests, is confirmed. Provided that the provisions of this paragraph shall not be held to prejudice the titles to property heretofore acquired in good faith and for value and in accordance with the laws of the country in which the property is situated by nationals of the Allied and Associated Powers.

The provisions of this paragraph do not apply to such of the above-mentioned measures as have been taken by the German authorities in invaded or occupied territory.

No claim or action shall be made or brought against any Allied or Associated Power or against any person acting on behalf of or under the direction of any legal authority or Department of the Government of such a Power by Germany or by any German national wherever resident in respect of any act or omission with regard to his property, rights or interests during the war or in preparation for the war. Similarly no claim or action shall be made or brought against any person in respect of any act or omission under or in accordance with the exceptional war measures, laws or regulations of any Allied or Associated Power.

In Article 297 and this Annex the expression "exceptional war measures" includes measures of all kinds, legislative, administrative, judicial, or others, that have been taken or will be taken hereafter with regard to enemy property, and which have had or will have the effect of removing from the proprietors the power of disposition over their property, though without affecting the ownership, such as measures of supervision, of compulsory administration, and of sequestration; or measures which have had or will have as an object the seizure of, the use of, or the interference with enemy assets, for whatsoever motive, under whatsoever form or in whatsoever place. Acts in the execution of these measures include all detentions, instructions, orders or decrees of Government departments or courts applying these measures to enemy property, as well as acts performed by any person connected with the administration or the supervision of enemy property, such as the payment of debts, the collecting of credits, the payment of any costs, charges, or expenses, collecting of fees.

Measures of transfer are those which have affected or will affect the ownership of enemy property by transferring it in whole or in part to a person other than the enemy owner, and without his consent, such as measures directing the sale, liquidation, or devolution of ownership in enemy property, the cancelling of titles or securities.

All property, rights and interests of German nationals within the territory of any Allied or Associated Power and the net proceeds of their sale, liquidation or other dealing therewith may be charged by that Allied or Associated Power in the first place with payment of amounts due in respect of claims by the nationals of that Allied or Associated Power with regard to their property, rights, and interests, including companies and associations in which they are interested in German territory, or debts owing to them by German nationals, and with payment of claims growing out of acts committed by the German Government or by any German authorities since the 31st July, 1914, and before that Allied or Associated Power entered into the war. They may be charged in the second place with payment of the amounts due in respect of claims by the nationals of such Allied or Associated Power with regard to their property, rights, and interests in the territory of other enemy Powers, or debts owing to them by nationals of such Powers in so far as those claims or debts are otherwise unsatisfied.

Notwithstanding the provisions of Article 297, where immediately before the outbreak of war a company incorporated in an Allied or Associated State had rights in common with a company controlled by it and incorporated in Germany to the use of trade-marks in third countries, or enjoyed the use in common with such company of unique means of reproduction of goods or articles for sale in third countries, the former company shall alone have the right to use these trade-marks in third countries to the exclusion of the German company, and these unique means of reproduction shall be handed over to the former company, notwithstanding any action taken under German war legislation with regard to the latter company or its business, industrial property or shares. Nevertheless, the former company, if requested, shall deliver to the latter company derivative copies permitting the continuation of reproduction of articles for use within German territory.

6.

Up to the time when restitution is carried out in accordance with Article 297, Germany is responsible for the conservation of property, rights and interests of the nationals of Allied or Associated Powers, including companies and associations in which they are interested, that have been subjected by her to exceptional war measures.

7.

Within one year from the coming into force of the present Treaty the Allied or Associated Powers will specify the property, rights and interests over which they intend to exercise the rights provided in Article 297, paragraph (f).

8.

The restitution provided in Article 297 will be carried out by order of the German Government or of the authorities which have been substituted for it. Detailed accounts of the action of administrators shall be furnished to the interested persons by the German authorities upon request, which may be made at any time after the coming into force of the present Treaty.

9.

Until completion of the liquidation provided for by Article 297, paragraph (b), the property, rights and interests of German nationals will continue to be subject to exceptional war measures that have been or will be taken with regard to them.

10.

Germany will, within six months from the coming into force of the present Treaty, deliver to each Allied or Associated Power all securities, certificates, deeds, or other documents of title held by its nationals and relating to property, rights or interests situated in the territory of that Allied or Associated Power, including any shares, stock, debentures, debenture stock, or other obligations of any company incorporated in accordance with the laws of that Power.

Germany will at any time on demand of any Allied or Associated Power furnish such information as may be required with regard to the property, rights and interests of German nationals within the territory of such Allied or Associated Power, or with regard to any transactions concerning such property, rights or interests effected since the 1st July, 1914.

11.

The expression "cash assets" includes all deposits or funds established before or after the declaration of war, as well as all assets coming from deposits, revenues, or profits collected by administrators, sequestrators, or others from funds placed on deposit or otherwise, but does not include sums belonging to the Allied or Associated Powers or to their component States, Provinces, or Municipalities.

12.

All investments wheresoever effected with the cash assets of nationals of the High Contracting Parties, including companies and associations in which such nationals were interested, by persons responsible for the administration of enemy properties or having control over such administration, or by order of such persons or of any authority whatsoever shall be annulled. These cash assets shall be accounted for irrespective of any such investment.

13.

Within one month from the coming into force of the present Treaty, or on demand at any time, Germany will deliver to the Allied and Associated Powers all accounts, vouchers, records, documents, and information of any kind which may be within German territory, and which concern the property, rights and interests of the nationals of those Powers, including companies and associations in which they are interested, that have been subjected to an exceptional war measure, or to a measure of transfer either in German territory or in territory occupied by Germany or her allies.

The controllers, supervisors, managers, administrators, sequestrators, liquidators, and receivers shall be personally responsible under guarantee of the German Government for the immediate delivery in full of these accounts and documents, and for their accuracy.

The provisions of Article 297 and this Annex relating to property, rights and interests in an enemy country, and the proceeds of the liquidation thereof, apply to debts, credits and accounts, Section III regulating only the method of payment.

In the settlement of matters provided for in Article 297 between Germany and the Allied or Associated States, their colonies or protectorates, or any one of the British Dominions or India, in respect of any of which a declaration shall not have been made that they adopt Section III, and between their respective nationals, the provisions of Article 296 respecting the currency in which payment is to be made and the rate of exchange shall apply unless the Government of the Allied or Associated Power concerned shall within six months of the coming into force of the present Treaty notify Germany that the said provisions are not to be applied.

The provisions of Article 297 and this Annex apply to industrial, literary and artistic property which has been or will be dealt with in the liquidation of property, rights, interests, companies or businesses under war legislation by the Allied or Associated Powers, or in accordance with the stipulations of Article 297, paragraph (b).

Section V. Contracts, prescriptions, judgments.

ARTICLE 299.

(a) Any contract concluded between enemies shall be regarded as having been dissolved as from the time when any two of the parties became enemies, except in respect of any debt or other pecuniary obligation arising out of any act done or money paid thereunder, and subject to the exceptions and special rules with regard to particular contracts or classes of contracts contained herein or in the Annex hereto.

(b) Any contract of which the execution shall be required in the general interest, within six months from the date of coming into force of the present Treaty, by the Allied or Associated Governments of which one of the parties is a national, shall be excepted from dissolution under this Article.

When the execution of the contract thus kept alive would, owing to the alteration of trade conditions, cause one of the parties substantial prejudice the Mixed Arbitral Tribunal provided for by Section VI shall be empowered to grant to the prejudiced party equitable compensation.

(c) Having regard to the provisions of the constitution and law of the United States of America, of Brazil, and of Japan, neither the present Article, nor Article 300, nor the Annex hereto shall apply to contracts made between nationals of these States and German nationals; nor shall Article 305 apply to the United States of America or its nationals.

(d) The present Article and the annex hereto shall not apply to contracts the parties to which became enemies by reason of one of them being an inhabitant of territory of which the sovereignty has been transferred, if such party shall acquire under the present Treaty the nationality of an Allied or Associated Power, nor shall they apply to contracts between nationals of the Allied and Associated Powers between whom trading has been prohibited by reason of one of the parties being in Allied or Associated territory in the occupation of the enemy.

(e) Nothing in the present Article or the annex hereto shall be deemed to invalidate a transaction lawfully carried out in accordance with a contract between enemies if it has been carried out with the authority of one of the belligerent Powers.

ARTICLE 300.

(a) All periods of prescription, or limitation of right of action, whether they began to run before or after the outbreak of war, shall be treated in the territory of the High Contracting Parties, so far as regards relations between enemies, as having been suspended for the duration of the war. They shall begin to run again at earliest three months after the coming into force of the present Treaty. This provision shall apply to the period prescribed for the presentation of interest or dividend coupons or for the presentation for repayment of securities drawn for repayment or repayable on any other ground.

(b) Where, on account of failure to perform any act or comply with any formality during the war, measures of execution have been taken in German territory to the prejudice of a national of an Allied or Associated Power, the claim of such national shall, if the matter does not fall within the competence of the Courts of an Allied or Associated Power, be heard by the Mixed Arbitral Tribunal provided for by Section VI.

(c) Upon the application of any interested person who is a national of an Allied or Associated Power the Mixed Arbitral Tribunal shall order the restoration of the rights which have been prejudiced by the measures of execution referred to in paragraph (b), wherever, having regard to the particular circumstances of the case, such restoration is equitable and possible.

If such restoration is inequitable or impossible the Mixed Arbitral Tribunal may grant compensation to the prejudiced party to be paid by the German Government.

(d) Where a contract has been dissolved by reason either of failure on the part of either party to carry out its provisions or of the exercise of a right stipulated in the contract itself the party prejudiced may apply to the Mixed Arbitral Tribunal for relief. The Tribunal will have the powers provided for in paragraph (c).

(e) The provisions of the preceding paragraphs of this Article shall apply to the nationals of Allied and Associated Powers who have been prejudiced by reason of measures referred to above taken by Germany in invaded or occupied territory, if they have not been otherwise compensated.

(f) Germany shall compensate any third party who may be prejudiced by any restitution or restoration ordered by the Mixed Arbitral Tribunal under the provisions of the preceding paragraphs of this Article.

(g) As regards negotiable instruments, the period of three months provided under paragraph (a) shall commence as from the date on which any exceptional regulations applied in the territories of the interested Power with regard to negotiable instruments shall have definitely ceased to have force.

ARTICLE 301.

As between enemies no negotiable instrument made before the war shall be deemed to have become invalid by reason only of failure within the required time to present the instrument for acceptance or payment or to give notice of non-acceptance or non-payment to drawers or indorsers or to protest the instrument, nor by reason of failure to complete any formality during the war.

Where the period within which a negotiable instrument should have been presented for acceptance or for payment, or within which notice of non-acceptance or non-payment should have been given to the drawer or indorser, or within which the instrument should have been protested, has elapsed during the war, and the party who should have presented or protested the instrument or have given notice of non-acceptance or non-payment has failed to do so during the war, a period of not less than three months from the coming into force of the present Treaty shall be allowed within which presentation, notice of non-acceptance or non-payment or protest may be made.

ARTICLE 302.

Judgments given by the Courts of an Allied or Associated Power in all cases which, under the present Treaty, they are competent to decide, shall be recognised in Germany as final, and shall be enforced without it being necessary to have them declared executory.

If a judgment in respect of any dispute which may have arisen has been given during the war by a German Court against a national of an Allied or Associated State in a case in which he was not able to make his defence, the Allied and Associated national who has suffered prejudice thereby shall be entitled to recover compensation, to be fixed by the Mixed Arbitral Tribunal provided for in Section VI.

At the instance of the national of the Allied or Associated Power the compensation above-mentioned may, upon order to that effect of the Mixed Arbitral Tribunal, be effected where it is possible by replacing the parties in the situation which they occupied before the judgment was given by the German Court.

The above compensation may likewise by obtained before the Mixed Arbitral Tribunal by the nationals of Allied or Associated Powers who have suffered prejudice by judicial measures taken in invaded or occupied territories, if they have not been otherwise compensated.

ARTICLE 303.

For the purpose of Sections III, IV, V and VII, the expression "during the war" means for each Allied or Associated Power the period between the state of war between that Power and Germany and the coming into force of the present Treaty.

ANNEX.

I. General provisions.

1.

Within the meaning of Articles 299, 300 and 301, the parties to a contract shall be regarded as enemies when trading between them shall have been prohibited by or otherwise became unlawful under laws, orders or regulations to which one of those parties was subject. They shall be deemed to have become enemies from the date when such trading was prohibited or otherwise became unlawful.

2.

The following classes of contracts are excepted from dissolution by Article 299 and, without prejudice to the rights contained in Article 297 (b) of Section IV, remain in force subject to the application of domestic laws, orders or regulations made during the war by the Allied and Associated Powers and subject to the terms of the contracts:

(a) Contracts having for their object the transfer of estates or of real or personal property where the property therein had passed or the object had been delivered before the parties became enemies;

(b) Leases and agreements for leases of land and houses;

(c) Contracts of mortgage, pledge, or lien;

(d) Concessions concerning mines, quarries or deposits;

(e) Contracts between individuals or companies and States, provinces, municipalities, or other similar juridical persons charged with administrative functions, and concessions granted by States, provinces, municipalities, or other similar juridical persons charged with administrative functions.

3.

If the provisions of a contract are in part dissolved under Article 299, the remaining provisions of that contract shall, subject to the same application of domestic laws as is provided for in paragraph 2, continue in force if they are severable, but where they are not severable the contract shall be deemed to have been dissolved in its entirety.

II. Provisions relating to certain classes of contracts.

Stock exchange and commercial exchange contracts.

4.

a) Rules made during the war by any recognised Exchange or Commercial Association providing for the closure of contracts entered into before the war by an enemy are confirmed by the High Contracting Parties, as also any action taken thereunder, provided:—

(i.) That the contract was expressed to be made subject to the rules of the Exchange or Association in question;

(ii.) That the rules applied to all persons concerned;

(iii.) That the conditions attaching to the closure were fair and reasonable.

b) The preceding paragraph shall not apply to rules made during the occupation by Exchanges or Commercial Associations in the districts occupied by the enemy.

c) The closure of contracts relating to cotton "futures", which were closed as on the 31st July, 1914, under the decision of the Liverpool Cotton Association, is also confirmed.

Security.

5.

The sale of a security held for an unpaid debt owing by an enemy shall be deemed to have been valid irrespective of notice to the owner if the creditor acted in good faith and with reasonable care and prudence, and no claim by the debtor on the ground of such sale shall be admitted.

This stipulation shall not apply to any sale of securities effected by an enemy during the occupations in regions invaded or occupied by the enemy.

Negotiable instruments.

6.

As regards Powers which adopt Section III and the Annex thereto the pecuniary obligations existing between enemies and resulting from the issue of negotiable instruments shall be adjusted in conformity with the said Annex by the instrumentality of the Clearing Offices, which shall assume the rights of the holder as regards the various remedies open to him.

7.

If a person has either before or during the war become liable upon a negotiable instrument in accordance with an undertaking given to him by a person who has subsequently become an enemy, the latter shall remain liable to indemnify the former in respect of his liability notwithstanding the outbreak of war.

III. Contracts of insurance.

8.

Contracts of insurance entered into by any person with another person who subsequently became an enemy will be dealt with in accordance with the following paragraphs:—

Fire insurance.

Contracts for the insurance of property against fire entered into by a person interested in such property with another person who subsequently became an enemy shall not be deemed to have been dissolved by the outbreak of war, or by the fact of the person becoming an enemy, or on account of the failure during the war and for a period of three months thereafter to perform his obligations under the contract, but they shall be dissolved at the date when the annual premium becomes payable for the first time after the expiration of a period of three months after the coming into force of the present Treaty.

A settlement shall be effected of unpaid premiums which became due during the war, or of claims for losses which occurred during the war.

10.

Where by administrative or legislative action an insurance against fire effected before the war has been transferred during the war from the original to another insurer, the transfer will be recognised and the liability of the original insurer will be deemed to have ceased as from the date of the transfer. The original insurer will, however, be entitled to receive on demand full information as to the terms of the transfer, and if it should appear that these terms were not equitable they shall be amended so far as may be necessary to render them equitable.

Furthermore, the insured shall, subject to the concurrence of the original insurer, be entitled to retransfer the contract to the original insurer as from the date of the demand.

Life insurance.

11.

Contracts of life insurance entered into between an insurer and a person who subsequently became an enemy shall not be deemed to have been dissolved by the outbreak of war, or by the fact of the person becoming an enemy.

Any sum which during the war became due upon a contract deemed not to have been dissolved under the preceding provision shall be recoverable after the war with the addition of interest at five per cent per annum from the date of its becoming due up to the day of payment.

Where the contract has lapsed during the war owing to non-payment of premiums, or has become void from breach of the conditions of the contract, the assured or his representatives or the persons entitled shall have the right at any time within twelve months of the coming into force of the present Treaty to claim from the insurer the surrender value of the policy at the date of its lapse or avoidance.

Where the contract has lapsed during the war owing to non-payment of premiums the payment of which has been prevented by the enforcement of measures of war, the assured or his representative or the persons entitled shall have the right to restore the contract on payment of the premiums with interest at five per cent per annum within three months from the coming into force of the present Treaty.

Any Allied or Associated Power may within three months of the coming into force of the present Treaty cancel all the contracts of insurance running between a German insurance company and its nationals under conditions which shall protect its nationals from any prejudice.

To this end the German insurance company will hand over to the Allied or Associated Government concerned the proportion of its assets attributable to the policies so cancelled and will be relieved from all liability in respect of such policies. The assets to be handed over shall be determined by an actuary appointed by the Mixed Arbitral Tribunal.

Where contracts of life insurance have been entered into by a local branch of an insurance company established in a country which subsequently became an enemy country, the contract shall, in the absence of any stipulation to the contrary in the contract itself, be governed by the local law, but the insurer shall be entitled to demand from the insured or his representatives the refund of sums paid on claims made or enforced under measures taken during the war, if the making or enforcement of such claims was not in accordance with the terms of the contract itself or was not consistent with the laws or treaties existing at the time when it was entered into.

14.

In any case where by the law applicable to the contract the insurer remains bound by the contract notwithstanding the non-payment of premiums until notice is given to the insured of the termination of the contract, he shall be entitled where the giving of such notice was prevented by the war to recover the unpaid premiums with interest at five per cent. per annum from the insured.

15.

Insurance contracts shall be considered as contracts of life assurance for the purpose of paragraphs 11 to 14 when they depend on the probabilities of human life combined with the rate of interest for the calculation of the reciprocal engagements between the two parties.

Marine insurance.

Contracts of marine insurance including time policies and voyage policies entered into between an insurer and a person who subsequently became an enemy, shall be deemed to have been dissolved on his becoming an enemy, except in cases where the risk undertaken in the contract had attached before he became an enemy.

Where the risk had not attached, money paid by way of premium or otherwise shall be recoverable from the insurer.

Where the risk had attached effect shall be given to the contract notwithstanding the party becoming an enemy, and sums due under the contract either by way of premiums or in respect of losses shall be recoverable after the coming into force of the present Treaty.

In the event of any agreement being come to for the payment of interest on sums due before the war to or by the nationals of States which have been at war and recovered after the war, such interest shall in the case of losses recoverable under contracts of marine insurance run from the expiration of a period of one year from the date of the loss.

17.

No contract of marine insurance with an insured person who subsequently became an enemy shall be deemed to cover losses due to belligerent action by the Power of which the insurer was a national or by the allies or associates of such Power.

18.

Where it is shown that a person who had before the war entered into a contract of marine insurance with an insurer who subsequently became an enemy entered after the outbreak of war into a new contract covering the same risk with an insurer who was not an enemy, the new contract shall be deemed to be substituted for the original contract as from the date when it was entered into, and the premiums payable shall be adjusted on the basis of the original insurer having remained liable on the contract only up till the time when the new contract was entered into.

Other insurances.

19.

Contracts of insurance entered into before the war between an insurer and a person who subsequently became an enemy other than contracts dealt with in paragraphs 9 to 18 shall be treated in all respects on the same footing as contracts of fire insurance between the same persons would be dealt with under the said paragraphs.

Re-insurance.

All treaties of re-insurance with a person who became an enemy shall be regarded as having been abrogated by the person becoming an enemy, but without prejudice in the case of life or marine risks which had attached before the war to the right to recover payment after the war for sums due in respect of such risks.

Nevertheless if, owing to invasion, it has been impossible for the re-insured to find another re-insurer, the treaty shall remain in force until three months after the coming into force of the present Treaty.

Where a re-insurance treaty becomes void under this paragraph, there shall be an adjustment of accounts between the parties in respect both of premiums paid and payable and of liabilities for losses in respect of life or marine risks which had attached before the war. In the case of risks other than those mentioned in paragraphs 11 to 18 the adjustment of accounts shall be made as at the date of the parties becoming enemies without regard to claims for losses which may have occurred since that date.

21.

The provisions of the preceding paragraph will extend equally to re-insurances existing at the date of the parties becoming enemies of particular risks undertaken by the insurer in a contract of insurance against any risks other than life or marine risks.

22.

Re-insurance of life risks effected by particular contracts and not under any general treaty remain in force.

The provisions of paragraph 12 apply to treaties of re-insurance of life insurance contracts in which enemy companies are the re-insurers.

23.

In case of a re-insurance effected before the war of a contract of marine insurance, the cession of a risk which had been ceded to the re-insurer shall, if it had attached before the outbreak of war, remain valid and effect be given to the contract notwithstanding the outbreak of war; sums due under the contract of re-insurance in respect either of premiums or of losses shall be recoverable after the war.

24.

The provisions of paragraphs 17 and 18 and the last part of paragraph 16 shall apply to contracts for the re-insurance of marine risks.

Section VI. Mixed Arbitral Tribunal.

ARTICLE 304.

(a) Within three months from the date of the coming into force of the present Treaty, a Mixed Arbitral Tribunal shall be established between each of the Allied and Associated Powers on the one hand and Germany on the other hand. Each such Tribunal shall consist of three members. Each of the Governments concerned shall appoint one of these members. The President shall be chosen by agreement between the two Governments concerned.

In case of failure to reach agreement, the President of the Tribunal and two other persons either of whom may in case of need take his place, shall be chosen by the Council of the League of Nations, or, until this is set up, by M. Gustave Ador if he is willing. These persons shall be nationals of Powers that have remained neutral during the war.

If any Government does not proceed within a period of one month in case there is a vacancy to appoint a member of the Tribunal, such member shall be chosen by the other Government from the two persons mentioned above other than the President.

The decision of the majority of the members of the Tribunal shall be the decision of the Tribunal.

(b) The Mixed Arbitral Tribunals established pursuant to paragraph (a), shall decide all questions within their competence under Sections III, IV, V and VII.

In addition, all questions, whatsoever their nature, relating to contracts concluded before the coming into force of the present Treaty between nationals of the Allied and Associated Powers and German nationals shall be decided by the Mixed Arbitral Tribunal, always excepting questions which, under the laws of the Allied, Associated or Neutral Powers, are within the jurisdiction of the National Courts of those Powers. Such questions shall be decided by the National Courts in question, to the exclusion of the Mixed Arbitral Tribunal. The party who is a national of an Allied or Associated Power may nevertheless bring the case before the Mixed Arbitral Tribunal if this is not prohibited by the laws of his country.

(c) If the number of cases justifies it, additional members shall be appointed and each Mixed Arbitral Tribunal shall sit in divisions. Each of these divisions will be constituted as above.

(d) Each Mixed Arbitral Tribunal will settle its own procedure except in so far as it is provided in the following Annex, and is empowered to award the sums to be paid by the loser in respect of the costs and expenses of the proceedings.

(e) Each Government will pay the remuneration of the member of the Mixed Arbitral Tribunal appointed by it and of any agent whom it may appoint to represent it before the Tribunal. The remuneration of the President will be determined by special agreement between the Governments concerned; and this remuneration and the joint expenses of each Tribunal will be paid by the two Governments in equal moieties.

(f) The High Contracting Parties agree to regard the decisions of the Mixed Arbitral Tribunal as final and conclusive, and to render them binding upon their nationals.

ANNEX.

1.

Should one of the members of the Tribunal either die, retire, or be unable for any reason whatever to discharge his functions, the same procedure will be followed for filling the vacancy as was followed for appointing him.

2.

The Tribunal may adopt such rules of procedure as shall be in accordance with justice and equity and decide the order and time at which each party must conclude its arguments, and may arrange all formalities required for dealing with the evidence.

3.

The agent and counsel of the parties on each side are authorized to present orally and in writing to the tribunal arguments in support or in defence of each case.

4.

The Tribunal shall keep record of the questions and cases submitted and the proceedings thereon, with the dates of such proceedings.

5.

Each of the Powers concerned may appoint a secretary. These secretaries shall act together as joint secretaries of the Tribunal and shall be subject to its direction. The tribunal may appoint and employ any other necessary officer or officers to assist in the performance of its duties.

6.

The Tribunal shall decide all questions and matters submitted upon such evidence and information as may be furnished by the parties concerned.

7.

Germany agrees to give the Tribunal all facilities and information required by it for carrying out its investigations.

8.

The language in which the proceedings shall be conducted shall be determined by the Allied or Associated Power concerned.

9.

The place and time for the meetings of each Tribunal shall be determined by the Allied or Associated Power concerned.

ARTICLE 305.

Whenever a competent Tribunal has given or gives a decision in a case covered by Sections III, IV, V or VII, and such decision is inconsistent with the provisions of such Sections, the party who is prejudiced by the decision shall be entitled to obtain redress which shall be fixed by the Mixed Arbitral Tribunal. At the request of the national of an Allied or Associated Power, the redress may, whenever possible, be effected by the Mixed Arbitral Tribunal directing the replacement of the parties in the position occupied by them before the judgment was given by the German Court.

Section VII. Industrial property.

ARTICLE 306.

Subject to the stipulations of the present Treaty, rights of industrial, literary, and artistic property, as such property is defined by the International Conventions of Paris and of Berne, mentioned in Article 286, shall be re-established or restored, as from the coming into force of the present Treaty, in the territories of the High Contracting Parties, in favour of the persons entitled to the benefit of them at the moment when the state of war commenced or their legal representatives. Equally, rights which, except for the war, would have been acquired during the war in consequence of an application made for the protection of industrial property, or the publication of a literary or artistic work, shall be recognised and established in favour of those persons who would have been entitled thereto, from the coming into force of the present Treaty.

Nevertheless, all acts done by virtue of the special measures taken during the war under legislative executive or administrative authority of any Allied or Associated Power in regard to the rights of German nationals in industrial literary or artistic property shall remain in force and shall continue to maintain their full effect.

No claim shall be made or action brought by Germany or German nationals in respect of the use during the war by the Government of any Allied or Associated Power, or by any persons acting on behalf or with the assent of such Government of any rights in industrial, literary, or artistic property, nor in respect of the sale, offering for sale, or use of any products, articles, or apparatus whatsoever to which such rights applied.

Unless the legislation of any one of the Allied or Associated Powers otherwise directs, sums due or paid in virtue of any act or operation resulting from the execution of the special measures mentioned in paragraph I of this article shall be dealt with in the same way as other sums due to German nationals are directed to be dealt with by the present Treaty; and sums produced by any special measures taken by the German Government in respect of rights in industrial, literary, or artistic property belonging to the nationals of the Allied or Associated Powers shall be considered and treated in the same way as other debts due from German nationals.

Each of the Allied and Associated Powers reserves to itself the right to impose such limitations, conditions, or restrictions on rights of industrial, literary, or artistic property (with the exception of trade-marks) acquired before or during the war, or which may be subsequently acquired in accordance with its legislation, by German nationals, whether by granting licences, or by the working, or by preserving control over their exploitation, or in any other way, as may be considered necessary for national defence, or in the public interest, or for assuring the fair treatment by Germany of the rights of industrial, literary, and artistic property held in German territory by its nationals, or for securing the due fulfilment of all the obligations undertaken by Germany in the present Treaty.

Each of the Allied or Associated Powers reserves the right to treat as void and of no effect any transfer in whole or in part of or other dealing with rights of or in respect of industrial, literary, or artistic property effected after August 1, 1914, or in the future, which would have the result of defeating the objects of the provisions of this article.

The provisions of this article shall not apply to rights in industrial, literary, or artistic property which have been dealt with in the liquidation of businesses or companies under war legislation by the Allied or Associated Powers, or which may be so dealt with by virtue of Article 297 paragraph (b).

ARTICLE 307.

A minimum of one year after the coming into force of the present Treaty shall be accorded to the nationals of the High Contracting Parties, without extension fees or other penalty, in order to enable such persons to accomplish any act, fulfil any formality, pay any fees, and generally satisfy any obligation prescribed by the laws or regulations of the respective States relating to the obtaining, preserving, or opposing rights to, or in respect of, industrial property either acquired before the 1st August, 1914, or which, except for the war, might have been acquired since that date as a result of an application made before the war or during its continuance, but nothing in this Article shall give any right to reopen interference proceedings in the United States of America where a final hearing has taken place.

All rights in, or in respect of, such property which may have lapsed by reason of any failure to accomplish any act, fulfil any formality, or make any payment, shall revive, but subject in the case of patents and designs to the imposition of such conditions as each Allied or Associated Power may deem reasonably necessary for the protection of persons who have manufactured or made use of the subject matter of such property while the rights had lapsed. Further, where rights to patents or designs belonging to German nationals are revived under this article, they shall be subject to the same provisions as would have been applicable to them during the war, as well as to all the provisions of the present Treaty.

The period from the 1st August, 1914, until the coming into force of the present Treaty shall be excluded in considering the time within which a patent should be worked or a trade mark or design used, and it is further agreed that no patent, registered trade mark or design in force on the 1st August, 1914, shall be subject to revocation or cancellation by reason only of the failure to work such patent or use such trade mark or design for two years after the coming into force of the present Treaty.

ARTICLE 308.

The rights of priority, provided by Article IV of the International Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property of Paris, of the 20th March, 1883, revised at Washington in 1911 or by any other Convention or Statute, for the filing or registration of applications for patents or models of utility, and for the registration of trade marks designs and models which had not expired on the 1st August, 1914, and those which have arisen during the war, or would have arisen but for the war, shall be extended by each of the High Contracting Parties in favour of all nationals of the other High Contracting Parties for a period of six months after the coming into force of the present Treaty.

Nevertheless, such extension shall in no way affect the right of any of the High Contracting Parties or of any person who before the coming into force of the present Treaty was bonâ fide in possession of any rights of industrial property conflicting with rights applied for by another who claims rights of priority in respect of them, to exercise such rights by itself or himself personally, or by such agents or licensees as derived their rights from it or him before the coming into force of the present Treaty; and such persons shall not be amenable to any action or other process of law in respect of infringement.

ARTICLE 309.

No action shall be brought and no claim made by persons residing or carrying on business within the territories of Germany on the one part and of the Allied or Associated Powers on the other, or persons who are nationals of such Powers respectively, or by any one deriving title during the war from such persons, by reason of any action which has taken place within the territory of the other party between the date of the declaration of war and that of the coming into force of the present Treaty, which might constitute an infringement of the rights of industrial property or rights of literary and artistic property, either existing at any time during the war or revived under the provisions of Articles 307 and 308.

Equally, no action for infringement of industrial, literary or artistic property rights by such persons shall at any time be permissible in respect of the sale or offering for sale for a period of one year after the signature of the present Treaty in the territories of the Allied or Associated Powers on the one hand or Germany on the other, of products or articles manufactured, or of literary or artistic works published, during the period between the declaration of war and the signature of the present Treaty, or against those who have acquired and continue to use them. It is understood, nevertheless, that this provision shall not apply when the possessor of the rights was domiciled or had an industrial or commercial establishment in the districts occupied by Germany during the war.

This Article shall not apply as between the United States of America on the one hand and Germany on the other.

ARTICLE 310.

Licences in respect of industrial, literary, or artistic property concluded before the war between nationals of the Allied or Associated Powers or persons residing in their territory or carrying on business therein, on the one part, and German nationals, on the other part, shall be considered as cancelled as from the date of the declaration of war between Germany and the Allied or Associated Powers. But, in any case, the former beneficiary of a contract of this kind shall have the right, within a period of six months after the coming into force of the present Treaty, to demand from the proprietor of the rights the grant of a new license, the conditions of which, in default of agreement between the parties, shall be fixed by the duly qualified tribunal in the country under whose legislation the rights had been acquired, except in the case of licenses held in respect of rights acquired under German law. In such cases the conditions shall be fixed by the Mixed Arbitral Tribunal referred to in Section VI of this Part. The tribunal may, if necessary, fix also the amount which it may deem just should be paid by reason of the use of the rights during the war.

No licence in respect of industrial, literary, or artistic property, granted under the special war legislation of any Allied or Associated Power, shall be affected by the continued existence of any licence entered into before the war, but shall remain valid and of full effect, and a licence so granted to the former beneficiary of a licence entered into before the war shall be considered as substituted for such licence.

Where sums have been paid during the war by virtue of a licence or agreement concluded before the war in respect of rights of industrial property or for the reproduction or the representation of literary, dramatic, or artistic works, these sums shall be dealt with in the same manner as other debts or credits of German nationals, as provided by the present Treaty.

This Article shall not apply as between the United States of America on the one hand and Germany on the other.

ARTICLE 311.

The inhabitants of territories separated from Germany by virtue of the present Treaty shall, notwithstanding this separation and the change of nationality consequent thereon, continue to enjoy in Germany all the rights in industrial, literary, and artistic property to which they were entitled under German legislation at the time of the separation.

Section XIII. Social and State Insurance in Ceded Territory.

ARTICLE 312.

Without prejudice to the provisions contained in other Articles of the present Treaty the German Government undertakes to transfer to any Power to which German territory in Europe is ceded, and to any Power administering former German territory as a mandatory under Article 22 of Part I (League of Nations), such portion of the reserves accumulated by the Government of the German Empire or of German States, or by public or private organisations under their control, as is attributable to the carrying on of Social or State Insurance in such territory.

The Powers to which these funds are transferred must apply them to the performance of the obligations arising from such insurances.

The conditions of the transfer will be determined by special conventions to be concluded between the German Government and the Governments concerned.

PART XI.

AERIAL NAVIGATION.

ARTICLE 313.

The aircraft of the Allied and Associated Powers shall have full liberty of passage and landing over and in the territory and territorial waters of Germany, and shall enjoy the same privileges as German aircraft, particularly in case of distress by land or sea.

ARTICLE 314.

The aircraft of the Allied and Associated Powers shall, while in transit to any foreign country whatever, enjoy the right of flying over the territory and territorial waters of Germany without landing, subject always to any regulations which may be made by Germany, and which shall be applicable equally to the aircraft of Germany and those of the Allied and Associated countries.

ARTICLE 315.

All aerodromes in Germany open to national public traffic shall be open for the aircraft of the Allied and Associated Powers, and in any such aerodrome such aircraft shall be treated on a footing of equality with German aircraft as regards charges of every description, including charges for landing and accommodation.

ARTICLE 316.

Subject to the present provisions, the rights of passage, transit and landing, provided for in Articles 313, 314 and 315, are subject to the observance of such regulations as Germany may consider it necessary to enact, but such regulations shall be applied without distinction to German aircraft and to the aircraft of Allied and Associated Countries.

ARTICLE 317.

Certificates of nationality, airworthiness, or competency, and licences, issued or recognised as valid by any of the Allied or Associated Powers, shall be recognised in Germany as valid and as equivalent to the certificates and licences issued by Germany.

ARTICLE 318.

As regards internal commercial air traffic, the aircraft of the Allied and Associated Powers shall enjoy in Germany most favoured nation treatment.

ARTICLE 319.

Germany undertakes to enforce the necessary measures to ensure that all German aircraft flying over her territory shall comply with the Rules as to lights and signals, Rules of the Air and Rules for Air Traffic on and in the neighbourhood of aerodromes, which have been laid down in the Convention relative to Aerial Navigation concluded between the Allied and Associated Powers.

ARTICLE 320.

The obligations imposed by the preceding provisions shall remain in force until the 1st January 1923, unless before that date Germany shall have been admitted into the League of Nations or shall have been authorised, by consent of the Allied and Associated Powers, to adhere to the Convention relative to Aerial Navigation concluded between those Powers.

PART XII.

PORTS, WATERWAYS AND RAILWAYS.

Section I. General provisions.

ARTICLE 321.

Germany undertakes to grant freedom of transit through her territories on the routes most convenient for international transit, either by rail, navigable waterway, or canal, to persons, goods, vessels, carriages, wagons and mails coming from or going to the territories of any of the Allied and Associated Powers (whether contiguous or not); for this purpose the crossing of territorial waters shall be allowed. Such persons, goods, vessels, carriages, wagons and mails shall not be subjected to any transit duty or to any undue delays or restrictions, and shall be entitled in Germany to national treatment as regards charges, facilities, and all other matters.

Goods in transit shall be exempt from all Customs or other similar duties.

All charges imposed on transport in transit shall be reasonable, having regard to the conditions of the traffic. No charge, facility or restriction shall depend directly or indirectly on the ownership or on the nationality of the ship or other means of transport on which any part of the through journey has been, or is to be, accomplished.

ARTICLE 322.

Germany undertakes neither to impose nor to maintain any control over transmigration traffic through her territories beyond measures necessary to ensure that passengers are bona fide in transit; nor to allow any shipping company or any other private body, corporation or person interested in the traffic to take any part whatever in, or to exercise any direct or indirect influence over, any administrative service that may be necessary for this purpose.

ARTICLE 323.

Germany undertakes to make no discrimination or preference, direct or indirect, in the duties, charges and prohibitions relating to importations into or exportations from her territories, or, subject to the special engagements contained in the present Treaty, in the charges and conditions of transport of goods or persons entering or leaving her territories, based on the frontier crossed; or on the kind, ownership, or flag of the means of transport (including aircraft) employed; or on the original or immediate place of departure of the vessel, wagon or aircraft or other means of transport employed, or its ultimate or intermediate destination; or on the route of or places of transshipment on the journey; or on whether any port through which the goods are imported or exported is a German port or a port belonging to any foreign country or on whether the goods are imported or exported by sea, by land or by air.

Germany particularly undertakes not to establish against the ports and vessels of any of the Allied and Associated Powers any surtax or any direct or indirect bounty for export or import by German ports or vessels, or by those of another Power, for example by means of combined tariffs. She further undertakes that persons or goods passing through a port or using a vessel of any of the Allied and Associated Powers shall not be subjected to any formality or delay whatever to which such persons or goods would not be subjected if they passed through a German port or a port of any other Power, or used a German vessel or a vessel of any other Power.

ARTICLE 324.

All necessary administrative and technical measures shall be taken to shorten, as much as possible, the transmission of goods across the German frontiers and to ensure their forwarding and transport from such frontiers, irrespective of whether such goods are coming from or going to the territories of the Allied and Associated Powers or are in transit from or to those territories, under the same material conditions in such matters as rapidity of carriage and care en route as are enjoyed by other goods of the same kind carried on German territory under similar conditions of transport.

In particular, the transport of perishable goods shall be promptly and regularly carried out, and the customs formalities shall be effected in such a way as to allow the goods to be carried straight through by trains which make connection.

ARTICLE 325.

Germany undertakes not to take any measures the effect of which would be to divert traffic of any kind from its normal itinerary for the benefit of her own transport routes.

ARTICLE 326.

The seaports of the Allied and Associated Powers are entitled to all favours and to all reduced tariffs granted on German railways or navigable waterways for the benefit of German ports or of any port of another Power.

Germany may not refuse to participate in the tariffs or combinations of tariffs intended to secure for ports of any of the Allied and Associated Powers advantages similar to those granted by Germany to her own ports or the ports of any other Power.

Section II. Navigation.

Chapter 1. Freedom of navigation.

ARTICLE 327.

The nationals of any of the Allied and Associated Powers as well as their vessels and property shall enjoy in all German ports and on the inland navigation routes of Germany the same treatment in all respects as German nationals, vessels and property.

In particular the vessels of any one of the Allied or Associated Powers shall be entitled to transport goods of any description, and passengers, to or from any ports or places in German territory to which German vessels may have access, under conditions which shall not be more onerous than those applied in the case of national vessels; they shall be treated on a footing of equality with national vessels as regards port and harbour facilities and charges of every description, including facilities for stationing, loading and unloading, and duties and charges of tonnage, harbour, pilotage, lighthouse, quarantine, and all analagous duties and charges of whatsoever nature, levied in the name of or for the profit of the Government, public functionaries, private individuals, corporations or establishments of any kind.

In the event of Germany granting a preferential regime to any of the Allied or Associated Powers or to any other foreign Power, this regime shall be extended immediately and unconditionally to all the Allied and Associated Powers.

There shall be no impediment to the movement of persons or vessels other than those arising from prescriptions concerning customs, police, sanitation, emigration and immigration, and those relating to the import and export of prohibited goods. Such regulations must be reasonable and uniform and must not impede traffic unnecessarily.

Chapter 2. Free zones in ports.

ARTICLE 328.

The free zones existing in German ports on the 1st August, 1914, shall be maintained. These free zones, and any other free zones which may be established in German territory by the present Treaty, shall be subject to the régime provided for in the following Articles.

Goods entering or leaving a free zone shall not be subjected to any import or export duty, other than those provided for in Article 330.

Vessels and goods entering a free zone may be subjected to the charges established to cover expenses of administration, upkeep and improvement of the port, as well as to the charges for the use of various installations, provided that these charges shall be reasonable having regard to the expenditure incurred, and shall be levied in the conditions of equality provided for in Article 327.

Goods shall not be subjected to any other charge except a statistical duty which shall not exceed 1 per mille ad valorem, and which shall be devoted exclusively to defraying the expenses of compiling statements of the traffic in the port.

ARTICLE 329.

The facilities granted for the erection of warehouses, for packing and for unpacking goods, shall be in accordance with trade requirements for the time being. All goods allowed to be consumed in the free zone shall be exempt from duty, whether of excise or of any other description, apart from the statistical duty provided for in Article 328 above.

There shall be no discrimination in regard to any of the provisions of the present article between persons belonging to different nationalities or between goods of different origin or destination.

ARTICLE 330.

Import duties may be levied on goods leaving the free zone for consumption in the country on the territory of which the port is situated. Conversely, export duties may be levied on goods coming from such country and brought into the free zone. These import and export duties shall be levied on the same basis and at the same rates as similar duties levied at the other Customs frontiers of the country concerned. On the other hand, Germany shall not levy, under any denomination, any import, export or transit duty on goods carried by land or water across her territory to or from the free zone from or to any other State.

Germany shall draw up the necessary regulations to secure and guarantee such freedom of transit over such railways and waterways in her territory as normally give access to the free zone.

Chapter III. Clauses relating to the Elbe, the Oder, the Niemen (Russstrom-Memel-Niemen) and the Danube.

(1) General clauses.

ARTICLE 331.

The following rivers are declared international:

the Elbe (Labe) from its confluence with the Vltava (Moldau), and the Vltava (Moldau) from Prague;
the Oder (Odra) from its confluence with the Oppa;
the Niemen (Russstrom-Memel-Niemen) from Grodno;
the Danube from Ulm;

and all navigable parts of these river systems which naturally provide more than one State with access to the sea, with or without transhipment from one vessel to another; together with lateral canals and channels constructed either to duplicate or to improve naturally navigable sections of the specified river system, or to connect two naturally navigable sections of the same river.

The same shall apply to the Rhine-Danube navigable waterway, should such a waterway be constructed under the conditions laid down in Article 353.

ARTICLE 332.

On the waterways declared to be international in the preceding Article, the nationals, property and flags of all Powers shall be treated on a footing of perfect equality, no distinction being made to the detriment of the nationals, property or flag of any Power between them and the nationals, property or flag of the riparian State itself or of the most favoured nation.

Nevertheless, German vessels shall not be entitled to carry passengers or goods by regular services between the ports of any Allied or Associated Power, without special authority from such Power.

ARTICLE 333.

Where such charges are not precluded by any existing conventions, charges varying on different sections of a river may be levied on vessels using the navigable channels or their approaches, provided that they are intended solely to cover equitably the cost of maintaining in a navigable condition, or of improving, the river and its approaches, or to meet expenditure incurred in the interests of navigation. The schedule of such charges shall be calculated on the basis of such expenditure and shall be posted up in the ports. These charges shall be levied in such a manner as to render any detailed examination of cargoes unnecessary, except in cases of suspected fraud or contravention.

ARTICLE 334.

The transit of vessels, passengers and goods on these waterways shall be effected in accordance with the general conditions prescribed for transit in Section I above.

When the two banks of an international river are within the same State goods in transit may be placed under seal or in the custody of customs agents. When the river forms a frontier goods and passengers in transit shall be exempt from all customs formalities; the loading and unloading of goods, and the embarkation and disembarkation of passengers, shall only take place in the ports specified by the riparian State.

ARTICLE 335.

No dues of any kind other than those provided for in the present Part shall be levied along the course or at the mouth of these rivers.

This provision shall not prevent the fixing by the riparian States of customs, local octroi or consumption duties, or the creation of reasonable and uniform charges levied in the ports, in accordance with public tariffs, for the use of cranes, elevators, quays, warehouses, etc.

ARTICLE 336.

In default of any special organisation for carrying out the works connected with the upkeep and improvement of the international portion of a navigable system, each riparian State shall be bound to take suitable measures to remove any obstacle or danger to navigation and to ensure the maintenance of good conditions of navigation.

If a State neglects to comply with this obligation any riparian State, or any State represented on the International Commission, if there is one, may appeal to the tribunal instituted for this purpose by the League of Nations.

ARTICLE 337.

The same procedure shall be followed in the case of a riparian State undertaking any works of a nature to impede navigation in the international section. The tribunal mentioned in the preceding article shall be entitled to enforce the suspension or suppression of such works, making due allowance in its decisions for all rights in connection with irrigation, water-power, fisheries, and other national interests, which, with the consent of all the riparian States or of all the States represented on the International Commission, if there is one, shall be given priority over the requirements of navigation.

Appeal to the tribunal of the League of Nations does not require the suspension of the works.

ARTICLE 338.

The régime set out in Articles 332 to 337 above shall be superseded by one to be laid down in a General Convention drawn up by the Allied and Associated Powers, and approved by the League of Nations, relating to the waterways recognised in such Convention as having an international character. This Convention shall apply in particular to the whole or part of the above-mentioned river systems of the Elbe (Labe), the Oder (Odra), the Niemen (Russstrom-Memel-Niemen), and the Danube, and such other parts of these river systems as may be covered by a general definition.

Germany undertakes, in accordance with the provisions of Article 379, to adhere to the said General Convention as well as to all projects prepared in accordance with Article 343 below for the revision of existing international agreements and regulations.

ARTICLE 339.

Germany shall cede to the Allied and Associated Powers concerned, within a maximum period of three months from the date on which notification shall be given her, a proportion of the tugs and vessels remaining registered in the ports of the river systems referred to in Article 331 after the deduction of those surrendered by way of restitution or reparation. Germany shall in the same way cede material of all kinds necessary to the Allied and Associated Powers concerned for the utilisation of those river systems.

The number of the tugs and boats, and the amount of the material so ceded, and their distribution, shall be determined by an arbitrator or arbitrators nominated by the United States of America, due regard being had to the legitimate needs of the parties concerned, and particularly to the shipping traffic during the five years preceding the war.

All craft so ceded shall be provided with their fittings and gear, shall be in a good state of repair and in condition to carry goods, and shall be selected from among those most recently built.

The cessions provided for in the present article shall entail a credit of which the total amount, settled in a lump sum by the arbitrator or arbitrators shall not in any case exceed the value of the capital expended in the initial establishment of the material ceded, and shall be set off against the total sums due from Germany; in consequence, the indemnification of the proprietors shall be a matter for Germany to deal with.

(2) Special Clauses relating to the Elbe, the Oder and the Niemen (Russstrom-Memel-Niemen).

ARTICLE 340.

The Elbe (Labe) shall be placed under the administration of an International Commission which shall comprise:

4 representatives of the German States bordering on the river;
2 representatives of the Tchecko-Slovak State;
1 representative of Great Britain;
1 representative of France;
1 representative of Italy;
1 representative of Belgium.

Whatever be the number of members present, each delegation shall have the right to record a number of votes equal to the number of representatives allotted to it.

If certain of these representatives cannot be appointed at the time of the coming into force of the present Treaty, the decisions of the Commission shall nevertheless be valid.

ARTICLE 341.

The Oder (Odra) shall be placed under the administration of an International Commission, which shall comprise:

1 representative of Poland;
1 representative of Prussia;
1 representative of the Tchecko-Slovak State;
1 representative of Great Britain;
1 representative of France;
1 representative of Denmark;
1 representative of Sweden.

If certain of these representatives cannot be appointed at the time of the coming into force of the present Treaty, the decisions of the Commission shall nevertheless be valid.

ARTICLE 342.

On a request being made to the League of Nations by any riparian State, the Niemen (Russstrom-Memel-Niemen) shall be placed under the administration of an International Commission, which shall comprise one representative of each riparian State, and three representatives of other States specified by the League of Nations.

ARTICLE 343.

The International Commissions referred to in Articles 340 and 341 shall meet within three months of the date of the coming into force of the present Treaty. The International Commission referred to in Article 342 shall meet within three months from the date of the request made by a riparian State. Each of these Commissions shall proceed immediately to prepare a project for the revision of the existing international agreements and regulations, drawn up in conformity with the General Convention referred to in Article 338, should such Convention have been already concluded. In the absence of such Convention, the project for revision shall be in conformity with the principles of Articles 332 to 337 above.

ARTICLE 344.

The projects referred to in the preceding Article shall, inter alia:

(a) designate the headquarters of the International Commission, and prescribe the manner in which its President is to be nominated;

(b) specify the extent of the Commission's powers, particularly in regard to the execution of works of maintenance, control, and improvement on the river system, the financial régime, the fixing and collection of charges, and regulations for navigation;

(c) define the sections of the river or its tributaries to which the international régime shall be applied.

ARTICLE 345.

The international agreements and regulations at present governing the navigation of the Elbe (Labe), the Oder (Odra), and the Niemen (Russstrom-Memel-Niemen) shall be provisionally maintained in force until the ratification of the above-mentioned projects. Nevertheless, in all cases where such agreements and regulations in force are in conflict with the provisions of Articles 332 to 337 above, or of the General Convention to be concluded, the latter provisions shall prevail.

(3) Special Clauses relating to the Danube.

ARTICLE 346.

The European Commission of the Danube reassumes the powers it possessed before the war. Nevertheless, as a provisional measure, only representatives of Great Britain, France, Italy and Roumania shall constitute this Commission.

ARTICLE 347.

From the point where the competence of the European Commission ceases, the Danube system referred to in Article 331 shall be placed under the administration of an International Commission composed as follows:

2 representatives of German riparian States;
1 representative of each other riparian State;
1 representative of each non-riparian State represented in the future on the European Commission of the Danube.

If certain of these representatives cannot be appointed at the time of the coming into force of the present Treaty, the decisions of the Commission shall nevertheless be valid.

ARTICLE 348.

The International Commission provided for in the preceding Article shall meet as soon as possible after the coming into force of the present Treaty, and shall undertake provisionally the administration of the river in conformity with the provisions of Articles 332 to 337, until such time as a definitive statute regarding the Danube is concluded by the Powers nominated by the Allied and Associated Powers.

ARTICLE 349.

Germany agrees to accept the regime which shall be laid down for the Danube by a Conference of the Powers nominated by the Allied and Associated Powers, which shall meet within one year after the coming into force of the present Treaty.

ARTICLE 350.

The mandate given by Article 57 of the Treaty of Berlin of the 13th July, 1878, to Austria-Hungary, and transferred by her to Hungary, to carry out works at the Iron Gates, is abrogated. The Commission entrusted with the administration of this part of the river shall lay down provisions for the settlement of accounts subject to the financial provisions of the present Treaty. Charges which may be necessary shall in no case be levied by Hungary.

ARTICLE 351.

Should the Tchecko-Slovak State, the Serb-Croat-Slovene State or Roumania, with the authorisation of or under mandate from the International Commission, undertake maintenance, improvement, weir, or other works on a part of the river system which forms a frontier, these States shall enjoy on the opposite bank, and also on the part of the bed which is outside their territory, all necessary facilities for the survey, execution and maintenance of such works.

ARTICLE 352.

Germany shall be obliged to make to the European Commission of the Danube all restitutions, reparations and indemnities for damages inflicted on the Commission during the war.

ARTICLE 353.

In the event of all the Allied and Associated Powers represented on the Central Commission for the Rhine and on the International Commission charged with the administration of the Upper Danube respectively deciding within 25 years from the coming into force of the present Treaty upon the creation of a deep-draught Rhine-Danube navigable waterway, Germany shall be bound to construct such waterway in accordance with plans to be communicated to her by the said Powers.

For this purpose the Central Commission for the Rhine shall have the right to undertake all necessary surveys.

Should Germany fail to carry out all or part of the works, the Central Commission for the Rhine shall be entitled to carry them out instead.

For this purpose the Commission shall be qualified to decide upon and fix the limits of the necessary sites and to occupy the ground after a period of 2 months after notification, subject to the payment of indemnities to be fixed by the Commission and paid by Germany.

This navigable waterway shall be placed under the same administrative régime as the Rhine itself, and the distribution of the initial cost of construction, including the above indemnities, among the States concerned, shall be made by a tribunal to be appointed by the Council of the League of Nations.

Chapter IV. Clauses relating to the Rhine and the Moselle.

ARTICLE 354.

As from the coming into force of the present Treaty, the Convention of Mannheim of 17th October, 1868, together with the Final Protocol thereof, shall continue to govern navigation on the Rhine, subject to the conditions hereinafter laid down.

In the event of any provisions of the said Convention being in conflict with those laid down by the General Convention referred to in Article 338 (which shall apply to the Rhine) the provisions of the General Convention shall prevail.

Within a maximum period of six months from the coming into force of the present Treaty, the Central Commission referred to in Article 355 shall meet to draw up a project of revision of the Convention of Mannheim. This project shall be drawn up in harmony with the provisions of the General Convention referred to above, should this have been concluded by that time, and shall be submitted to the Powers represented on the Central Commission. Germany hereby agrees to adhere to the project so drawn up.

Further, the modifications set out in the following articles shall immediately be made in the Convention of Mannheim.

The Allied and Associated Powers reserve to themselves the right to arrive at an understanding in this connection with Holland, and Germany hereby agrees to acceed if required to any such understanding.

ARTICLE 355.

The Central Commission provided for in the Convention of Mannheim shall consist of nineteen members, viz.:

Two representatives of the Netherlands;

Two representatives of Switzerland;

Four representatives of German riparian States;

Four representatives of France, which in addition shall appoint the President of the Commission;

Two representatives of Great Britain;

Two representatives of Italy;

Two representatives of Belgium.

The headquarters of the Central Commission shall be at Strasburg.

Whatever be the number of members present, each Delegation shall have the right to record a number of votes equal to the number of representatives allotted to it.

If certain of these representatives cannot be appointed at the time of the coming into force of the present Treaty, the decisions of the Commission shall nevertheless be valid.

ARTICLE 356.

Vessels of all nations, and their cargoes, shall have the same rights and privileges as those which are granted to vessels belonging to the Rhine navigation, and to their cargoes.

None of the provisions contained in Articles 15 to 20 and 26 of the above-mentioned Convention of Mannheim, in Article 4 of the Final Protocol thereof, or in later Conventions, shall impede the free navigation of vessels and crews of all nations on the Rhine and on waterways to which such Conventions apply, subject to compliance with the regulations concerning pilotage and other police measures drawn up by the Central Commission.

The provisions of Article 22 of the Convention of Mannheim and of Article 5 of the Final Protocol thereof shall be applied only to vessels registered on the Rhine. The Central Commission shall decide on the steps to be taken to ensure that other vessels satisfy the conditions of the general regulations applying to navigation on the Rhine.

ARTICLE 357.

Within a maximum period of three months from the date on which notification shall be given Germany shall cede to France tugs and vessels, from among those remaining registered in German Rhine ports after the deduction of those surrendered by way of restitution or reparation, or shares in German Rhine navigation companies.

When vessels and tugs are ceded, such vessels and tugs, together with their fittings and gear, shall be in good state of repair, shall be in condition to carry on commercial traffic on the Rhine, and shall be selected from among those most recently built.

The same procedure shall be followed in the matter of the cession by Germany to France of—

(1) the installations, berthing and anchorage accommodation, platforms, docks, warehouses, plant, etc., which German subjects or German companies owned on the 1st August, 1914, in the port of Rotterdam, and

(2) the shares or interests which Germany or German nationals possessed in such installations at the same date.

The amount and specifications of such cessions shall be determined within one year of the coming into force of the present Treaty by an arbitrator or arbitrators appointed by the United States of America, due regard being had to the legitimate needs of the parties concerned.

The cessions provided for in the present article shall entail a credit of which the total amount, settled in a lump sum by the arbitrator or arbitrators mentioned above, shall not in any case exceed the value of the capital expended in the initial establishment of the ceded material and installations, and shall be set off against the total sums due from Germany; in consequence, the indemnification of the proprietors shall be a matter for Germany to deal with.

ARTICLE 358.

Subject to the obligation to comply with the provisions of the Convention of Mannheim or of the Convention which may be substituted therefor, and to the stipulations of the present Treaty, France shall have on the whole course of the Rhine included between the two extreme points of the French frontiers—

(a) the right to take water from the Rhine to feed navigation and irrigation canals (constructed or to be constructed) or for any other purpose, and to execute on the German bank all works necessary for the exercise of this right;

(b) the exclusive right to the power derived from works of regulation on the river, subject to the payment to Germany of the value of half the power actually produced, this payment, which will take into account the cost of the works necessary for producing the power, being made either in money or in power and in default of agreement being determined by arbitration. For this purpose France alone shall have the right to carry out in this part of the river all works of regulation (weirs or other works) which she may consider necessary for the production of power. Similarly, the right of taking water from the Rhine is accorded to Belgium to feed the Rhine-Meuse canal provided for below.

The exercise of the rights mentioned under (a) and (b) of the present Article shall not interfere with navigability nor reduce the facilities for navigation, either in the bed of the Rhine or in the derivations which may be substituted therefor, nor shall it involve any increase in the tolls formerly levied under the Convention in force. All proposed schemes shall be laid before the Central Commission in order that that Commission may assure itself that these conditions are complied with.

To ensure the proper and faithful execution of the provisions contained in (a) and (b) above, Germany:

(i) binds herself not to undertake or to allow the construction of any lateral canal or any derivation on the right bank of the river opposite the French frontiers;

(ii) recognises the possession by France of the right of support on and the right of way over all lands situated on the right bank which may be required in order to survey, to build, and to operate weirs which France, with the consent of the Central Commission, may subsequently decide to establish. In accordance with such consent, France shall be entitled to decide upon and fix the limits of the necessary sites, and she shall be permitted to occupy such lands after a period of two months after simple notification, subject to the payment by her to Germany of indemnities of which the total amount shall be fixed by the Central Commission. Germany shall make it her business to indemnify the proprietors whose property will be burdened with such servitudes or permanently occupied by the works.

Should Switzerland so demand, and if the Central Commission approves, the same rights shall be accorded to Switzerland for the part of the river forming her frontier with other riparian States;

(iii) shall hand over to the French Government, during the month following the coming into force of the present Treaty, all projects, designs, drafts of concessions and of specifications concerning the regulation of the Rhine for any purpose whatever which have been drawn up or received by the Governments of Alsace-Lorraine or of the Grand Duchy of Baden.

ARTICLE 359.

Subject to the preceding provisions, no works shall be carried out in the bed or on either bank of the Rhine where it forms the boundary of France and Germany without the previous approval of the Central Commission or of its agents.

ARTICLE 360.

France reserves the option of substituting herself as regards the rights and obligations resulting from agreements arrived at between the Government of Alsace-Lorraine and the Grand Duchy of Baden concerning the works to be carried out on the Rhine; she may also denounce such agreements within a term of five years dating from the coming into force of the present Treaty.

France shall also have the option of causing works to be carried out which may be recognised as necessary by the Central Commission for the upkeep or improvement of the navigability of the Rhine above Mannheim.

ARTICLE 361.

Should Belgium, within a period of 25 years from the coming into force of the present Treaty decide to create a deep-draught Rhine-Meuse navigable waterway, in the region of Ruhrort, Germany shall be bound to construct, in accordance with plans to be communicated to her by the Belgian Government, after agreement with the Central Commission, the portion of this navigable waterway situated within her territory.

The Belgian Government shall, for this purpose, have the right to carry out on the ground all necessary surveys.

Should Germany fail to carry out all or part of these works, the Central Commission shall be entitled to carry them out instead; and, for this purpose, the Commission may decide upon and fix the limits of the necessary sites and occupy the ground after a period of two months after simple notification, subject to the payment of indemnities to be fixed by it and paid by Germany.

This navigable waterway shall be placed under the same administrative regime as the Rhine itself, and the division of the cost of initial construction, includng the above indemnities, among the States crossed thereby shall be made by the Central Commission.

ARTICLE 362.

Germany hereby agrees to offer no objection to any proposals of the Central Rhine Commission for extending its jurisdiction:

(1) to the Moselle below the Franco-Luxemburg frontier down to the Rhine, subject to the consent of Luxemburg;

(2) to the Rhine above Basle up to the Lake of Constance, subject to the consent of Switzerland;

(3) to the lateral canals and channels which may be established either to duplicate or to improve naturally navigable sections of the Rhine or the Moselle, or to connect two naturally navigable sections of these rivers, and also any other parts of the Rhine river system which may be covered by the General Convention provided for in Article 338 above.

Chapter V. Clauses giving to the Tchecko-Slovak State the use of northern ports.

ARTICLE 363.

In the ports of Hamburg and Stettin Germany shall lease to the Tchecko-Slovak State, for a period of 99 years, areas which shall be placed under the general régime of free zones and shall be used for the direct transit of goods coming from or going to that State.

ARTICLE 364.

The delimitation of these areas, and their equipment, their exploitation, and in general all conditions for their utilisation, including the amount of the rental, shall be decided by a Commision consisting of one delegate of Germany, one delegate of the Tchecko-Slovak State and one delegate of Great Britain. These conditions shall be susceptible of revision every ten years in the same manner.

Germany declares in advance that she will adhere to the decisions so taken.

Section III. Railways.

Chapter I. Clauses relating to international transport.

ARTICLE 365.

Goods coming from the territories of the Allied and Associated Powers, and going to Germany, or in transit through Germany from or to the territories of the Allied and Associated Powers, shall enjoy on the German railways as regards charges to be collected (rebates and drawbacks being taken into account), facilities, and all other matters, the most favourable treatment applied to goods of the same kind carried on any German lines, either in internal traffic, or for export, import or in transit, under similar conditions of transport, for example as regards length of route. The same rule shall be applied, on the request of one or more of the Allied and Associated Powers, to goods specially designated by such Power or Powers coming from Germany and going to their territories.

International tariffs established in accordance with the rates referred to in the preceding paragraph and involving through way-bills shall be established when one of the Allied and Associated Powers shall require it from Germany.

ARTICLE 366.

From the coming into force of the present Treaty the High Contracting Parties shall renew, in so far as concerns them and under the reserves indicated in the second paragraph of the present Article, the conventions and arrangements signed at Berne on the 14th October, 1890, the 20th September, 1893, the 16th July, 1895, the 16th June, 1898, and the 19th September, 1906, regarding the transportation of goods by rail.

If within five years from the date of the coming into force of the present Treaty a new convention for the transportation of passengers, luggage and goods by rail shall have been concluded to replace the Berne Convention of the 14th October 1890 and the subsequent additions referred to above, this new convention and the supplementary provisions for international transport by rail which may be based on it shall bind Germany, even if she shall have refused to take part in the preparation of the convention or to subscribe to it. Until a new convention shall have been concluded, Germany shall conform to the provisions of the Berne Convention and the subsequent additions referred to above, and to the current supplementary provisions.

ARTICLE 367.

Germany shall be bound to co-operate in the establishment of through ticket services (for passengers and their luggage) which shall be required by any of the Allied and Associated Powers to ensure their communication by rail with each other and with all other countries by transit across the territories of Germany; in particular Germany shall, for this purpose, accept trains and carriages coming from the territories of the Allied and Associated Powers and shall forward them with a speed at least equal to that of her best long-distance trains on the same lines. The rates applicable to such through services shall not in any case be higher than the rates collected on German internal services for the same distance, under the same conditions of speed and comfort.

The tariffs applicable under the same conditions of speed and comfort to the transportation of emigrants going to or coming from ports of the Allied and Associated Powers and using the German railways, shall not be at a higher kilometric rate than the most favourable tariffs (drawbacks and rebates being taken into account) enjoyed on the said railways by emigrants going to or coming from any other ports.

ARTICLE 368.

Germany shall not apply specially to such through services, or to the transportation of emigrants going to or coming from the ports of the Allied and Associated Powers, any technical, fiscal or administrative measures, such as measures of customs examination, general police, sanitary police, and control, the result of which would be to impede or delay such services.

ARTICLE 369.

In case of transport partly by rail and partly by internal navigation, with or without through way-bill, the preceding Articles shall apply to the part of the journey performed by rail.

Chapter II. Rolling-stock.

ARTICLE 370.

Germany undertakes that German wagons shall be fitted with apparatus allowing:

(1) of their inclusion in goods trains on the lines of such of the Allied and Associated Powers as are parties to the Berne Convention of May 15, 1886, as modified on May 18, 1907, without hampering the action of the continuous brake which may be adopted in such countries within ten years of the coming into force of the present Treaty, and

(2) of the acceptance of wagons of such countries in all goods trains on the German lines.

The rolling stock of the Allied and Associated Powers shall enjoy on the German lines the same treatment as German rolling stock as regards movement, upkeep and repairs.

Chapter III. Cessions of railway lines.

ARTICLE 371.

Subject to any special provisions concerning the cession of ports, waterways and railways situated in the territories over which Germany abandons her sovereignty, and to the financial conditions relating to the concessionnaires and the pensioning of the personnel, the cession of railways will take place under the followig conditions:

1. The works and installations of all the railroads shall be handed over complete and in good condition.

2. When a railway system possessing its own rolling-stock is handed over in its entirety by Germany to one of the Allied and Associated Powers, such stock shall be handed over complete, in accordance with the last inventory before November 11th, 1918, and in a normal state of upkeep.

3. As regards lines without any special rolling-stock, Commissions of experts designated by the Allied and Associated Powers, on which Germany shall be represented, shall fix the proportion of the stock existing on the system to which those lines belong to be handed over. These Commissions shall have regard to the amount of the material registered on these lines in the last inventory before November 11th, 1918, the length of track (sidings included), and the nature and amount of traffic. These Commissions shall also specify the locomotives, carriages and wagons to be handed over in each case; they shall decide upon the conditions of their acceptance, and shall make the provisional arrangements necessary to ensure their repair in German workshops.

4. Stocks of stores, fittings and plant shall be handed over under the same conditions as the rolling-stock.

The provisions of paragraphs 3 and 4 above shall be applied to the lines of former Russian Poland converted by Germany to the German gauge, such lines being regarded as detached from the Prussian State System.

Chapter IV. Provisions relating to certain railway lines.

ARTICLE 372.

When as a result of the fixing of new frontiers a railway connection between two parts of the same country crosses another country, or a branch line from one country has its terminus in another, the conditions of working, if not specifically provided for in the present Treaty, shall be laid down in a convention between the railway administrations concerned. If the administrations cannot come to an agreement as to the terms of such convention, the points of difference shall be decided by commissions of experts composed as provided in the preceding Article.

ARTICLE 373.

In the absence of any special agreements, Germany shall be bound, within a period of 25 years from the coming into force of the present Treaty, to allow, on the request of one of the Allied and Associated Powers made with the consent of the League of Nations, and accompanied by an undertaking to defray the initial cost, the construction or improvement on her territory of lines and connections which may be needed for the establishment of good through services or for the improvement of communication between the territory of the Power making the request and that of any other Power.

Nevertheless, it may be stipulated by particular provisions of the present Treaty, or of supplementary agreements, that, in the case of the construction or improvement of certain specified lines, the initial cost shall be divided among the Powers concerned in proportion to the advantages derived by them. Such division, in default of agreement between the Powers concerned, shall be made by an arbitrator appointed by the League of Nations.

ARTICLE 374.

Germany undertakes to accept, within ten years of the coming into force of the present Treaty, on request being made by the Swiss Government after agreement with the Italian Government, the denunciation of the International Convention of the 13th October 1909 relative to the St. Gothard railway. In the absence of agreement as to the conditions of such denunciation, Germany hereby agrees to accept the decision of an arbitrator designated by the United States of America.

Chapter V. Transitory provisions.

ARTICLE 375.

Germany shall carry out the instructions given her, in regard to transport, by an authorised body acting on behalf of the Allied and Associated Powers:

1. For the carriage of troops under the provisions of the present Treaty, and of material, ammunition and supplies for army use,

2. As a temporary measure, for the transportation of supplies for certain regions, as well as for the restoration, as rapidly as possible, of the normal conditions of transport, and for the organization of postal and telegraphic services.

Section IV. Disputes and revision of permanent clauses.

ARTICLE 376.

Disputes which may arise between interested Powers with regard to the interpretation and application of the preceding articles shall be settled as provided by the League of Nations.

ARTICLE 377.

At any time the League of Nations may recommend the revision of such of these Articles as relate to a permanent administrative régime.

ARTICLE 378.

The stipulations in Articles 321 to 330, 332, 365, and 367 to 369 shall be subject to revision by the Council of the League of Nations at any time after five years from the coming into force of the present Treaty.

Failing such revision, no Allied or Associated Power can claim after the expiration of the above period of five years the benefit of any of the stipulations in the Articles enumerated above on behalf of any portion of its territories in which reciprocity is not accorded in respect of such stipulations. The period of five years during which reciprocity cannot be demanded may be prolonged by the Council of the League of Nations.

Section V. Special provision.

ARTICLE 379.

Without prejudice to the special obligations imposed on her by the present Treaty for the benefit of the Allied and Associated Powers, Germany undertakes to adhere to any General Conventions regarding the international régime of transit, waterways, ports or railways which may be concluded by the Allied and Associated Powers, with the approval of the League of Nations, within five years of the coming into force of the present Treaty.

Section VI. Clauses relating to the Kiel Canal.

ARTICLE 380.

The Kiel Canal and its approaches shall be maintained free and open to the vessels of commerce and of war of all nations at peace with Germany on terms of entire equality.

ARTICLE 381.

The nationals, property and vessels of all Powers shall, in respect of charges, facilities, and in all other respects, be treated on a footing of perfect equality in the use of the Canal, no distinction being made to the detriment of nationals, property and vessels of any Power between them and the nationals, property and vessels of Germany or of the most favoured nation.

No impediment shall be placed on the movement of persons or vessels other than those arising out of police, customs, sanitary, emigration or immigration regulations and those relating to the import or export of prohibited goods. Such regulations must be reasonable and uniform and must not unnecessarily impede traffic.

ARTICLE 382.

Only such charges may be levied on vessels using the Canal or its approaches as are intended to cover in an equitable manner the cost of maintaining in a navigable condition, or of improving, the Canal or its approaches, or to meet expenses incurred in the interests of navigation. The schedule of such charges shall be calculated on the basis of such expenses, and shall be posted up in the ports.

These charges shall be levied in such a manner as to render any detailed examination of cargoes unnecessary, except in the case of suspected fraud or contravention.

ARTICLE 383.

Goods in transit may be placed under seal or in the custody of customs agents; the loading and unloading of goods, and the embarkation and disembarkation of passengers, shall only take place in the ports specified by Germany.

ARTICLE 384.

No charges of any kind other than those provided for in the present Treaty shall be levied along the course or at the approaches of the Kiel Canal.

ARTICLE 385.

Germany shall be bound to take suitable measures to remove any obstacle or danger to navigation, and to ensure the maintenance of good conditions of navigation. She shall not undertake any works of a nature to impede navigation on the Canal or its approaches.

ARTICLE 386.

In the event of violation of any of the conditions of Articles 380 to 386, or of disputes as to the interpretation of these Articles, any interested Power can appeal to the jurisdiction instituted for the purpose by the League of Nations, and can demand the formation of an International Commission.

In order to avoid reference of small questions to the League of Nations, Germany will establish a local authority at Kiel qualified to deal with disputes in the first instance and to give satisfaction so far as possible to complaints which may be presented through the consular representatives of the interested powers.

PART XIII.

LABOUR.

Section I. Organisation of labour.

Whereas the League of Nations has for its object the establishment of universal peace, and such a peace can be established only if it is based upon social justice;

And whereas conditions of labour exist involving such injustice, hardship and privation to large numbers of people as to produce unrest so great that the peace and harmony of the world are imperilled; and an improvement of those conditions is urgently required: as, for example, by the regulations of the hours of work, including the establishment of a maximum working day and week, the regulation of the labour supply, the prevention of unemployment, the provision of an adequate living wage, the protection of the worker against sickness, disease and injury arising out of his employment, the protection of children, young persons and women, provision for old age and injury, protection of the interests of workers when employed in countries other than their own, recognition of the principle of freedom of association, the organisation of vocational and technical education and other measures;

Whereas also the failure of any nation to adopt humane conditions of labour is an obstacle in the way of other nations which desire to improve the conditions in their own countries;

The HIGH CONTRACTING PARTIES, moved by sentiments of justice and humanity as well as by the desire to secure the permanent peace of the world, agree to the following:

Chapter I. Organisation.

ARTICLE 387.

A permanent organisation is hereby established for the promotion of the objects set forth in the Preamble.

The original Members of the League of Nations shall be the original Members of this organisation, and hereafter membership of the League of Nations shall carry with it membership of the said organisation.

ARTICLE 388.

The permanent organisation shall consist of:

(i) a General Conference of Representatives of the Members and,

(ii) an International Labour Office controlled by the Governing Body described in Article 393.

ARTICLE 389.

The meetings of the General Conference of Representatives of the Members shall be held from time to time as occasion may require, and at least once in every year. It shall be composed of four Representatives of each of the Members, of whom two shall be Government Delegates and the two others shall be Delegates representing respectively the employers and the workpeople of each of the Members.

Each Delegate may be accompanied by advisers, who shall not exceed two in number for each item on the agenda of the meeting. When questions specially affecting women are to be considered by the Conference, one at least of the advisers should be a woman.

The Members undertake to nominate non-Government Delegates and advisers chosen in agreement with the industrial organisations, if such organisations exist, which are most representative of employers or workpeople, as the case may be, in their respective countries.

Advisers shall not speak except on a request made by the Delegate whom they accompany and by special authorization of the President of the Conference, and may not vote.

A Delegate may by notice in writing addressed to the President appoint one of his advisers to act as his deputy, and the adviser, while so acting, shall be allowed to speak and vote.

The names of the Delegates and their advisers will be communicated to the International Labour Office by the Government of each of the Members.

The credentials of Delegates and their advisers shall be subject to scrutiny by the Conference, which may, by two-thirds of the votes cast by the Delegates present, refuse to admit any Delegate or adviser whom it deems not to have been nominated in accordance with this Article.

ARTICLE 390.

Every Delegate shall be entitled to vote individually on all matters which are taken into consideration by the Conference.

If one of the Members fails to nominate one of the non-Government Delegates whom it is entitled to nominate, the other non-Government Delegate shall be allowed to sit and speak at the conference, but not to vote.

If in accordance with Article 389 the Conference refuses admission to a Delegate of one of the Members, the provisions of the present Article shall apply as if that Delegate had not been nominated.

ARTICLE 391.

The meetings of the Conference shall be held at the seat of the League of Nations, or at such other place as may be decided by the Conference at a previous meeting by two-thirds of the votes cast by the Delegates present.

ARTICLE 392.

The International Labour Office shall be established at the seat of the League of Nations as part of the organisation of the League.

ARTICLE 393.

The International Labour Office shall be under the control of a Governing Body consisting of twenty-four persons, appointed in accordance with the following provisions:

The Governing Body of the International Labour Office shall be constituted as follows:—

Twelve persons representing the Governments;

Six persons elected by the Delegates to the Conference representing the employers;

Six persons elected by the Delegates to the Conference representing the workers.

Of the twelve persons representing the Governments eight shall be nominated by the Members which are of the chief industrial importance, and four shall be nominated by the Members selected for the purpose by the Government Delegates to the Conference, excluding the Delegates of the eight Members mentioned above.

Any question as to which are the Members of the chief industrial importance shall be decided by the Council of the League of Nations.

The period of office of the Members of the Governing Body will be three years. The method of filling vacancies and other similar questions may be determined by the Governing Body subject to the approval of the Conference.

The Governing Body shall, from time to time, elect one of its members to act as its Chairman, shall regulate its own procedure and shall fix its own times of meeting. A special meeting shall be held if a written request to that effect is made by at least ten members of the Governing Body.

ARTICLE 394.

There shall be a Director of the International Labour Office, who shall be appointed by the Governing Body, and, subject to the instructions of the Governing Body, shall be responsible for the efficient conduct of the International Labour Office and for such other duties as may be assigned to him.

The Director or his deputy shall attend all meetings of the Governing Body.

ARTICLE 395.

The staff of the International Labour Office shall be appointed by the Director, who shall, so far as is possible with due regard to the efficiency of the work of the Office, select persons of different nationalities. A certain number of these persons shall be women.

ARTICLE 396.

The functions of the International Labour Office shall include the collection and distribution of information on all subjects relating to the international adjustment of conditions of industrial life and labour, and particularly the examination of subjects which it is proposed to bring before the Conference with a view to the conclusion of international conventions, and the conduct of such special investigations as may be ordered by the Conference.

It will prepare the agenda for the meetings of the Conference.

It will carry out the duties required of it by the provisions of this Part of the present Treaty in connection with international disputes.

It will edit and publish in French and English, and in such other languages as the Governing Body may think desirable, a periodical paper dealing with problems of industry and employment of international interest.

Generally, in addition to the functions set out in this Article, it shall have such other powers and duties as may be assigned to it by the Conference.

ARTICLE 397.

The Government Departments of any of the Members which deal with questions of industry and employment may communicate directly with the Director through the Representative of their Government on the Governing Body of the International Labour Office, or failing any such Representative, through such other qualified official as the Government may nominate for the purpose.

ARTICLE 398.

The International Labour Office shall be entitled to the assistance of the Secretary-General of the League of Nations in any matter in which it can be given.

ARTICLE 399.

Each of the Members will pay the travelling and subsistence expenses of its Delegates and their advisers and of its Representatives attending the meetings of the Conference or Governing Body, as the case may be.

All the other expenses of the International Labour Office and of the meetings of the Conference or Governing Body shall be paid to the Director by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations out of the general funds of the League.

The Director shall be responsible to the Secretary-General of the League for the proper expenditure of all moneys paid to him in pursuance of this Article.

Chapter II. Procedure.

ARTICLE 400.

The agenda for all meetings of the Conference will be settled by the Governing Body, who shall consider any suggestion as to the agenda that may be made by the Government of any of the Members or by any representative organisation recognised for the purpose of Article 389.

ARTICLE 401.

The Director shall act as the Secretary of the Conference, and shall transmit the agenda so as to reach the Members four months before the meeting of the Conference, and, through them, the non-Government Delegates when appointed.

ARTICLE 402.

Any of the Governments of the Members may formally object to the inclusion of any item or items in the agenda. The grounds for such objection shall be set forth in a reasoned statement addressed to the Director, who shall circulate it to all the Members of the Permanent Organisation.

Items to which such objection has been made shall not, however, be excluded from the agenda, if at the Conference a majority of two-thirds of the votes cast by the Delegates present is in favour of considering them.

If the Conference decides (otherwise than under the preceding paragraph) by two-thirds of the votes cast by the Delegates present that any subject shall be considered by the Conference, that subject shall be included in the agenda for the following meeting.

ARTICLE 403.

The Conference shall regulate its own procedure, shall elect its own President, and may appoint committees to consider and report on any matter.

Except as otherwise expressly provided in this Part of the present Treaty, all matters shall be decided by a simple majority of the votes cast by the Delegates present.

The voting is void unless the total number of votes cast is equal to half the number of the Delegates attending the Conference.

ARTICLE 404.

The Conference may add to any committees which it appoints technical experts, who shall be assessors without power to vote.

ARTICLE 405.

When the Conference has decided on the adoption of proposals with regard to an item in the agenda, it will rest with the Conference to determine whether these proposals should take the form: (a) of a recommendation to be submitted to the Members for consideration with a view to effect being given to it by national legislation or otherwise, or (b) of a draft international convention for ratification by the Members.

In either case a majority of two-thirds of the votes cast by the Delegates present shall be necessary on the final vote for the adoption of the recommendation or draft convention, as the case may be, by the Conference.

In framing any recommendation or draft convention of general application the Conference shall have due regard to those countries in which climatic conditions, the imperfect development of industrial organisation or other special circumstances make the industrial conditions substantially different and shall suggest the modifications, if any, which it considers may be required to meet the case of such countries.

A copy of the recommendation or draft convention shall be authenticated by the signature of the President of the Conference and of the Director and shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the League of Nations. The Secretary-General will communicate a certified copy of the recommendation or draft convention to each of the Members.

Each of the Members undertakes that it will, within the period of one year at most from the closing of the session of the Conference, or if it is impossible owing to exceptional circumstances to do so within the period of one year, then at the earliest practicable moment and in no case later than eighteen months from the closing of the session of the Conference, bring the recommendation or draft convention before the authority or authorities within whose competence the matter lies, for the enactment of legislation or other action.

In the case of a recommendation, the Members will inform the Secretary-General of the action taken.

In the case of a draft convention, the Member will, if it obtains the consent of the authority or authorities within whose competence the matter lies, communicate the formal ratification of the convention to the Secretary-General and will take such action as may be necessary to make effective the provisions of such convention.

If on a recommendation no legislative or other action is taken to make a recommendation effective, or if the draft convention fails to obtain the consent of the authority or authorities within whose competence the matter lies, no further obligation shall rest upon the Member.

In the case of a federal State, the power of which to enter into conventions on labour matters is subject to limitations, it shall be in the discretion of that Government to treat a draft convention to which such limitations apply as a recommendation only, and the provisions of this article with respect to recommendations shall apply in such case.

The above Article shall be interpreted in accordance with the following principle:

In no case shall any Member be asked or required, as a result of the adoption of any recommendation or draft convention by the Conference, to lessen the protection afforded by its existing legislation to the workers concerned.

ARTICLE 406.

Any convention so ratified shall be registered by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, but shall only be binding upon the Members which ratify it.

ARTICLE 407.

If any convention coming before the Conference for final consideration fails to secure the support of two-thirds of the votes cast by the Delegates present, it shall nevertheless be within the right of any of the Members of the Permanent Organisation to agree to such convention among themselves.

Any convention so agreed to shall be communicated by the Governments concerned to the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, who shall register it.

ARTICLE 408.

Each of the Members agrees to make an annual report to the International Labour Office on the measures which it has taken to give effect to the provisions of conventions to which it is a party. These reports shall be made in such form and shall contain such particulars as the Governing Body may request. The Director shall lay a summary of these reports before the next meeting of the Conference.

ARTICLE 409.

In the event of any representation being made to the International Labour Office by an industrial association of employers or of workers that any of the Members has failed to secure in any respect the effective observance within its jurisdiction of any convention to which it is a party, the Governing Body may communicate this representation to the Government against which it is made and may invite that Government to make such statement on the subject as it may think fit.

ARTICLE 410.

If no statement is received within a reasonable time from the Government in question, or if the statement when received is not deemed to be satisfactory by the Governing Body, the latter shall have the right to publish the representation and the statement, if any, made in reply to it.

ARTICLE 411.

Any of the Members shall have the right to file a complaint with the International Labour Office if it is not satisfied that any other Member is securing the effective observance of any convention which both have ratified in accordance with the foregoing articles.

The Governing Body may, if it thinks fit, before referring such a complaint to a Commission of Enquiry, as hereinafter provided for, communicate with the Government in question in the manner described in Article 409.

If the Governing Body does not think it necessary to communicate the complaint to the Government in question, or if, when they have made such communication, no statement in reply has been received within a reasonable time which the Governing Body considers to be satisfactory, the Governing Body may apply for the appointment of a Commission of Enquiry to consider the complaint and to report thereon.

The Governing Body may adopt the same procedure either of its own motion or on receipt of a complaint from a Delegate to the Conference.

When any matter arising out of Articles 410 or 411 is being considered by the Governing Body, the Government in question shall, if not already represented thereon, be entitled to send a representative to take part in the proceedings of the Governing Body while the matter is under consideration. Adequate notice of the date on which the matter will be considered shall be given to the Government in question.

ARTICLE 412.

The Commission of Enquiry shall be constituted in accordance with the following provisions:

Each of the Members agrees to nominate within six months of the date on which the present Treaty comes into force three persons of industrial experience, of whom one shall be a representative of employers, one a representative of workers, and one a person of independent standing, who shall together form a panel from which the Members of the Commission of Enquiry shall be drawn.

The qualifications of the persons so nominated shall be subject to scrutiny by the Governing Body, which may by two-thirds of the votes cast by the representatives present refuse to accept the nomination of any person whose qualifications do not in its opinion comply with the requirements of the present article.

Upon the application of the Governing Body, the Secretary-General of the League of Nations shall nominate three persons, one from each section of this panel, to constitute the Commission of Enquiry, and shall designate one of them as the President of the Commission. None of these three persons shall be a person nominated to the panel by any Member directly concerned in the complaint.

ARTICLE 413.

The Members agree that, in the event of the reference of a complaint to a Commission of Enquiry under Article 411, they will each, whether directly concerned in the complaint or not, place at the disposal of the Commission all the information in their possession which bears upon the subject-matter of the complaint.

ARTICLE 414.

When the Commission of Enquiry has fully considered the complaint, it shall prepare a report embodying its findings on all questions of fact relevant to determining the issue between the parties and containing such recommendations as it may think proper as to the steps which should be taken to meet the complaint and the time within which they should be taken.

It shall also indicate in this report the measures, if any, of an economic character against a defaulting Government which it considers to be appropriate, and which it considers other Governments would be justified in adopting.

ARTICLE 415.

The Secretary-General of the League of Nations shall communicate the report of the Commission of Enquiry to each of the Governments concerned in the complaint, and shall cause it to be published.

Each of these Governments shall within one month inform the Secretary-General of the League of Nations whether or not it accepts the recommendations contained in the report of the Commission; and if not, whether it proposes to refer the complaint to the Permanent Court of International Justice of the League of Nations.

ARTICLE 416.

In the event of any Member failing to take the action required by Article 405, with regard to a recommendation or draft Convention, any other Member shall be entitled to refer the matter to the Permanent Court of International Justice.

ARTICLE 417.

The decision of the Permanent Court of International Justice in regard to a complaint or matter which has been referred to it in pursuance of Article 415 or Article 416 shall be final.

ARTICLE 418.

The Permanent Court of International Justice may affirm, vary or reverse any of the findings or recommendations of the Commission of Enquiry, if any, and shall in its decision indicate the measures, if any, of an economic character which it considers to be appropriate, and which other Governments would be justified in adopting against a defaulting Government.

ARTICLE 419.

In the event of any Member failing to carry out within the time specified the recommendations, if any, contained in the report of the Commission of Enquiry, or in the decision of the Permanent Court of International Justice, as the case may be, any other Member may take against that Member the measures of an economic character indicated in the report of the Commission or in the decision of the Court as appropriate to the case.

ARTICLE 420.

The defaulting Government may at any time inform the Governing Body that it has taken the steps necessary to comply with the recommendations of the Commission of Enquiry or with those in the decision of the Permanent Court of International Justice, as the case may be, and may request it to apply to the Secretary-General of the League to constitute a Commission of Enquiry to verify its contention. In this case the provisions of Articles 412, 413, 414, 415, 417 and 418 shall apply, and if the report of the Commission of Enquiry or the decision of the Permanent Court of International Justice is in favour of the defaulting Government, the other Governments shall forthwith discontinue the measures of an economic character that they have taken against the defaulting Government.

Chapter III. General.

ARTICLE 421.

The Members engage to apply conventions which they have ratified in accordance with the provisions of this Part of the present Treaty to their colonies, protectorates and possessions which are not fully self-governing:

1. Except where owing to the local conditions the convention is inapplicable, or

2. Subject to such modifications as may be necessary to adapt the convention to local conditions.

And each of the Members shall notify to the International Labour Office the action taken in respect of each of its colonies, protectorates and possessions which are not fully self-governing.

ARTICLE 422.

Amendments to this Part of the present Treaty which are adopted by the Conference by a majority of two-thirds of the votes cast by the Delegates present shall take effect when ratified by the States whose representatives compose the Council of the League of Nations and by three-fourths of the Members.

ARTICLE 423.

Any question or dispute relating to the interpretation of this Part of the present Treaty or of any subsequent Convention concluded by the Members in pursuance of the provisions of this Part of the present Treaty shall be referred for decision to the Permanent Court of International Justice.

Chapter IV. Transitory provisions.

ARTICLE 424.

The first meeting of the Conference shall take place in October, 1919. The place and agenda for this meeting shall be as specified in the Annex hereto.

Arrangements for the convening and the organisation of the first meeting of the Conference will be made by the Government designated for the purpose in the said Annex. That Government shall be assisted in the preparation of the documents for submission to the Conference by an International Committee constituted as provided in the said Annex.

The expenses of the first meeting and of all subsequent meetings held before the League of Nations has been able to establish a general fund, other than the expenses of Delegates and their advisers, will be borne by the Members in accordance with the apportionment of the expenses of the International Bureau of the Universal Postal Union.

ARTICLE 425.

Until the League of Nations has been constituted all communications which under the provisions of the foregoing Articles should be addressed to the Secretary-General of the League will be preserved by the Director of the International Labour Office, who will transmit them to the Secretary-General of the League.

ARTICLE 426.

Pending the creation of a Permanent Court of International Justice, disputes which in accordance with this Part of the present Treaty would be submitted to it for decision will be referred to a tribunal of three persons appointed by the Council of the League of Nations.

ANNEX.

FIRST MEETING OF ANNUAL LABOUR CONFERENCE, 1919.

The place of meeting will be Washington.

The Government of the United States of America is requested to convene the Conference.

The International Organising Committee will consist of seven Members, appointed by the United States of America, Great Britain, France, Italy, Japan, Belgium and Switzerland. The Committee may, if it thinks necessary, invite other Members to appoint representatives.

Agenda:

1. Application of principle of the 8-hours day or of the 48-hours week.
2. Question of preventing or providing against unemployment.
3. Women's employment:
   - a) Before and after child-birth, including the question of maternity benefit.
   - b) During the night.
   - c) In unhealthy processes.
4. Employment of children:
   - a) Minimum age of employment.
   - b) During the night.
   - c) In unhealthy processes.
5. Extension and application of the International Conventions adopted at Berne in 1906 on the prohibition of night work for women employed in industry and the prohibition of the use of white phosphorus in the manufacture of matches.

Section II. General principles.

ARTICLE 427.

The High Contracting Parties, recognising that the well-being, physical, moral and intellectual, of industrial wage-earners is of supreme international importance, have framed, in order to further this great end, the permanent machinery provided for in Section I and associated with that of the League of Nations.

They recognise that differences of climate, habits and customs, of economic opportunity and industrial tradition, make strict uniformity in the conditions of labour difficult of immediate attainment. But, holding as they do, that labour should not be regarded merely as an article of commerce, they think that there are methods and principles for regulating labour conditions which all industrial communities should endeavour to apply, so far as their special circumstances will permit.

Among these methods and principles, the following seem to the High Contracting Parties to be of special and urgent importance:

First.—The guiding principle above enunciated that labour should not be regarded merely as a commodity or article of commerce,
